

F.

F A B

F, A consonant generally reckoned by authors, and admitted by Scaliger, among the semi-vowels, and according to that opinion distinguished in the enumeration of the alphabet by a name beginning with a vowel, yet has so far the nature of a mute, that it is easily pronounced before a liquid in the same syllable. It has in English an invariable sound, formed by compression of the whole lips and a forcible breath. Its kindred letter is V, which, in the Islandick alphabet, is only distinguished from it by a point in the body of the letter.

FABACROUS. adj. [fabacrus, Latin.] Having the nature of a bean. Dist.

FABLE. n. f. [fable, French; fabula, Latin.]

1. A feigned story intended to enforce some moral precept. Jorham's fable of the bees is the oldest extant, and as beautiful as any made since. Addison's Spectator.

2. A fiction in general. Triptolemus, so sung the nine, Strew'd plenty from his cart divine; But, spite of all those fable makers, He never sow'd on Almain acres. Dryden.

3. A virtuous or foolish fiction. But refuse profane and old wives fables. Tim. iv. 7.

4. The series or contexture of events which constitute a poem epick or dramatick. The moral is the first business of the poet: this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The first thing to be considered in an epick poem is the fable, which is perfect or imperfect, according as the action, which it relates, is more or less so. Addison's Spectator.

5. A lye. This sense is merely familiar. Addison's Spectator.

TO FA'BLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feign; to write not truth but fiction. That Saturn's sons receiv'd the three-fold reign Of heav'n, of ocean, and deep hell beneath, Old poets mention, fabling. Prior.

Vain now the tales which fabling poets tell, That wav'ring conquest still desires to rove! In Marlbro's camp the goddess knows to dwell. Prior.

2. To tell falsehoods; to lye. He fables not: I hear the enemy. Shakefp. Henry VI.

TO FA'BLE. v. a. To feign; to tell of falsity. We mean to win, Or turn this heav'n itself into the hell Thou fablest. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi. l. 292.

Ladies of th' Heperides, that seem'd Fairer than feign'd of old, or fabl'd since Of fairy damsels met in forest wide, By knights. Milton's Paradise Lost.

FA'BLE. adj. [from fable.] Celebrated in fables. Hall, fabled grotto! hail, Elysian soil! Thou fairest spot of fair Britannia's isle! Tickell.

FA'BLER. n. f. [from fable.] A dealer in fiction; a writer of feigned stories. Tickell.

TO FABRICATE. v. a. [fabricar, Latin.]

1. To build; to construct. 2. To forge; to devise falsely. This sense is retained among the Scottish lawyers; for when they suspect a paper to be forged, they say it is fabricate.

FABRIC'ION. n. f. [from fabricate.] The act of building; construction. This fabricat'on of the human body is the immediate work of a vital principle, that formeth the first rudiments of the human nature. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FA'BRICK. n. f. [fabrica, Latin.]

1. A building; an edifice. There must be an exquisite care to place the columns, set in several stories, most precisely one over another, that so the solid may answer to the solid, and the vacuities to the vacuities, as well for beauty as strength of the fabrick. Watson.

2. Any system or compages of matter; any body formed by the conjunction of dissimilar parts. Still will ye think it strange, That all the parts of this great fabrick change; Quit their old station and primeval frame. Prior.

F A C

TO FA'BRICK. v. a. [from the noun.] To build; to form; to construct. Shew what laws of life The cheefe inhabitants observe, and how Fabrick their mansions. Phillips.

FA'BULIST. n. f. [fabuliste, French.] A writer of fables. Quitting Elop and the fabulists, he copies from Boccace. Coxal.

Our bard's a fabulist, and deals in fiction. Garrick.

FABULOSITY. n. f. [fabulositas, Latin.] Lyingness; fulness of stories; fabulous invention. In their fabulosity they would report, that they had observations for twenty thousand years. Abbot's Description of the World.

FA'BULOUS. adj. [fabulosus, Latin.] Feigned; full of fables, or invented tales. A person terrified with the imagination of spectres, is more reasonable than one who thinks the appearance of spirits fabulous and groundless. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 110.

FA'BULOUSLY. adv. [from fabulous.] In fiction; in a fabulous manner. There are many things fabulously delivered, and are not to be accepted as truths. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 8.

FACE. n. f. [face, French, from facies, Latin.]

1. The visage. The children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses's face shone. Exod. xxxiv. 35.

A man shall see faces, which, if you examine them part by part, you shall never find good; but take them together, are not uncomely. Bacon, Essay 44.

From beauty still to beauty ranging, In ev'ry face I found a dart. Addison's Spectator.

2. Countenance; cast of the features; look; air of the face. Seiz'd and ty'd down to judge, how wretched I! Who can't be silent, and who will not lye: To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace; And to be grave, exceeds all pow'r of face. Pope's Epistles.

3. The surface of any thing. A mist watered the whole face of the ground. Gen. ii. 6.

4. The front or forepart of any thing. The breadth of the face of the house, towards the East, was an hundred cubits. Ezek. xli. 14.

5. Appearance; resemblance. He look'd, and saw the face of things quite chang'd, The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar; All now was turn'd to jollity and game, To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milton's Paradise Lost.

This would produce a new face of things in Europe. Addison's Spectator.

6. Presence; fight. Keep still your former face, and mix again With these lost spirits; run all their mazes with 'em; For such are treasons. Ben. Johnson.

At the first shock, with blood and powder stain'd, Nor heav'n, nor sea, their former face retain'd; Fury and art produce effects so strange, They trouble nature, and her visage change. Waller.

His dialogue has so much the face of probability, that some have mistaken it for a real conference. Baker.

7. Confidence; boldness. Ye shall give her unto Eleazar, and one shall slay her before his face. Numb. xix. 3.

That I of all the gods am least in grace. Dryden's Iliad.

Thinking, by this face, To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage; But 'tis not so. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

How many things are there which a man cannot, with any face or comeliness, say or do himself? A man can scarce allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them: a man cannot sometimes brook to supplicate or beg. Bacon, Essay 28.

You'll find the thing will not be done With ignorance and face alone. Hudibras, p. ii.

You, says the judge to the wolf, have the face to challenge that that which you never lost; and you, says he to the fox, have the confidence to deny that which you have certainly stolen.

L'Estrange, Fable 415.

This is the man that has the face to charge others with false citations.
Tillotson, Preface.

8. Distortion of the face.

Shame itself!
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

FACE to FACE. [An adverbial expression.]

1. When both parties are present.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have his accusers face to face.
Acts xxv. 16.

2. Nakedly; without the interposition of other bodies.
Now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face.
1 Cor. xiii. 12.

TO FACE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To carry a false appearance; to play the hypocrite.

Thou needs must learn to laugh, to lye,
To face, to forge, to scoff, to company. Habberd's Tale.

2. To turn the face; to come in front.

Face about, man; you a soldier, and afraid of the enemy!
Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Then thrice the mounted squadrons ride around
The fire, and Arcite's name they thrice rebound;
Hail and farewell they shouted thrice amain,
Thrice facing to the left, and thence they turn'd again. Dry.

TO FACE. v. a.

1. To meet in front; to oppose with confidence and firmness.

I'll face
This tempest, and deserve the name of king. Dryden.

We get intelligence of the force of the enemy, and cast about for a sufficient number of troops to face the enemy in the field of battle.

They are as loth to see the fires kindled in Smithfield as his lordship; and, at least, as ready to face them under a popish persecution. Swift.

2. To oppose with impudence.

We trapan'd the state, and fac'd it down
With pious and projects of our own. Hudibras, p. iii. c. 2.

Because he walk'd against his will,
He fac'd men down that he stood still. Prior.

3. To stand opposite to.

On one side is the head of the emperor Trajan; the reverse has on it the circus Maximus, and a view of the side of the Palatine mountain that faces it. Addison on Italy.

The temple is described to be square, and the four fronts with open gates, facing the different quarters of the world.

Pope's Temple of Fame.

4. To cover with an additional superficies; to invest with a covering.

The whole fortification of Soleurre is faced with marble.

Where your old bank is hollow, face it with the first spit of earth that you dig out of the ditch. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FACELESS. adj. [from face.] Without a face.

FACEPAINTER. n. f. [face and painter.] A drawer of portraits; a painter who draws from the life.

FACEPAINTING. n. f. [face and painting.] The art of drawing portraits.

Georgione, the cotemporary of Titian, excelled in portraits or facepainting.

FACEY. n. f. [facette, French.] A small surface; a superficies cut into several angles.

Honour that is gained and broken upon another, hath the quickest reflection, like diamonds cut with facets. Bacon.

FACEY. adj. [facetious, French; facetia, Lat.] Gay; cheerful; lively; merry; witty. It is used both of persons and sentiments.

Socrates, informed of some derogating speeches used of him behind his back, made this facetious reply, Let him beat me too when I am absent.

FACEY. adv. [from facetious.] Gayly; cheerfully; wittily; merrily.

FACEY. adv. [from facetious.] Cheerful wit; mirth; gaiety.

FACEY. adj. [facile, French; facilis, Latin.]

1. Easy; not difficult; performable or attainable with little labour.

Then also those poets, which are now counted most hard, will be both facile and pleasant.

To confine the imagination is as facile a performance as the Goteham's design of hedging in the cuckoo. Glenn, Steep.

By dividing it into parts so distinct, the order in which they shall find each disposed, will render the work facile and delightful. Evans's Kalendar.

This may at first seem perplexed with many difficulties, yet many things may be suggested to make it more facile and commodious.

2. Easily surmountable; easily conquerable.

3. Easy of access or converse; not haughty; not supercilious; not austere.

I meant she should be courteous, facile, sweet,
Hating that solemn vice of greatness, pride;
I meant each softest virtue there should meet,
Fit in that softer bosom to reside. Ben. Johnson's Epigrams.

Raphael now, to Adam's doubt propos'd, Benevolent and facile, thus reply'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. Pliant; flexible; easily persuaded to good or bad; ductile to a fault.

Too facile then, thou did'st not much gain say;
Nay did'st permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milt. P. Left.

Since Adam and his facile comfort Eve
Lost Paradise, deceiv'd by me. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

Some men are of that facile temper, that they are wrought upon by every object they converse with, whom any affectionate discourse, or serious sermon, or any notable accident, shall put into a fit of religion, which yet usually lasts no longer than till somewhat else comes in their way.

TO FACILITATE. v. a. [facilitate, French.] To make easy; to free from difficulty; to clear from impediments.

Choice of the likeliest and best prepared metal for the version will facilitate the work.

They renewed their assault two or three days together, and planted cannon to facilitate their passage, which did little hurt; but they still lost many men in the attempt. Clarendon, b. viii.

Though perspective cannot be called a certain rule, or a finishing of the picture, yet it is a great succour and relief to art, and facilitates the means of execution. Dryden's Duplein.

What produceth a due quantity of animal spirits, necessarily facilitates the animal and natural motions. Arbutnot on Diet.

A war on the side of Italy would cause a great diversion of the French forces, and facilitate the progress of our arms in Spain. Swift.

FACILITY. n. f. [facilitas, French; facilitas, Latin.]

1. easiness to be performed; freedom from difficulty.

Yet reason faith, reason should have ability
To hold these worldly things in such proportion,
As let them come or go with even facility. Sidney, b. ii.

Piety could not be diverted from a more commodious business by any motives of profit or facility. Raleigh.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles, both in point of religion and in point of honour; though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon's Holy War.

2. Readiness in performing; dexterity.

They who have studied have not only learned many excellent things, but also have acquired a great facility of profiting themselves by reading good authors.

The facility which we get of doing things, by a custom of doing, makes them often pass in us without our notice. Locke.

3. Vicious ductility; easiness to be persuaded to good or bad; to ready compliance.

Facility is worse than bribery; for bribes come now and then: but if importunity or idle respects lead a man, he shall never be without.

'Tis a great error to take facility for good-nature; tenderness, without discretion, is no better than a more pardonable folly. L'Estrange, Fable 30.

4. easiness of access; complaisance; condescension; affability.

He opens and yields himself to the man of business with difficulty and reluctance; but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility, and all the meeting readiness of appetite and desire. South's Sermons.

FACINEROUS. adj. [corrupted by Shakespeare from facinorosus; facinus, facinoris, Latin.] Wicked; facinorous.

'Tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and tedious of it; and he's of a most facinorous spirit that will not acknowledge it. Shakespeare, All's well that ends well.

FA'cing. n. f. [from To face.] An ornamental covering; that which is put on the outside of any thing by way of decoration.

These offices and dignities were but the facings and fringes of his greatness.

FACINOROUS. adj. [facinora, Latin.] Wicked; atrocious; detestably bad.

FACINOROUSNESS. n. f. [from facinorous.] Wickedness in a high degree.

FACT. n. f. [factum, Latin.]

1. A thing done; an effect produced; something not barely supposed or suspected, but really done.

In matter of fact there is some credit to be given to the testimony of man; but not in matter of opinion and judgement: we see the contrary both acknowledged and universally practised also throughout the world.

As men are not to mistake the causes of these operations, so much less are they to mistake the fact or effect, and rashly to take that for done which is not done. Bacon's Nat. History.

Matter of fact breaks out and blazes with too great evidence to be denied.

2. Reality; not supposition; not speculation.

Those

FAC

FAC

Those effects which are wrought by the percussion of the sense, and by things in fact, are produced likewise in some degree by the imagination: therefore if a man see another eat four or acid things, which set the teeth on edge, that object tainteth the imagination. Bacon's Natural History, No. 795.

If this were true in fact, I do not see any colour for such a conclusion.

Manifold sins, though in speculation they may be separable from war, in reality and fact never fail to attend it. Smalbridge.

3. Action; deed.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause:
Howe'er the doubtful fact is understood,
'Tis love of honour and his country's good;
The consul, not the father, sheds the blood. Dryden.

FACTION. n. f. [faction, French; factio, Latin.]

1. A party in a state.

The queen is valued thirty thousand strong;
If the hath time to breathe, he will afford
Her faction will be full as strong as ours. Shakespeare, Henry VI.

He has been known to commit outrages,
And cherish factions. Shakespeare's Timon.

Their hatred went so far, that by one of Simon's faction murders were committed.

By the weight of reason I should counterpoise the overbalancings of any factions. Mac. iv. 9.

2. Tumult; discord; dissension.

They remained at Newbery in great faction among themselves. Clarendon.

FACTIONARY. n. f. [factionnaire, French.] One of a faction; a party man. A word not in use.

Pr'ythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius; always factionary of the party of your general. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

FACTION. adj. [factious, French.]

1. Given to faction; loud and violent in a party; publickly dissension; addicted to form parties and raise publick disturbances.

He is a traitor; let him to the Tower,
And crop away that factious pate of his. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Be factious for redress of all these griefs. Shakespeare, Jul. Caesar.

2. Proceeding from publick dissensions; tending to publick discord.

Grey-headed men and graves, with warriors mix'd,
Assemble; and harangues are heard; but soon
In factious opposition. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 664.

Factious tumults overbore the freedom and honour of the two houses. King Charles.

Why these factious quarrels, controversies, and battles amongst themselves, when they were all united in the same design?

The factiousness of the party of your general. Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

FACTION. adv. [from factious.] In a manner criminally dissensionous or tumultuous.

I intended not only to oblige my friends, but mine enemies also; exceeding even the desires of those that were factiously discontented.

FACTION. n. f. [from factious.] Inclination to publick dissension; violent clamorousness for a party.

FACTION. adj. [factitious, Latin.] Made by art, in opposition to what is made by nature.

In the making and distilling of soap, by one degree of fire the salt, the water, and the oil or grease, whereof that factitious concrete is made up, being boiled up together, are easily brought to incorporate.

Hardness wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant all other stones, being exalted to that degree that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it; the factitious stones of chymists, in imitation, being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist.

FACTOR. n. f. [facteur, French; factor, Latin.]

1. An agent for another; one who transacts business for another. Commonly a substitute in mercantile affairs.

Take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land;
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shakespeare, Richard III.

Percy is but my factor, good my lord,
'T'engross up glorious deeds on my behalf. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

You all three,
The senators alone of this great world,
Chief factors for the gods. Shakespeare, Anthony and Cleopatra.

We agreed that I should send up an English factor, that whatsoever the island could yield should be delivered at a reasonable rate.

It was conceived that the Scots had good intelligence, having some factors doublets at this mart, albeit they did not openly trade.

Vile arts and restless endeavours are used by some fly and venomous factors for the old republican cause. South's Sermons.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged, by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sorts, sects and persuasions, into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules and orders of our church, and that therefore they ought to be taken away.

Forc'd into exile from his rightful throne,
He made all countries where he came his own;
And viewing monarchs secret arts of sway,
A royal factor for their kingdoms lay. Dryden.

2. [In arithmetic.] The multiplicator and multiplicand. Harris.

FACTORY. n. f. [from factor.]

1. A house or district inhabited by traders in a distant country.

2. The traders embodied in one place.

FACTOTUM. n. f. [factotum, Latin.] It is used likewise in burlesque French. A servant employed alike in all kinds of business: as Scrub in the Stratagem.

FACTURE. n. f. [French.] The act or manner of making any thing.

FACTILITY. n. f. [facilitas, French; facultas, Latin.]

1. The power of doing any thing; ability whether corporal or intellectual.

There is no kind of faculty or power in man, or any creature, which can rightly perform the functions allotted to it without perpetual aid and concurrence of that supreme cause of all things. Hooker, b. i. f. 8.

Orators may grieve; for in their sides,
Rather than heads, their faculty abides. Denham.

Reason in man supplies the defect of other faculties where-in we are inferior to beasts, and what we cannot compass by force we bring about by stratagem. L'Estrange.

2. Powers of the mind, imagination, reason, memory.

For well I understand in the prime end
Of nature, her the inferior; in the mind

In the ordinary way of speaking, the understanding and will are two faculties of the mind. Locke.

Neither did our Saviour think it necessary to explain to us the nature of God, because it would be impossible, without bestowing on us other faculties than we possess at present. Swift.

3. [In physics.] A power or ability to perform any action natural, vital, and animal: by the first they understand that by which the body is nourished and augmented, or another like it generated: the vital faculty is that by which life is preserved, and the ordinary functions of the body performed; and the animal faculty is what conducts the operations of the mind.

4. A knack; habitual excellence; dexterity.

He had none of those faculties, which the other had, of reconciling men to him. Clarendon, b. viii.

A sober man would have wondered how our author found out monarchical absolute power in that text, had he not had an exceeding good faculty to find it himself where he could not shew it others. Locke.

He had an excellent faculty in preaching, if he were not too refined. Swift.

5. Quality; disposition or habit of good or ill.

I'm traduc'd by tongues which neither know
My faculties nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

6. Power; authority.

This Duncan
Hath born his faculties so meek, hath been
So clear in his great office, that his virtues
Will plead like angels. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

7. Privilege; right to do any thing.

Law hath set down to what persons, in what causes, with what circumstances, almost every faculty or favour shall be granted. Hooker, b. v.

8. Faculty, in an university, denotes the masters and professors of the several sciences: as, a meeting of the faculty or faculties.

FACUND. adj. [facundus, Latin.] Eloquent. Diſt.

TO FAD'DLE. v. n. [corrupted from To fiddle, or toy with the fingers.] To trifle; to toy; to play.

TO FADE. v. n. [fade, French, inlaid, languid.]

1. To tend from greater to less vigour; to grow weak; to languish.

2. To tend from a brighter to a weaker colour.

The greenness of a leaf ought to pass for apparent, because soon fading into a yellow, it scarce lasts at all, in comparison of the greenness of an emerald. Boyle on Colours.

The spots in this stone are of the same colour throughout, even to the very edges; there being an immediate transition from white to black, and the colours not fading or declining gradually.

3. To wither: as a vegetable.

Ye shall be as an oak whose leaf fadeth, and as a garden that hath no water. Is. i. 30.

4. To die away gradually; to vanish; to be worn out.

Where either through the temper of the body, or some other default, the memory is very weak, ideas in the mind quickly fade. Locke.

The stars shall fade away, the sun himself
Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years. Addis. Cato.

5. To

F A I

5. To be naturally not durable; to be transient; easily to lose vigour or beauty.
The glorious beauty on the head of the fat valley shall be a fading flower.
The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours, and, if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear. Locke.
Narcissus' change, to the vain virgin shows
Who trusts to beauty, trusts the fading role. Gay's Fan.
To FADE. v. a. To wear away; to reduce to languor; to deprive of freshness or vigour; to wither.
This is a man old, wrinkled, faded, withered;
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is. Shakespeare.
His palms, though under weights they did not stand, Still thriv'd; no Winter could his laurels fade. Dryden.
Reflex anxiety, forlorn despair,
And all the faded family of care. Certhi's Discourse.
To FADGE. v. n. [Gegregab, Saxon; fagen, German.]
1. To suit; to fit; to have one part consistent with another.
How will this fadge? my master loves her dearly,
And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me. Shakespeare.
2. To agree; not to quarrel; to live in amity.
When they thriv'd they never fadg'd,
But only by the cars engag'd;
Like dogs that snarl about a bone,
And play together when they've none. Hudibras, p. iii.
3. To succeed; to hit.
The fox had a fetch; and when he saw it would not fadge, away goes he presently. L'Estrange's Fables.
4. This is a mean word not now used, unless perhaps in ludicrous and low compositions.
FAGGERS. n. f. [Latin.] Excrements; but often used to express the ingredients and feelings after distillation and infusion. Quincy.
To FAG. v. a. [fagis, Latin.] To grow weary; to faint with weariness.
Crichton witheld his force till the Italian begun to fag, and then brought him to the ground. Mackenzie's Lives.
FAGG'ING. n. f. [from fag and end.]
1. The end of a web of cloth, generally made of coarser materials.
2. The refuse or meaner part of any thing.
In the world's fagend
A nation lies. Farshaw.
When they are the worst of their way, and fixt in the fagend of business, they are apt to look not kindly upon those who go before them. Cutler of Envy.
FAGOT. n. f. [fagot, Welsh and Armoric; fagot, French.]
1. A bundle of sticks bound together for the fire.
About the pile of fagots, sticks and hay,
The bellows raised the newly kindled flame. Fairfax, b. ii.
Spare for no fagots, let there be enow;
Place pitchy barrels on the fatal stake. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
Mitres or fagots have been the rewards of different persons, according as they pronounced these consecrated syllables or not. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
2. A bundle of sticks for any purpose.
The black prince filled a ditch with fagots as successfully as the generals of our times do it with falcons. Addis, Spectator.
3. A soldier numbered in the muster-roll, but not really existing.
To FAGOT. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie up; to bundle together.
He was too warm on picking work to dwell,
But fagot his notions as they fell,
And if they rhym'd and rattled, all was well. Dryden.
To FAILE. v. n. [failler, French; faeln, Welsh. Pezron.]
1. To be deficient; to cease from former plenty; to fall short; not to be equal to demand or use.
The waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up. Job xiv. 11.
Where the credit and money fail, barter alone must do. Locke.
2. To cease; to cease to be produced.
Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men. Pf. xii. 1.
Let there not fail from the house of Joab one that hath an issue. 2 Sa. iii. 29.
3. To cease; to perish; to be lost.
For Titan, by the mighty loss dismay'd,
Among the heavens th' immortal fact display'd,
Left the remembrance of his grief should fail. Addison.
4. To die; to lose life.
Had the king in his last sickness fail'd,
Their heads should have gone off. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
Both he that helpeth shall fall, and he that is holpen shall fall down, and they all shall fail together. If. xxxi. 3.
5. To sink; to be torn down; to languish through resistance.
Neither will I be always wroth; for the spirit should fail before me. If. lvii. 16.

F A I

6. To decay; to decline; to languish.
Mine eyes fail. Pf. cxix. 82.
I perceive
Thy mortal sight to fail: objects divine Must needs impair and weary human sense. Milt. Par. Lost.
7. To mis; not to produce its effect.
Consider of deformity not as a sign which is deceivable, but as a cause which seldom fails of the effect. Bacon's Essays.
This jest was suit of th' other house's making. Dryden.
And, five times try'd, has never fail'd of taking.

Man falls upon every thing that comes in his way; not a berry or a mulberry can escape him. Addison's Spectator.
To get rid of fools and scoundrels was one part of my design in falling upon these authors. Pope to Swift.
63. To FALL upon. To attempt.
I do not intend to fall upon nice philosophical disquisitions about the nature of time. Holder on Time.
64. To FALL upon. To rush against.
At the same time that the storm bears upon the whole species, we are falling foul upon one another. Addison's Spectator.
This is one of those general words of which it is very difficult to ascertain or detail the full signification. It retains in most of its senses some part of its primitive meaning, and implies either literally or figuratively descent, violence, or suddenness. In many of its senses it is opposed to rise; but in others has no counterpart, or correlative.
- To FALL, v. a.
1. To drop; to let fall.
To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword, despair and die. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
If that the earth could teem with woman's tears,
Each drop, the falls, would prove a crocodile. Shakespeare's Othello.
Draw together;
And when I rear my hand, do you the like,
To fall it on Gonzalo. Shakespeare's Tempest.
I am willing to fall this argument: 'tis free for every man to write or not to write in verse, as he thinks it is or is not his talent, or as he imagines the audience will receive it. Dryden.
2. To sink; to deprecate.
If a man would endeavour to raise or fall his voice still by half notes, like the stops of a lute, or by whole notes alone without halts, as far as an eight, he will not be able to frame his voice unto it. Bacon's Natural History.
3. To diminish in value; to let sink in price.
Upon lessening interest to four per cent. you fall the price of your native commodities, or lessen your trade, or else prevent not the high use. Locke.
4. To yeave; to bring forth.
They then conceiving, did in yeaving time
Fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's. Shakespeare's FALLOWS, n. f. (from the verb.)
1. The act of dropping from on high.
High o'er their heads a mould ring rock is plac'd,
That promises a fall, and shakes at ev'ry blast. Dryden's En.
2. The act of tumbling from an erect posture.
I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again, and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again, and caught it again; or whether his fall enraged him, or how it was, he did so let his teeth, and did tear it. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. The

F A L

3. The violence suffered in dropping from on high.
My son coming into his marriage-chamber, happened to have a fall, and died. 2 Esdr. x. 48.
Spirit of wine, mingled with common water, if the first fall be broken, by means of a sop, or otherwise, stayeth above; and if once mingled, it severeth not again, as oil doth. Bacon's Phys. Rem.
A fever or fall may take away my reason. Locke.
Some were hurt with the falls they got by leaping upon the ground. Gulliver's Travels.
4. Death; overthrow; destruction incurred.
Wail his fall,
Whom I myself struck down. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Our fathers were given to the sword, and for a spoil, and had a great fall before our enemies. Judith viii. 9.
I will begin to pray for myself and for them; for I see the falls of us that dwell in the land. 2 Esdr. viii. 17.
5. Ruin; dissolution.
Paul's, the late theme of such a muse, whose flight
Has bravely reach'd and soar'd above thy height;
Now that thou stand, though sword, or time, or fire,
Or zeal more fierce than they, thy fall conspire. Denham.
6. Downfall; loss of greatness; declension from eminence; degradation; state of being deposted from a high station; plunge from happiness or greatness into misery or meanness.
Her memory served as an accuser of her change, and her own handwriting was there to bear testimony against her fall. Sidney, b. ii.
Perhaps thou talk'st of me, and do'st enquire
Of my restraint; why here I live alone;
And pitiest this my miserable fall. Daniel's Civil War.
He, careless now of interest, fame, or fate,
Perhaps forgets that Oxford e'er was great;
Or deeming meanest what we greatest call,
Beholds thee glorious only in thy fall. Pope to Parnell.
7. Declension of greatness, power, or dominion.
Till the empire came to be settled in Charles the Great, the fall of the Romans huge dominion concurring with other universal evils, caused those times to be days of much affliction and trouble throughout the world. Hooker, b. vi. f. 41.
8. Diminution; decrease of price.
That the improvement of Ireland is the principal cause why our lands in purchase rise not, as naturally they should, with the fall of our interest, appears evidently from the effect the fall of interest hath had upon houses in London. Child.
9. Declension or diminution of sound; cadence; close of music.
That strain again; it had a dying fall:
O, it came o'er my ear, like the sweet south
That breathes upon a bank of violets, Stealing and giving odours. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
How sweetly did they float upon the wings
Of silence, through the empty-vaulted night;
At ev'ry fall smoothing the raven down
Of darkness till it smil'd! Milton.
10. Declivity; steep descent.
Waters when beat upon the shore, or straitened, as the falls of bridges, or dashed against themselves by winds, give a roaring noise. Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 115.
11. Cataract; cascade; rush of water down a steep place.
There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals. Shakespeare's As You Like It.
A whistling wind, or a melodious noise of birds among the spreading branches, or a pleasing fall of water running violently, these things made them to swoon for fear. Wisd. xvii.
Down through the crannies of the living walls
The crystal streams descend in murmur falls. Dryden's Virg.
The swain, in barren deserts, with surprize
Sees lilies spring, and sudden verdure rise;
And starts, amidst the thrifty wilds, to hear
New falls of water murmur in his ear. Pope's Messiah.
Now under hanging mountains,
Beside the falls of fountains,
He makes his moan;
And calls her ghost.
For ever, ever, ever lost! Pope's St. Cecilia.
12. The outlet of a current into any other water.
Before the fall of the Po into the gulph, it receives into its channel the most considerable rivers of Piedmont, Milan, and the rest of Lombardy. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
13. Autumn; the fall of the leaf; the time when the leaves drop from the trees.
What crowds of patients the town-doctor kills,
Or how last fall he rais'd the weekly bills. Dryden's Juven.
Upon a great fall of rain the current carried away a huge heap of apples. L'Estrange.
14. The act of felling or cutting down: as, the fall of timber.
- FALLACIOUS, adj. [fallax, Latin; fallacious, French.]

F A L

1. Producing mistake; sophistical. It is never used of men, but of writings, propositions, or things.
They believed and assented to things neither evident nor certain, nor yet so much as probable, but actually false and fallacious; such as were the absurd doctrines and stories of their rabbies. South's Sermons.
2. Deceitful; mocking expectation.
Soon as the force of that fallacious fruit
That with exhilarating vapour bland
About their spirits had play'd, and inmost powers
Made err, was now exhal'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
False philosophy inspires Fallacious hope. Milton.
- FALLACIOUSLY, adv. [from fallacious.] Sophistically; with purpose to deceive; with unfound reasoning
We shall so far encourage contradiction, as to promise not to oppose any pen that shall fallaciously refute us. Brown.
We have seen how fallaciously the author has stated the cause, by supposing that nothing but unlimited mercy, or unlimited punishment, are the methods that can be made use of. Addison's FALACIOUSNESS, n. f. (from fallacious.) Tendency to deceive; inconclusiveness.
- FALLACY, n. f. [fallacia, Latin; fallace, French.] Sophism; logical artifice; deceit; deceitful argument; delusive mode of ratiocination.
Most princes make themselves another thing from the people by a fallacy of argument; thinking themselves most kings when the subject is most basely subjected. Sidney, b. iii.
Until I know this sure uncertainty,
I'll entertain the favour'd fallacy. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.
It were a mere fallacy, and mistaking to ascribe that to the force of imagination upon another body, which is but the force of imagination upon the proper body. Bacon's Na. Hist.
All men, who can see an inch before them, may easily detect gross fallacies. Dryden.
- FALLIBILITY, n. f. [from fallible.] Liableness to be deceived; uncertainty; possibility of error.
There is a great deal of fallibility in the testimony of men; yet there are some things we may be almost as certain of as that the sun shines, or that five twenties make an hundred. Watts's Logic.
- FALLIBLE, adj. [fal's, Latin.] Liable to error; such as may be deceived.
Do not falsify your resolution with hopes that are fallible: to-morrow you must die. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
He that creates to himself thousands of little hopes, uncertain in the promise, fallible in the event, and depending upon a thousand circumstances, shall often fail in his expectations. Taylor's Rule of living boys.
- Our intellectual or rational powers need some assistance, because they are so frail and fallible in the present state. Watts.
- FALLING, n. f. [from fall.] Indentings opposed to prominence.
It shows the nose and eyebrows, with the several prominences, and fallings in of the features, much more distinctly than any other kind of figure. Addison on ancient Medals.
- FALLINGSICKNESS, n. f. [fall and sickness.] The epilepsy; a disease in which the patient is without any warning deprived at once of his senses, and falls down.
Did Caesar swoon?—He fell down in the market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechless—He hath the fallingsickness. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
- The dogfisher is good against the fallingsickness. Walton.
- FALLOW, adj. [falepe, Saxon.]
1. Pale red, or pale yellow.
How does your fallow greyhound, sir?
I heard say, he was out-run at Cottesale. Shakespeare's King Lear.
The king, who was excessively affected to hunting, had a great desire to make a great park for red as well as fallow deer between Richmond and Hampton-court. Clarendon.
2. Unfowed; left to rest after the years of tillage. [Supposed to be so called from the colour of naked ground.]
The ridges of the fallow field lay traversed, so as the English must cross them in presenting the charge. Hayward.
3. Plowed; but not fowed; plowed as prepared for a second aration.
Her predecessors, in their course of government, did but sometimes cast up the ground; and so leaving it fallow, it became quickly overgrown with weeds. Hewel's Vocal Forest.
4. Unplowed; uncultivated.
Her fallow lets
The danel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Doth root upon. Shakespeare's Henry V.
5. Unoccupied; neglected.
Shall saints in civil bloodshed wallow
Of saints, and let the cause lie fallow. Hudibras p. 1. c. 2.
- FALLOW, n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. Ground plowed in order to be plowed again.
The plowing of fallows is a very great benefit to land. Mortimer's Husbandry.
They are the best ploughs to plow up Summer fallow with. Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. Ground

FAL

2. Ground lying at rest.
Within an ancient forest's ample verge,
There stands a lonely but a healthful dwelling,
Built for convenience, and the use of life;
Around it fallows, meads, and pastures fair,
A little garden, and a limpid brook.
By nature's own contrivance seems dispos'd. Ross's J. Shore.
To FALLOW. v. n. To plow in order to a second plowing.
Begin to plow up fallows: this first fallowing ought to be very shallow. Mortimer's Husbandry.
But the ground ought to be well plowed and fallowed the Summer before. Mortimer.
FALLOWNESS. n. f. [from fallow.] Barrenness; an exemption from bearing fruit.
Like one, who, in her third widowhood, doth profess Herself a nun, ty'd to retiredness. Donne.
S' affects my muse now a chaste fallowness.
FALSE. adj. [falsus, Latin; faux, fausse, French.]
1. Not morally true; expressing that which is not thought.
Innocence shall make Fals accusation bluish, and tyrannous. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
I tremble at patience. L'Estrange.
There are false witnesses among men.
2. Not physically true; conceiving that which does not exist.
For how can that be false, which ev'ry tongue
Or ev'ry mortal man affirms for true?
Which truth hath in all ages been so strong,
As loadstone like, all hearts it ever drew. Davies.
A false is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture:
the person and action of a false are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
3. Suppositious; succedaneous.
fill it with earth above the canals. Bacon's Nat. History.
4. Deceiving expectation.
The heart of man looks fair to the eye; but when we come to lay any weight upon't, the ground is false under us.
L'Estrange, Fable 54.
5. Not agreeable to rule, or propriety.
Now, fy upon my false French; by mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate. Shakespeare's Henry V.
6. Not honest; not just.
What thou would'st highly,
That thou would'st holily; would'st not play false,
And yet would'st wrongly win. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The true prince may, for recreation sake, prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the times want countenance.
Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.
Men are sponges, which, to pour out, receive;
Who know false play, rather than lose, deceive. Donne.
7. Treacherous; perfidious; traitorous; deceitful; hollow.
I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of ev'ry sin
That has a name. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Fals of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand. Shakespeare.
A man to whom he had committed the trust of his person, in making him his chamberlain; this man, no ways disgraced, no ways discontent, no ways put in fear, turns false unto him. Bacon's Henry VII.
So hast thou cheated Thebes with a wife,
Against thy vow, returning to beguile
Under a borrow'd name; as false to me, Dryden.
So false thou art to him who set thee free.
The ladies will make a numerous party against him, for being false to love in forsaking Dido. Dryd. Virg. Æn. Ded.
8. Counterfeit; hypocritical; not real.
Fals tears true pity moves: the king commands
To loose his tethers. Dryden's Æn. b. ii.
9. In all these senses true is the word opposed.
To FALSE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To violate by failure of veracity.
Is't not enough that to this lady mild,
Thou falsest half thy faith with perjury. Fairy Queen, b. i.
2. To deceive.
Fair seemly pleasure each to other makes,
With goodly purposes there as they sit;
And in his falsest fancy he, her takes
To be the fairest wight that lived yet. Fairy Queen, b. i.
3. To defeat; to balk; to shift; to evade, as fencers commonly do.
But, Guyon, in the heat of all his strife,
Was wary wife, and closely did await Advantage, whilst his foe did rage most rife;
Sometimes athwart, sometimes he strook him thrait,
And falsed oft his blows t'illude him with such bait. F. Q.
4. This word is now out of use.
FALSEHEARTED. adj. [fals and heart.]
1. Treacherous; perfidious; deceitful; hollow.
The traitorous or treacherous, who have misled others, are severely punished; and the neutrals and falsehearted friends

- and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, he noted. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
FALSEHOOD. n. f. [from fals.]
1. Want of truth; want of veracity.
All deception in the course of life is, indeed, nothing else but a lie reduced to practice, and falsehood passing from words to things. South's Sermons.
2. Want of honesty; treachery; deceitfulness; perfidy.
3. A lie; a false assertion.
FALSELY. adv. [from fals.]
1. Contrarily to truth; not truly.
Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing profelytes and religion. Gov. of Tongue.
Already were the Belgians on our coast,
Whole fleet more mighty every day became
By late success, which they did falsely boast,
And now by first appearing seem'd to claim. Dryd. Ann. Mir.
Tell him, I did in vain his brother move,
And yet he falsely said he was in love;
Falsely; for had he truly lov'd, at least
He would have giv'n one day to my request. Dryd. Aureng.
Such as are treated ill, and upbraided falsely, find out an intimate friend that will hear their complaints, and endeavour to foother their secret resentments. Addison's Spectator.
2. Erroneously; by mistake.
He knows that to be inconvenient which we falsely think convenient for us. Smollett's Sermons.
3. Perfidiously; treacherously; deceitfully.
FALSENESS. n. f. [from fals.]
1. Contrariety to truth.
2. Want of veracity; violation of promise.
Suppose the reverse of virtue were solemnly enacted, and the practice of fraud and rapine, and perjury and falseness to a man's word, and all vice were established by a law, would that which we now call vice gain the reputation of virtue, and that which we now call virtue grow odious to human nature? Tillotson's Sermon 3.
3. Duplicity; deceit; double dealing.
Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity, and all false- ness or foulness of intentions, especially to perjured devotion. Fleming's Fundamentals.
4. Treachery; perfidy; traitorousness.
King Richard might create a perfect guefs,
That great Northumberland, then false to him,
Would of that seed grow to a greater falseness. Shak. H. IV.
The prince is in no danger of being betrayed by the false- ness, or cheated by the avarice of such a servant. Rogers.
FALSER. n. f. [from fals.] A deceiver; an hypocrite. Now obsolete.
Such end had the kid; for he would weaned be
Of craft coloured with simplicity;
And such end, pardie, does all them remain,
That of such falsers friendship been fain. Spenser's Pastoral.
FALSIFIABLE. adv. [from falsify.] Liable to be counter-feited or corrupted.
FALSIFICATION. n. f. [falsification, French, from falsify.]
1. The act of counterfeiting any thing so as to make it appear what it is not.
Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falsification of the words, witting-ly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not, is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify Divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous. Hooker, b. iii. f. 5.
To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falsifications; except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits divine honour. Bacon.
2. Confutation.
The poet invents this fiction to prevent posterity from searching after this life, and to preserve his story from detection of falsification. Notes on the Odyssey.
FALSIFIER. n. f. [from falsify.]
1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not.
It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falsifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure some one proof, others another, but none of them all proofs. Boyle.
2. A liar; one that contrives falsehoods.
Boasters are naturally falsifiers, and the people, of all others, that put their flims the worst together. L'Estrange's Fables.
To FALSIFY. v. a. [falsifier, French.]
1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce something for that which in reality it is not.
We cannot excuse that church, which either through corrupt translations of Scriptures, delivereth, instead of divine speeches, any thing repugnant unto that which God speaketh; or, through falsified additions, propoeth that to the people of God as scripture which is in truth no Scripture.
Hooker, b. v. f. 19.
The Irish bards use to forge and falsify every thing as they list, to please or displease any man. Spenser on Ireland.
2. To

FAM

2. To confute; to prove false.
Our Saviour's prophecy stands good in the destruction of the temple, and the dissolution of the Jewish economy, when Jews and Pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to baffle and falsify the prediction. Addison.
3. To violate; to break by falshood.
It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which is in thy power to thum, to make him live to see thy faith falsified, and his bed defiled. Sidney, b. ii.
He suddenly falsified his faith, and villainously flew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself, mistrusting nothing less than the falshood of the pyrate. Koeller's History of the Turks.
This superadds treachery to all the other pestilent ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falsifying the most important trait. Decay of Piety.
4. To pierce; to run through.
His crest is rask'd away, his ample shield
Is falsify'd, and round with jav'ins fill'd. Dryden's En.
Of this word Mr. Dryden writes thus. My friends quarrelled at the word falsified, as an innovation in our language.
The fact is confessed; for I remember not to have read it in any English author; though perhaps it may be found in Spen- ser's Fairy Queen. But suppose it be not there: why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polished language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, si græcæ fæde cadant, especially when other words are joined with them which explain the sense. I use the word falsified, in this place, to mean that the shield of Turnus was not of proof against the spears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, makes my meaning plain:
Ma si l'Ulterio d'anni era perfetto,
Che mai poter fallarlo in nessun conto. Ariosto, cant. xxvi.
*Fals*er cannot otherwise be turned than by falsified; for his shield was falsified, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with saying his shield was pierced, and bored, and stuck with javelins. Dryden.
Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturalise the new signification, which I have never seen copied, except once by some obscure nameless writer, and which indeed deserves not to be received.
To FALSIFY. v. n. To tell lies; to violate truth.
This point have we gained, that it is absolutely and universally unlawful to lie and falsify. South's Sermons.
FALSITY. n. f. [falsitas, Latin.]
1. Falshood; contrariety to truth.
Neither are they able to break through those errors, wherein they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatever love is owing unto God's truth. Hooker, b. v. f. 49.
Can you on him such falsities obtrude?
And as a mortal the most wife delude? Sandys's Paraphrase.
Probability does not properly make any alteration, either in the truth or falsity of things; but only imports a different degree of their clearness or appearance to the understanding.
South's Sermons.
2. A lie; an error; a false assertion or position.
That Danubius ariseth from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the North, are opinions truly charged on Aristotle by the restorer of Epicurus, and all easily confutable falsities. Glaro, Scipj. c. 20.
To FALTER. v. n. [faltar, to be wanting, Spanish; vaultur- tur, a flammerer, Icelandic, which is probably a word from the same radical.]
1. To hesitate in the utterance of words.
With faltering tongue, and trembling ev'ry vein,
Tell on, quoth she. Fairy Queen, b. i.
The pale affiants on each other star'd,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd;
The still-born founts upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the faltering tongue. Dryden.
He changes, gods! and falters at the question:
His fears, his words, his looks declare him guilty. Smith.
2. To fail in any act of the body.
This earth shall have a feeling; and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king Shall falter under foul rebellious arms. Shakel. Richard II.
3. To fail in any act of the understanding.
How far ideots are concerned in the want or weakness of any or all faculties, an exact observation of their several ways of faltering would discover. Locke.
To FALTER. v. a. To silt; to cleanse. This word seems to be merely ruffick or provincial.
Barley for malt must be bold, dry, sweet, and clean faltered from foulness, seeds and oats. Mortimer's Husbandry.
FALTERINGLY. adv. [from falter.] With hesitation; with difficulty; with feebleness.
To FAMBLE. v. a. [fambler, Danish.] To hesitate in the speech. This word I find only in Shinner.
FAME. n. f. [fama, Latin; φῆμα, Dorick.]
1. Celebrity; renown.

FAM

- The house to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnifical, of fame and of glory throughout all countries. Chræ. xxii. 5.
The desire of fame will not suffer endowments to lie useless. Addison's Spectator.
What is this fame, for which we thoughts employ,
The owner's wife, which other men enjoy? Pope.
2. Report; rumour.
We have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt. Jof. ix. 9.
I shall shew what are true fames. Bacon.
FAMED. adj. [from fame.] Renowned; celebrated; much talked of.
He is fam'd for mildness, peace and prayer. Shak. H. VI.
He purposes to seek the Clarian god,
Avoiding Delphos, his more fam'd abode, Dryden.
Since Phlegyan robbers made unsafe the road.
Aristides was an Athenian philosopher, famed for his learning and wisdom; but converted to Christianity. Addison.
FAMELESS. adj. [from fame.] Without fame; without renown.
Then let me, fameless, love the fields and woods,
The fruitful water'd vales and running floods. May's Virgil.
FAMILIAR. adj. [familiaris, Latin.]
1. Domestic; relating to a family. Pope.
They range familiar to the dome.
2. Affable; not formal; easy in conversation.
Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar. Shak. Hamlet.
Be not too familiar with Poin; for he misuses thy favours
so much, that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Shak.
3. Unceremonious; free, as among persons long acquainted.
Kalandar freight thought he saw his niece Parthenia, and was about in such familiar sort to have spoken unto her; but she, in grave and honourable manner, gave him to understand that he was mistaken. Sidney.
4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice or custom.
I see not how the Scripture could be possibly made familiar unto all, unless far more should be read in the people's hearing than by a sermon can be opened. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.
Let us chuse such limbs of noble counsel,
That the great body of our state may go
In equal rank with the best govern'd nation;
That war, or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakel. Henry IV.
Our sweet
Recess, and only consolation left Familiar to our eyes! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
One idea which is familiar to the mind, connected with others which are new and strange, will bring those new ideas into easy remembrance. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
5. Well acquainted with; accustomed; habituated by custom.
Or chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd
In temper and in nature, will receive Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain. Milton's P. Lost.
The senses at first let in particular ideas; and the mind, by degrees, growing familiar with some of them, they are lodged in the memory, and names got to them. Locke.
He was amazed how so impotent and groveling an insect as I could entertain such inhuman ideas, and in so familiar a manner, as to appear wholly unmoved at all the scenes of blood and desolation. Gulliver's Travels.
Patient permit the sadly-pleasing strain;
Familiar now with grief, your tears refrain. Pope's On Idleness.
6. Common; frequent.
To a wrong hypothesis, may be reduced the errors that may be occasioned by a true hypothesis, but not rightly understood: there is nothing more familiar than this. Locke.
7. Easy; unconstrained.
He unreins
His muse, and sports in loose familiar strains. Addison.
8. Too nearly acquainted.
A poor man found a priest familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad, and could not prove it, the priest fue him for defamation. Candem.
FAMILIAR. n. f.

Love is a familiar; there is no evil angel but love. Shakel.
FAMILIARITY. n. f. [familiaritas, French, from familiar.]
1. Easiness of conversation; omission of ceremony; affability.
2. Acquaintance; habitude.
We contract at last such an intimacy and familiarity with them, as makes it difficult and harkome for us to call off our minds. Atterbury's Sermons.
3. Easy intercourse.
They say any mortals may enjoy the most intimate familiari- ties with these gentle spirits. Pope.

FAM

TO FAMILIARITY. v. a. [familiaris, French.]

1. To make familiar; to make easy by habitude.
2. To bring down from a state of distant superiority.

The genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized him to my imagination, and at once dispelled all fear and apprehensions. Addison's Spectator.

FAMILIARLY. adv. [from familiar.]

1. Unceremoniously; with freedom like that of long acquaintance.
- Because that I familiarly sometimes
Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,
Your fawciness will jest upon my love. Shak. Comed. of Err.
He talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the Tiltyard, and then he broke his head. Sh.
The governor came to us, and, after salutations, said familiarly, that he was come to visit us, and called for a chair and fat him down. Bacon's New Atlantis.

2. Commonly; frequently; with the unconcernedness or easiness of long habitude or acquaintance.

Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long darkness, do familiarly present our senses with as great alterations in the sun and moon. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

3. Easily; without solemnity; without formality.

Horace still charms with graceful negligence,
And without method talks us into sense;
Will, like a friend, familiarly convey
The truest notions in the easiest way. Pope's Ess. on Critic.

FAMILIARLY. en famille, French. In a family way; domestically.

Deluded mortals, whom the great
Chafe for companions tete à tete;
Who at their dinners, en famille,
Get leave to sit where'er you will. Swift.

FAMILY. n. f. [familia, Latin; famille, French.]

1. Those who live in the same house; household.

The night made little impression on myself; but I cannot answer for my whole family; for my wife prevailed on me to take somewhat. Swift.

2. Those that descend from one common progenitor; a race; a tribe; a generation.
3. A class; a tribe; a species.

There be two great families of things, sulphureous and mercurial, inflammable and not inflammable, mature and crude, oily and watry. Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 354.

FAMINE. n. f. [famine, French; fames, Latin.] Scarcity of food; dearth; distress for want of victuals.

Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie,
'Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shakel. Macbeth.

Famines have not been of late observed, partly because of the industry of mankind, partly by those supplies that come by sea to countries in want, but principally by the goodness of God. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

This city never felt a siege before,
But from the lake receiv'd its daily store;
Which now shut up, and millions crowded here,
Famine will soon in multitudes appear. Dryd. Indian Emp.

TO FAMISH. v. a. [from fames, Latin; famis, old French.]

1. To kill with hunger; to starve; to destroy by want of food.

What, did he marry me to famish me?
The pains of famish'd Tantalus he'll feel,
And Sisyphus, that labours up the hill
The rowling rock in vain; and curst Ixion's wheel. Dryd.

2. To kill by deprivation or denial of any thing necessary to life.

Thin air
Above the clouds will pine his entrails grofs,
And famish him of breath, if not of bread. Mit. P. Lest.

TO FAMISH. v. n. To die of hunger.

You are all reliev'd rather to die than to famish. Sh. Coriol.

FAMISHMENT. n. f. [from famish.] The pain of hunger; want of food.

Apicius, thou did'st on thy gut bestow
Full ninety millions; yet when this was spent,
Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou,
Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment,
In poison'd potion drank't. Hakewill on Providence.

FAMOUSLY. n. f. [from famulus.] Renown; celebrity. Diät.

FAMOUS. adj. [fameus, French; famosus, Latin.]

1. Renowned; celebrated; much talked of and praised.

Henry the fifth, too famous to live long;
England ne'er lost a king of so much worth. Shak. Hen. VI.
There rose up before Moses two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown.

She became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her. Exek. xxiii. 10.

Pyreus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things; as earthen pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears, and swine tumbling in the mire; whereupon he was firnamed Rupographus. Peacham on Drawing.

FAN

I shall be nam'd among the famously
Of women, sung at solemn festivals. Milton's Agonistes.

Many, besides myself, have heard our famous Waller own, that he derived the harmony of his numbers from the Godfrey of Bulloign, which was turned into English by Mr. Fairfax.

Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

2. It has sometimes a middle signification, and imports fame whether for good or ill.

Meneceates and Menas, famous pyrates,
Make the sea serve them. Shakel. Anthony and Cleopatra.

FAMOUSLY. adv. [from famulus.] With great renown; with great celebration.

Then this land was famously enriched
With politick grave counsel; then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace. Shakel. Rich. III.

They looked on the particulars as things famously spoken of, and believed, and worthy to be recorded and read. Grew's Conf.

FAMOUSNESS. n. f. [from famulus.] Celebrity; great fame.

FAN. n. f. [fanus, Latin.]

1. An instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.

With scarfs, and fans, and double change of bravery,
With amber bracelets, beads, with all this knavery. Shakel.

Flavia, the least and slightest toy
Can with restitutions art employ:
In other hands the fan would prove
An engine of small force in love;
But she, with such an air and mien,
Not to be told or safely seen,
Directs its wanton motions so,
That it wounds more than Cupid's bow;
Gives coolness to the matchless dame,
'T' every other breath a flame. Atterbury.

The modest fan was lifted up no more,
And virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before. Pope.

2. Any thing spread out like a woman's fan into a triangle with a broad base.

As a peacock and crane were in company, the peacock spread his tail, and challenged the other to show him such a fan of feathers.

3. The instrument by which the chaff is blown away when corn is winnowed. [Fan, French.]

Flaile, strawfork, and rake with a fan that is strong. Tuff.

Alas shall eat clean provender, winnowed with the shovel and with the fan. Jf. xxx. 24.

In the wind and tempest of fortune's frown,
Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away. Shak. Troil. and Cr.

For the cleaning of corn is commonly used either a wicker-fan, or a fan with fails. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. Any thing by which the air is moved; wings.

The pris'ner with a spring from prison broke;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight. Dryden.

5. An instrument to raise the fire.

Nature worketh in us all a love to our own counsels: the contradiction of others is a fan to inflame that love. Hooker.

TO FAN. v. a.

1. To cool or recreate with a fan.

She was fanned into slumbers by her slaves. Spectator.

2. To ventilate; to affect by air put in motion.

Let every feeble humour shake your hearts;
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair. Shakel. Coriolanus.

The Norwegian banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakel. Macbeth.

The air
Floats as they pass, fann'd with unnumber'd plumes:
From branch to branch the smaller birds with song
Solac'd the woods, and spread their painted wings,
'Till ev'n. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii. l. 432.

The fanning wind upon her bosom blows;
To meet the fanning wind the bosom role:
The fanning wind and purling streams continue her repose. Dryden's Cymon and Iphigenia.

Calm as the breath which fans our eastern groves,
And bright, as when thy eyes first lighted up our loves. Dryd.

And now his shorter breath, with sultry air,
Pants on her neck, and fans her parting hair. Pope.

3. To separate, as by winnowing.

I have collected some few, therein fanning the old, not omitting any. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Not so the wicked; but as chaff, which, fann'd,
The wind drives, so the wicked shall not stand
In judgment. Milton.

FANATICISM. n. f. [from fanatic.] Enthusiasm; religious frenzy.

A church whose doctrines are derived from the clear fountains of the Scriptures, whose polity and discipline are formed upon the most uncorrupted models of antiquity, which has stood unshaken by the most furious assaults of popery on the one hand, and fanaticism on the other; has triumphed over all.

all the arguments of its enemies, and has nothing now to contend with but their slanders and calumnies. Rogers's Sermons.

FANATICK. adj. [fanaticus, Latin; fanatique, Fr.] Enthusiastick; struck with a superstitious frenzy.

After these appear'd
A crew, who, under names of old renown,
Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and forceries abus'd Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek

FANATICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] An enthusiast; a man mad with wild notions of religion.

The double armature of St. Peter is a more destructive engine than the tumultuary weapon snatched up by a fanatick.

Decay of Pitty.

FANCIFUL. adj. [fancy and full.]

1. Imaginative; rather guided by imagination than reason.

Some fanciful men have expected nothing but confusion and ruin from those very means, whereby both that and this is most effectually prevented. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Directed by the imagination, not the reason; full of wild images.

What treasures did he bury in his sumptuous buildings?
and how foolish and fanciful were they? Hayward.

It would show as much singularity to deny this, as it does a fanciful fancy to affirm it. Garth's Preface to Ovid.

FANCIFULLY. adv. [from fanciful.] According to the wildness of imagination.

FANCIFULNESS. n. f. [from fanciful.] Addition to the pleasures of imagination; habit of following fancy rather than reason.

Albertus Magnus, with somewhat too much curiosity, was somewhat transported with too much fancifulness towards the influences of the heavenly motions, and astrological calculations. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FANCY. n. f. [contracted from phantasy, phantasia, Latin; phantasia, Greek.]

1. Imagination; the power by which the mind forms to itself images and representations of things, persons, or scenes of being.

Shakespeare, fancy's sweetest child!
In the soul

Are many lesser faculties, that serve
Reason as chief: among these fancy next
Her office holds; of all external things,
Which the five watchful senses represent,
She forms imaginations, airy shapes,
Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames
All what we affirm, or what deny, and call
Our knowledge, or opinion. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Though no evidence affects the fancy so strongly as that of sense, yet there is other evidence, which gives as full satisfaction and as clear a conviction to our reason. Atterbury.

Love is by fancy led about,
From hope to fear, from joy to doubt:
Whom we now a goddess call,
Divinity grac'd in every feature,
Strait's a deform'd, a perjur'd creature;
Love and hate are fancy all. Granville.

2. An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Mens private fancies must give place to the higher judgment of that church which is in authority over them. Hooker.

A person of a full and ample fortune, who was not disturbed by any fancies in religion. Clarendon, b. viii.

I have always had a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children. Locke.

3. Taste; idea; conception of things.

The little chapel called the Salutation is very neat, and built with a pretty fancy. Addison on Italy.

4. Image; conception; thought.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone;
Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died
With them they think on? Shakel. Macbeth.

Inclination; liking; fondness.

Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourish'd?
It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing fed, and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies. Shakel. Merchant of Venice.

His fancy lay extremely to travelling.
For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself,
To fit your fancies to your father's will;
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
To death, or to a vow of single life. L'Estrange.

A resemblance in humour or opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is oftentimes a ground of affection. Cellier of Friendship.

6. Caprice; humour; whim.

True worth shall gain me, that it may be said Defert, not fancy, once a woman led. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

FAN

The sultan of Egypt kept a good correspondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they should take a fancy to turn the course of that river. Arbutnot.

7. Frolick; idle scheme; vagary.

One that was just entering upon a long journey, took up a fancy of putting a trick upon Mercury. L'Estrange.

8. Something that pleases or entertains.

The altering of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusing, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree, herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatical, or medicinal substance, are but fancies: the cause is, for that those things have passed their period, and nourish not. Bacon's Nat. History.

London-pride is a pretty fancy, and does well for borders. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO FANCY. v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

All are not always bound to hate and punish the true enemies of religion, much less any whom they may fancy to be so: all are always obliged to love its true friends, and to pray for its very enemies. Spratt's Sermons.

If our search has reached no farther than simile and metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing; but content ourselves with what our imaginations furnish us with. Locke.

TO FANCY. v. a.

1. To portray in the mind; to image to himself; to imagine.

But he whose noble genius is allow'd,
Who with stretch'd pinions soars above the crowd;
Who mighty thought can clothe with manly drefs,
He whom I fancy, but can ne'er express. Dryd. Juven. Sat.

2. To like; to be pleased with.

Ninus both admiring her judgment and valour, together with her person and external beauty, fancied her so strongly, as, neglecting all princely respects, he took her from her husband. Raleigh's History of the World.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demolish this town in whatever manner she pleases to fancy. Swift.

FANCYMO'NGER. n. f. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him. Shakel. As you like it.

FANCYSICK. adj. [fancy and sick.] One whose imagination is unfound; one whose distemper is in his own mind.

'Tis not necessity, but opinion, that makes men miserable; and when we come once to be fancysick, there's no cure for it. L'Estrange.

FANE. n. f. [fane, French; fanum, Latin.] A temple; a place consecrated to religion.

Nor fane, nor capitol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarments all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege. Shakel. Coriolanus.

Old Calibe, who kept the sacred fane
Of Juno, now the seem'd. Dryden's Enn., b. vii. l. 589.

Yet some to fanes repair'd, and humble rites
Perform'd to Thor and Woden, sabled gods,
Who with their vot'ries in one ruin shad'd. Phillips.

A sacred fane in Egypt's fruitful lands,
Hewn from the Theban mountain's rocky womb. Tickell.

The fields are ravish'd from th' industrious swains,
From men their cities, and from gods their fanes. Pope.

FANFARON. n. f. [French, from the Spanish. Originally in Arabic it signifies one who promises what he cannot perform. Ménage.]

1. A bully; a Hector.

There are fanfarons in the trials of wit too, as well as in feats of arms; and none so forward to engage in argument or discourse as those that are least able to go through with it. L'Estr.

Virgil makes Aeneas a bold avower of his own virtues, which, in the civility of our poets, is the character of a fanfaron or Hector. Dryden on Dramatick Poesy.

FANFARONA'DE. n. f. [from fanfaron, French.] A bluster; a tumour of fictitious dignity.

The bishop copied this proceeding from the fanfaronade of monsieur Bouffieurs, when the earl of Portland and that general had an interview. Swift.

TO FANG. v. a. [fangan, Saxon; vangen, Dutch.] To seize; to gripe; to clutch.

Deftruction fang mankind!
FANG. n. f. [from the verb.] Shakel. Timon.

1. The long tusks of a boar or other animal; any thing like 'em:

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy fang
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind;
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Evn'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say
This is no flattery. Shakel. As you like it.

Some

FAN

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which we call fangs, or tusks; as boars, pikes, falcons, and dogs, though less.

Prepared to fly.

The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves: the nerves no more sustain
The bulk; the bulk, unprop'd, falls headlong on the plain.

Dryden's Ovid, b. viii.

Then charge him close, provoke him to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, flopping from your horses,
Rivet the panting savage to the ground.

Addison's Cato.

2. The nails; the talons.
3. Any foot or other thing by which hold is taken.

The protuberant fangs of the yuca are to be treated like the tuberoses.

Boslyn's Kalender.

FAN'GED. adj. [from fang.] Furnished with fangs or long teeth; furnished with any instruments of destruction, which can be exercised in imitation of fangs.

My two schoolfellows,
Whom I will trust as I will address fang's,
They bear the mandate.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Not Scythians, nor fierce Dacians, onward rush
With half the speed, nor half so swift retreat:
In chariots, fang's with scythes, they scour the field,
Drive through our wedg'd battalions with a whirl,
And fire a dreadful harvest on the plain.

Phillips's Britain.

FANGLE. n. s. [from fang, Saxon, to attempt. Skinner.] Silly attempt; trifling scheme. It is never used, or rarely, but in contempt with the epithet new; as, new fangles, new fangleness.

FANGLED. adj. [from fangle.] This word seems to signify gaudy; ridiculously showy; vainly decorated. This is still retained in Scotland: as, he's new fangled, or whimsical, and very fond of novelty.

Quick wits be in desire new fangled, and in purpose unconstant.

Afham.

A book! oh, rare one!
Be not, as in this fangled world, a garment
Nobler than that it covers.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

FAN'GLESS. adj. [from fang.] Toothless; without teeth.
The king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement;
So that his pow'r, like to a fangle's lion,
May offer, but not hold.

Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

FAN'GOT. n. s. [] A quantity of wares: as raw silk, &c. containing from one or two hundred weight three quarters.

As I travel'd hither through the land,
I found the people strangely fantasied.

Shakespeare's King John.

FAN'TASM. n. s. [See PHANTASM.]

FAN'TASTICAL. adj. [from fantasy, Fr. from fantasy.] 1. Irrational; bred only in the imagination.

The delight that a man takes from another's sin, can be nothing else but a fantastical, preternatural complacency, arising from that which he really has no feeling of.

South.

2. Substituting only in the fancy; imaginary.
Present feats
Are less than horrible imaginings:
My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes to my fragile state of man, that function
Is smother'd in fumes; and nothing is,
But what is not.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Men are so possessed with their own fancies, that they take them for oracles; and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations of truth, when indeed they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastical ideas of a busy imagination.

Decay of Piety.

3. Unreal; apparent only; having the nature of phantoms which only assume visible forms occasionally.

Are ye fantastical, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye shew?

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

fantick mistress; to whom he retires from the conversation of a discreet and affectionate wife.

Taylor.

We are apt to think your medallists a little fantastical in the different prices they set upon their coins, without any regard to the metal of which they are composed.

Addison.

FANTA'STICALLY. adj. [from fantastical.] 1. By the power of imagination.

2. Capriciously; humorously; unsteadily.
England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

3. Whimsically; in compliance with mere imagination.
One cannot so much as fantastically chafe, even or odd, he thinks not why.

Grew's Cosmol. b. ii. c. 4.

FANTA'STICALNESS. n. s. [from fantastical.] FANTA'STICKNESS. n. s. [from fantastical.] 1. Humorousness; mere compliance with fancy.

Tillotson's Preface.

3. Caprice; unsteadiness.
FANTASY. n. s. [from fantasia, Fr. phantasia, Latin; φαντασία.] 1. Fancy; imagination; the power of imagining. See FANCY.

How now, Horatio? you tremble and look pale!
Is not this something more than fantasy?
I talk of dreams,
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain fantasy;
Which is as thin of substance as the air,
And more inconsistent than the wind.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

He is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Go you, and where you find a maid,
That ere she sleep hath thrice her prayers said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy,
Sleep the as found as careless infancy.

Shakespeare's As You Like It.

These spirits of sense, in fantasy's high court,
Judge of the forms of objects, ill or well;
And so they send a good or ill report
Down to the heart, where all affections dwell.

Davies.

By the power of fantasy we see colours in a dream, or a mad man sees things before him which are not there.

Newton.

2. Idea; image of the mind.
And with the fugitive sweet thereof allure,
Chaste ladies ears to fantasy's impure.

Hubbard's Tale.

3. Humour; inclination.
I would wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the Scriptures to your fantasies and affections.

Whig.

FANTOM. n. s. [See PHANTOM.]
FAP. adj. Fuddled; drunk. It seems to have been a cant word in the time of Shakespeare.

The gentleman had drunk himself out of his five senses; and being fap, sir, was, as they say, cathiered.

Shakespeare's As You Like It.

FAR. adv. [from far, Saxon; fari, Fr.] 1. To a great extent in length.

Pay sacred reverence to Apollo's song,
Left wrathful the far-shooting god emit
His fatal arrows.

Prior.

2. To a great extent every way. This less proper.
Is what I love: the far extended ocean
To a little riv'let I prefer.

Prior.

With costly cates the stain'd her frugal board;
Then with ill-gotten gold she bought a lord;
Corruption, discord, luxury combin'd,
Down sunk the far fam'd mistress of mankind.

Arbutnot.

From the same lineage stem Exotes came,
The far fam'd brother of th' enchantress dame.

Pope.

3. To a great distance progressively.
Be factious for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this foot of mine as far
As who goes farthest.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Is it far you ride?
—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Far from that hated face the Trojans fly;
All but the fool who fought his destiny.

Dryden's En.

4. Remotely; at a great distance.
He meant to travel into far countries, until his friends affection either ceased or prevailed.

Sidney.

In a kingdom rightly ordered, after a law is once published, it presently takes effect far and wide; all states framing themselves thereunto.

Hooker, b. i. f. 3.

And after that long strayed here and there,
Through every field and forest far and near,
Far be it from me to justify the cruelties which were at first used towards them, which had their reward soon after.

Bacon's Holy War.

He sent light horsemen into Mesopotamia with a guide, because cause the country was unto him best known; following not far after himself with all his army.

FAR

And yet the lights which in my tower do shine,
Mine eyes, which view all objects nigh and far,
Look not into this little world of mine.

Davies.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves
Seek them with wand'ring thoughts, and notions vain.

Milt.

I have been hunting up and down, far and near, since your unhappy indisposition, to find out a remedy.

L'Estrange.

The nations far and near contend in choice,
And send the flow'r of war by public voice.
The painted lizard and the birds of prey,
Foes of the frugal kind, be far away.

Dryden's Virg. Geor.

But from the reading of my book and me,
Be far, ye foes of virtuous poetry!
Who fortune's fault upon the poor can throw,
Point at the tatter'd coat and ragged shoe.

Dryden's Pers.

Far off you view'd them with a longing eye
Upon the topmost branch.
These words are so far from establishing any dominion, that we find the quite contrary.

Locke.

'Till on the Po his blasted corps was hurl'd,
Far from his country, in the western world.

Addison's Ovid.

5. To a distance.
As far as the East is from the West, so far hath he removed our transgressions from him.

Pope, ciii. 12.

Neither did those that were sent, and travelled far off, undertake so difficult enterprises without a conductor.

Raleigh.

But all in vain! which when he saw, he ceas'd
Contenting, and remov'd his tents far off.

Par. Left.

I had always a curiosity to look back into the sources of things, and view in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world.

Burns, Th. of the World.

A lion's hide around his loins he wore;
The well-poiz'd javelin to the field he bore,
Inur'd to blood; the far destroying dart,
And the best weapon, an undaunted heart.

Addison's Ovid.

6. In a great part.
When they were by Jesus the day was far spent.

Judge.

7. In a great proportion; by many degrees.
Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies.

Prov. xxxi. 10.

Such a communication passeth far better through the water than air.

Bacon's Natural History, No. 134.

Those countries have far greater rivers, and far higher mountains to pour down waters, than any part of the old world.

Bacon's New Atlantis.

The face of war,
In ancient times, doth differ far
From what our fiery battles are.
Of negatives we have far the least certainty, and they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved.

Tillotson.

Latin is a more fucine language than either the Italian, Spanish, French, or even than the English, which, by reason of its monosyllables, is far the most compendious of them.

Dryden.

Besides, he's lovely far above the rest,
With you immortal, and with beauty blest.
Ah! hope not yet to breathe thy native air;
Far other journey first demands thy care.

Pope.

8. To a great height; magnificently. This is perhaps only in Shakespeare.

I do not think
So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him.
—You speak him far.
—I don't extend him, sir.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

9. To a certain point; to a certain degree.
The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, as it is amongst the heathen; but must be received from God himself.

Hooker, b. i.

How far forth you do like their articles, Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Not to resolve, is to resolve; and many times it breeds as many necessities, and engageth as far in some other sort, as to resolve.

Bacon.

Of this I need not many words to declare how far it is from being so much as any part of repentance.

Hammond.

My discourse is so far from being equivalent to the position he mentions, that it is a perfect contradiction to it.

Tillotson.

The custom of these tongues sometimes so far influences the expressions, that in these epistles one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations.

Locke on St. Paul's Epistles.

10. It is used often in composition: as farshooting, farseeing. FAR-EE'CH. n. s. [from far and catch.] A deep stratagem. A ludicrous word.

But Jesuits have deeper reaches,
In all their politick farcatches;
And from their Copuck priest, Kircherus,
Found out this mystick way to jeer us.

Hudibras, p. iii.

FAR

FAR-EE'TCHED. adj. [from far and catch.] 1. Brought from places remote.

Of these things others quickly will dispose,
Whose pains have earn'd the farfetch'd spoil.

Milt. P. L.

By his command we boldly cross'd the line,
And bravely fought where southern stars arise:
We trac'd the farfetch'd gold unto the mine,
And that which brid'd our fathers made our prize.

Dryden.

2. Studiously fought; elaborately strained; not easily or naturally introduced.
York, with all his farfetch'd policy.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

For farfetch'd rhymes make puzzled angels strain,
And in low prose dull Lucifer complain.

Smith.

Under this head we may rank those words, which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable farfetch'd analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say, the meat is green when it is half roasted.

Watson's Logic.

FAR-PIE'RING. adj. [from far and pierce.] Striking, or penetrating a great way.

Atlas, her fire, to whose farpiercing eye
The wonders of the deep expanded lie;
Th' eternal columns which on earth he rears,
End in the fiery vault, and prop the spheres.

Pope's Odys.

FAR-SHOOT'ING. adj. [from far and shoot.] Shooting to a great distance.
Then loud he call'd Aeneas thrice by name;
The loud repeated voice to glad Aeneas came;
Great Jove, he said, and the farshooting god,
Inspire thy mind to make thy challenge good.

Dryden's En.

FAR. adv. 1. Distant; remote.
But we must beg our bread in climes unknown,
Beneath the scorching of the freezing zone;
And come to far Oaxis shall be told,
Or try the Lybian heat, or Scythian cold.

Dryden's Virgil.

2. It was formerly used not only as an adverb but an adjective, with off.
These things seem small and undistinguishable,
Like far off mountains turned into clouds.

Shakespeare's As You Like It.

If we may behold in any creature any one spark of that eternal fire, or any far off dawning of God's glorious brightness, the same in the beauty, motion, and virtue of this light may be perceived.

Raleigh's History of the World.

3. From FAR. In this sense is used elliptically for a far or remote place.
The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth.

Deutr. xxvii. 49.

4. Remoter of the two; in horsemanship, the right side of the horse, which the rider turns from him when he mounts.
No true Egyptian ever knew in horles
The far side from the near.

Dryden's Cicerone.

FAR. n. s. [contracted from farrow.] The offspring of a sow; young pigs.
Sows, ready to farrow this time of the year,
Are for to be made of and counted full dear;
For now is the loss of the far of the sow
More great than the loss of two calves of the cow.

Tuff.

TO FARCE. v. a. [from farce, Latin; farciar, French.] 1. To stuff; to fill with mingled ingredients.

Wrestling is a pastime which either the Cornishmen derived from Corineus, their first pretended founder, or at least it ministered some stuff to the farcing of that fable.

Carew.

2. To extend; to swell out.
'Tis not the balm, the sceptre and the ball,
The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The enticement robe of gold and pearl,
The farced title running fore the king.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

FARCE. n. s. [from the verb; or from farcer, French, to mock.] A dramatick representation written without regularity, and stuffed with wild and ludicrous conceits.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this.

FAR

Who would fare bear,
To groan and sweat under a weary life? Shalep. Hamlet.
To FARE. v. n. [fapan, Saxon; varen, Dutch.]
1. To go; to pass; to travel.
At last, resolving forward still to fare,
Until the blustering storm is overblown. Fairy Queen, b. i.
His spirits pure were subject to our fight,
Like to a man in fiew and shape he fares. Fairfax.
So on he fares, and to the border comes
Of Eden. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 131.
Sadly they far'd along the sea-beat shore;
Still heav'd their hearts. Pope.
2. To be in any state good or bad.
So bids thee well to fare thy nether friend. Fairy Queen.
A stubborn heart shall fare evil at the last. Ecluf. iii. 26.
Well fares the hand, which to our humble fight
Presents that beauty, which the dazzling light
Of royal splendor.
So in this throng bright Sachariffa far'd,
Oppress'd by those who strove to be her guard:
As ships, though never so obsequious, fall
Foul in a tempest on their admiral. Waller.
So fares the stag among th' enraged hounds;
Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds. Denb.
But as a barque, that in foul weather,
To's'd by two adverse winds together,
Is bruise'd and beaten to and fro;
And knows not which to turn him to;
So far'd the knight between two foes,
And knew not which of them t' oppose. Hudibras, p. i.
If you do as I do, you may fare as I fare. L'Estrange.
Thus fares the queen, and thus her fury blows Amid't the crowd. Dryden's Æn.
English ministers never fare so well as in a time of war with a foreign power, which diverts the private feuds and animosities of the nation, and turns their efforts upon the common enemy. Addison's Freeholder, N. 49.
Some give out there is no danger at all; others are comforted that it will be a common calamity, and they shall fare no worse than their neighbours. Swift.
3. To proceed in any train of consequences good or bad.
Thus it fares when too much desire of contradiction causeth our speeches rather to pass by number than to stay for weight. Hooker, b. ii. f. 5.
So fares it when with truth falsehood contends. Milton.
4. To happen to any one well or ill. With it preceding in an imperfect form.
When the hand finds itself well warmed and covered, let it refuse the trouble of feeding the mouth, or guarding the head,
'till the body be starved or killed, and then we shall see how it will fare with the hand. South's Sermons.
5. To feed; to eat; to be entertained with food.
The rich man fares sumptuously every day. Luke.
Feast your ears with the music awhile, if they will fare so harshly as on the trumpet's sound. Shakespeare's Timon.
Men think they have fares hardly, if, in times of extemity, they have descended so low as dogs; but Galen delivereth, that, young, fat, and gelded, they were the food of many nations. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 25.
FARE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Price of passage in a vehicle by land or by water. Used only of that which is paid for the person, not the goods.
He found a ship going to Tarlish; so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it to go with them unto Tarlish. Jon.
He passage begs with unregarded pray'r,
And wants two farthings to discharge his fare. Dryd. Juv.
2. Food prepared for the table; provisions.
But come, so well refresh'd, now let us play,
As meet is, after such delicious fare. Milton's Paradise Lost.
But when the western winds with vital pow'r
Call forth the tender grass and budding flow'r,
Then, at the last, produce in open air
Both flocks, and send them to their Summer's fare. Dryden.
He that would more is covetous, not wife:
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please. Dryd. Juv.
Upon his rising up he ordered the peasant to set before him whatever food he had in his house: the peasant brought out a great deal of coarse fare, of which the emperor eat very heartily. Addison's Guardian, N. 99.
FAREWELL. adv. [This word is originally the imperative of the verb fare well, or fare you well; sis felix, abi in bonam rem; or bene sit tibi; but in time use familiarised it to an adverb, and it is used both by those who go and those who are left.]
1. The parting compliment; adieu.
But farewell, king; fith thus thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here. Shak. K. Lear.

FAR

Farewell, master Silence: 'I will not use many words with you; fare you well, gentlemen, both. Shakep. Henry IV.
Whether we shall meet again, I know not;
Therefore our everlasting farewell take;
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Calpurn. Shak. Jul. Cesar.
Be not amazed, call all your senses to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever. Shakep.
An iron lumber shuts my swimming eyes;
And now farewell, invol'd in shades of night,
For ever I am ravi'd from thy sight. Dryden's Virg. Geo.
Farewell, says he; the parting found scarce fell
From his faint lips, but he replied farewell. Dryden.
O queen, farewell! be still posselt
Of dear remembrance, blessing still and blest! Pope's Odyss.
2. It is sometimes used only as an expression of separation without kindness.
Farewell the year which threaten'd fo
The fairest light the world can show. Waller.
Treading the path to nobler ends,
A long farewell to love I gave;
Relov'd my country and my friends
All that remain'd of me should have. Waller.
FAREWELL. n. f.
1. Leave; act of departure.
See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
If chance the radiant sun, with farewell sweet,
Extend his evening beam, the fields revive,
The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds
Attest their joy, that hill and valley ring. Milt. Par. Lost.
As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell. Dryden.
Before I take my farewell of this subject, I shall advise the author for the future to speak his meaning more plainly. Addi.
2. It is sometimes used as an adjective; leave-taking.
Several ingenious writers, who have taken their leave of the publick in farewell papers, will not give over so, but intend to appear again; though perhaps under another form, and with a different title. Spectator, N. 445.
FARINA/CROUS. adj. [from farina, Latin.] Mealy; tasting like meal or flower of corn.
The properest food of the vegetable kingdom for mankind, is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmi-ferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panick, and millet. Arbutnot on Aliment.
FARM. n. f. [ferme, French; peom, provilion, Saxon.]
1. Ground let to a tenant; ground cultivated by another man upon condition of paying part of the profit to the owner or landlord.

They received of the bankers scant twenty shillings for thirty, which the earl of Cornwall farm'd of the king. Camden's Rem.
3. To cultivate land.
FARMER. n. f. [fermier, French; or from farm.]
1. One who cultivates hired ground.
Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar, and the creature run from the cur: there thou might'st behold the great image of authority; a dog's obey'd in office. Shakep.
2. One who cultivates ground, whether his own or another's.
Nothing is of greater prejudice to the farmer than the stocking of his land with cattle that are larger than it will bear.
Motimer's Husbandry.
FARMOST. n. f. [superlative of far.] Most distant; re-motest.
A spacious cave, within its farmest part,
Was hew'd and fashion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.
FARNES. n. f. [from far.] Distance; remoteness.
Their nearness on all quarters to the enemy, and their far-ness from timely succour by their friends, have forced the commanders to call forth the uttermost number of able hands to fight. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
FARRA/GINOUS. adj. [from farrago, Latin.] Formed of different materials.
Being a confusion of knaves and fools, and a farrag-inous concurrence of all conditions, tempers, fexes and ages, it is but natural if their determinations be monstrous, and many ways inconsistent with truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
FARRAGO. n. f. [Latin.] A mass formed confusedly of several ingredients; a medley.
FARRIER.

FAR

FA'RRIER. n. f. [ferrier, French; ferrarius, Latin.]
1. A shoer of horses.
But the utmost exactness in these particulars belong to farriers, ladders, smiths, and other tradesmen. Digby.
2. One who professes the medicine of horses.
If you are a piece of a farrier, as every good groom ought to be, get sack, brandy, or strong-beer to rub your horses.
Swift's Directions to the Groom.
To FA'RRIER. v. n. [from the noun.] To practise phylick or chirurgery on horses.
Though there are many pretenders to the art of farriering and cowlceching, yet many of them are very ignorant. Mori.

Pour in fow's blood that hath litter'd
Her nine farrows. Shakep. Macbeth.
To FA'RRROW. v. a. To bring pigs. It is used only of swine.
Sows ready to farrow this time of the year,
Are for to be made of. Tuff. Hist.
The swine, although multiparous, yet being bilucous, and only cloven-hoofed, is farrow'd with open eyes, as other bilucous animals. Brown.
Ev'n her, who did her numerous offspring boast,
As fair and fruitful as the fow that carry'd
The thirty pigs, at one large litter farrow'd. Dryd. Juv.
FART. n. f. [pore, Saxon.] Wind from behind.
Love is the fart
Of every heart;
It pains a man when 'tis kept close;
And others doth offend when 'tis let loose. Suckling.
To FART. v. a. [from the noun.] To break wind behind.
As when we a gun discharge,
Although the bore be not so large,
Before the flame from muzzle burst,
Just at the breech it flashes first;
So from my lord his passion broke,
He farted first, and then he spoke. Swift.
FARTHER. adv. [This word is now generally considered as the comparative degree of far; but by no analoger can far make farther or farthest: it is therefore probable, that the ancient orthography was nearer the true, and that we ought to write farther and farthest, from farth, farther, farthest, ponder, farther, Saxon; the o and u, by resemblance of sound, being first confounded in speech, and afterwards in books.]
At a greater distance; to a greater distance; more remotely;
beyond; moreover.
To make a perfect judgment of good pictures, when compared with one another, besides rules, there is farther required a long conversation with the best pieces. Dryden's Duffresnoy.
They contented themselves with the opinions, fashions and things of their country, without looking any farther. Lake.
FA'THER. adj. [supposed from far, more, probably from farth.]
1. More remote.
Let me add a farther truth, that without those ties of gratitude, I have a most particular inclination to honour you.
Dryden's Juv. Dedication.
2. Longer; tending to greater distance.
Before our farther way the fates allow,
Here must we fix on high the golden bough. Dryden's Æn.
FA'THERANCE. n. f. [more properly fatherance, from farther.] Encouragement; promotion.
That was the foundation of the learning I have, and of all the fatherance that I have obtained. Albani's Schoolmaster.
FA'THERMORE. adv. [more properly furthermore.] Besides;
over and above; likewise.
Fathermore the leaves, body and boughs of this tree, by so much exceed all other plants, as the greatest men of power and worldly ability surpass the meanest. Raleigh's History.
To FA'THER. v. a. [more proper To farther.] To promote;
to facilitate; to advance.
If he had farthered or hindered the taking of the town,
Dryden's Dedication to the Æn.
FA'THET. adv. [more properly furtherth. See FARTHER.]
1. At the greatest distance.
2. To the greatest distance.
FA'THET. adj. Most distant; remotest.
Yet it must be withal considered, that the greatest part of the world are they which be farthest from perfection. Hooker.
FA'RTHING. n. f. [peopling, Saxon, from peope, four, that is, the fourth part of a penny.]
1. The fourth of a penny; the smallest English coin.
A farthing is the least denomination or fraction of money used in England. Cocker's Arithmetick.
Ele all those things we toil so hard in,
Would not avail one single farthing. Prior.
2. Copper money.
The parish find, 'tis true; but our church-wardens Feed on the silver, and give us the farthings. Gay.
You are not obliged to take money not of gold or silver;
not the halpence or farthings of England. Swift.
3. It is used sometimes in a sense hyperbolical; as, it is not worth a farthing; or proverbial.

FAS

His son builds on, and never is content,
'Till the last farthing is in structure spent. Dryden's Juv.
FA'RTHINGALE. n. f. [This word has much exercised the etymology of Skinner, who at last seems to determine that it is derived from virtu garde: if he had considered what virt signifies in Dutch, he might have found out the true sense.] A hoop; circles of whalebone used to spread the petticoat to a wide circumference.
With filken coats, and caps, and golden rings,
With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales, and things. Shakep.
Tell me,
What compass will you wear your farthingale? Shakep.
Arthur wore in hall
Round table, like a farthingale. Hudibras, p. i. cont. 1.
Some will have it that it portends the downfall of the French king; and observe, that the farthingale appeared in England a little before the ruin of the Spanish monarchy. Addison.
She seems a medley of all ages,
With a huge farthingale to swell her fustian stuff;
A new comode, a topknot, and a ruff. Swift.
FA'RTHINGSWORTH. n. f. [farthing and worth.] As much as is sold for a farthing.
They are thy customers; I hardly ever sell them a farthings-worth of any thing. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
FASCES. n. f. [Latin.] Rods anciently carried before the consuls as a mark of their authority.
The duke beheld, like Scipio, with disdain,
That Carthage, which he ruin'd, rise once more;
And shook aloft the fascies of the main,
To fright those slaves with what they felt before. Dryden.
FASCI/A. n. f. [Latin.] A fillet; a bandage.
FASCIATED. adj. [from fascia.] Bound with fillets; tied with a bandage. DiG.
FASCIATION. n. f. [from fascia.] Bandage; the act or manner of binding diseased parts.
Three especial sorts of fasciation, or rowling, have the worthies of our profession commended to posterity. Wifeman.
To FASCINATE. v. a. [fascina, Latin.] To bewitch; to enchant; to influence in some wicked and secret manner.
There be none of the affections which have been noted to fascinate or bewitch, but love and envy. Bacon's Essay o.
Such a fascinating sin this is, as allows men no liberty of consideration. Decay of Piety.
FASCINATION. n. f. [from fascinate.] The power or act of bewitching; enchantment; unseen inexplicable influence.
He had such a crafty and bewitching fashion, both to move pity and to induce belief, as was like a kind of fascination and enchantment to those that saw him or heard him. Bacon.
The Turks hang old rags, or such like ugly things, upon their fairest horses, and other goodly creatures, to secure them against fascination. Waller.
There is a certain bewitchery or fascination in words, which makes them operate with a force beyond what we can naturally give an account of. Saule's Sermons.
FASCINE. n. f. [French.] A faggot. Military cant.
The black prince passed many a river without the help of pontoons, and filled a ditch with faggots as successfully as the generals of our times do with fascines. Addison's Spectator.
FASCINOUS. adj. [fascinum, Latin.] Caused or acting by witchcraft, or enchantment.
I shall not discuss the possibility of fascinous diseases, farther than refer to experiment. Harvey on Consumptions.
FASHION. n. f. [fapon, French; facies, Latin.]
1. Form; make; state of any thing with regard to its outward appearance.
They pretend themselves grieved at our solemnities in erecting churches, at their form and fashion, at the stateliness of them and costliness, and at the opinion which we have of them.
Hooker, b. v. f. 17.
The fashion of his countenance was altered. Luke ix. 29.
Stand these poor people's friend,
—I will,
Or let me lose the fashion of a man: Shakep. Henry VIII.
2. The make or cut of cloaths.
I'll be at charges for a looking-glass,
And entertain a score or two of taylors,
To study fashions to adorn my body. Shakep. Richard III.
You, sir, I entertain for one of my hundred; only, I do not like the fashion of your garments. Shakep. King Lear.
3. Manner; sort; way.
For that I love your daughter
In such a righteous fashion as I do,
Perforce against all checks, rebukes, and manners,
I must advance. Shakep. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Pluck Calca by the sleeve,
And he will, after his four fashion, tell you What hath proceeded. Shakep. Julius Cesar.
The commissioners either pulled down or defaced all images in churches; and that in such unseasonable and unseasoned fashion, as if it had been done in hostility against them. Hayw.
4. Custom operating upon dress, or any domestick ornaments.
Here's

FAS

- Here's the note
How much your chain weighs to the utmost carat,
The fineness of the gold, the chargeful fashion. Shakespeare.

FAT

FAT'ALNESS. n. f. [from fatal.] Invincible necessity.
FATE. n. f. [fatum, Latin.]
1. Destiny; an eternal series of successive causes.
Necessity or chance
Approach not me; and what I will is fate. Milton.
There is a necessity in fate
Why still the brave bold man is fortunate. Dryden.
You must obey me soon or late;
Why will you vainly struggle with your fate? Dryden.
When empire in its childhood first appears,
A watchful fate o'ersees its rising years. Dryden.
Random chance, or wilful fate,
Guides the shaft from Cupid's bow. A. Phillips.
2. Event predetermined.
Tell me what fates attend the duke of Suffolk?
By water shall he die, and take his end. Shakespeare.
3. a th; destruction.
Viewing a neighbouring hill, whose top of late
A chapel crown'd, 'till in the common fate
Th' adjoining abbey fell. Denham.
Looking, he feeds alone his famish'd eyes;
Feeds ling'ring death, but looking not he dies;
Yet still he chafes the longest way to fate,
Walling at once his life and his estate. Dryden.
Courage uncertain dangers may abate;
But who can bear th' approach of certain fate? Dryden.
The whizzing arrow sings,
And hears thy fate, Antinous, on its wings. Pope.
4. Cause of death.
With full force his deadly bow he bent,
And feather'd fates among the mules and sumpters sent. Dryden.
FAT'ED. adj. [from fate.]
1. Decried by fate.
She fled her father's rage, and with a train
Driv'n by the southern blasts was fated here to reign. Dryden.
2. Determined in any manner by fate.
Bright Vulcanian arms,
Fated from force of steel by Stygian charms,
Suspended, shone on high. Dryden's Æn.
3. Endued with any quality by fate.
Her aukward love indeed was oddly fated;
She and her Polly were too near related. Prior.
4. Involved with the power of fatal determination. Peculiar to Shakespeare.
Thy fated sky
Gives us free scope. Shakespeare.
FATHER. n. f. [pater, Saxon; ater, Eric. This word is found likewise in the Persian language.]
1. He by whom the son or daughter is begotten.
Father is a notion superinduced to the substance, or man, and refers only to an act of that thing called man, whereby he contributed to the generation of one of his own kind. Locke.
Son of Benafem, thy father faith it; the man by whom thou hast breath and life speaketh the word. Bacon.
He shall forget
Father and mother, and to his wife adhere. Milt. Pa. Lgt.
2. The first ancestor.
It should not stand in thy posterity;
But that myself should be the root and father
Of many kings. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Abraham is the father of us all. Rom. iv. 16.
3. The appellation of an old man.
A poor blind man was accounted cunning in prognosticating weather: Epim, a lawyer, said in scorn, Tell me, father, when doth the sun change? The old man answered, when such a wicked lawyer as you goeth to heaven. Camden.
4. The title of any man revered for age, learning, and piety.
You shall find one well accompanied With reverend fathers and well learned bishops. Sh. R. III.
5. One who has given original to any thing good or bad.
Jubal was the father of all such as handle the harp and organ. Gen. iv. 21.
6. The ecclesiastical writers of the first centuries.
Men may talk of the fathers, and magnify the fathers, and seem to make the authority of the fathers next to infallible; and yet none expose them more to contempt than they which give such answers as these. Stillington.
7. One who acts with paternal care and tenderness.
I was a father to the poor. Jab. xxix. 16.
He hath made me a father to Pharaoh, and lord of all his house. Gen. xlv. 8.
8. The title of a popish confessor, particularly of a Jesuit.
Formal in apparel,
In gait and countenance surely like a father. Shakespeare.
There was in this place a convent, who was very much renowned for his piety and exemplary life; and as it is usual, under any great affliction, to apply themselves to the most eminent confessor, our beautiful votary took the opportunity of confessing herself to this celebrated father. Add.
9. The title of a senator of old Rome.
From hence the race of Alban fathers come,
And the long glories of majestic Rome. Dryden's Virgil.
10.

FAU

Tygers and wolves shall in the ocean breed,
The whale and dolphin fatten on the mead,
And every element exchange its kind,
When thriving honestly in courts we find. Granville.

FA'UCIOUS. adj. [fauces, Latin.]
1. Stupid; foolish; feeble of mind.
We pity or laugh at those fauces extravagants, while yet ourselves have a considerable dose of what makes them so. Glan.
2. Impotent; without force; illusory; alluding to an ignis fatus.
And when that flame finds combustible earth,
Thence fatus fires and meteors take their birth. Drom.
FA'UTIX. n. f. [fautix, French; from fatus.] Foolishness; weakness of mind; some degree of frenzy.
It had argued a very short fight of things, and extreme fauty of mind in me, to bind my own hands at their request. King Charles.
These symptoms were so high in some as to produce a sort of fauty or madness. Arbitrat on Air.
FA'UTWITTED. adj. [fat and wit.] Heavy; dull; stupid.
Thou art so fautwitted with drinking old sack, and unbottoning thee after supper, and sleeping upon benches in the afternoon, that thou hast forgotten. Shakspeare, Henry IV.
FA'UTY. adj. [fat.] Unctuous; oleaginous; greasy;
partaking of the nature of fat.
The like cloud, if oily or fauty, will not discharge; not because it sticketh faster, but because air preyeth upon waters, and flame and fire upon oil. Bacon's Natural History.
The gourd
And thirsty cucumber, when they perceive
Th' approaching olive, with reluctant fly
Her fauty fibres, and with tendrils creep Divers, detaching contact. Phillips.
The common symptoms of the muricatic curvy are, a saline taste in the piddle, and a lixivial urine, sometimes with a fauty substance like a thin skin a-top. Arbitrat on Aliments.
FA'UCET. n. f. [fautet, French; fauca, Latin.] The pipe inserted into a vessel to give vent to the liquor, and stopped up by a peg or spigot. It is sometimes improperly written fautet.
You were out a good wholesome forenoon in hearing a cause between an orange-wife and a fautet-seller, and adjourned a controversy of three-pence to a second audience. Shakspeare.
If you are sent down to draw drink, and find it will not run, blow strongly into the fautet, and it will immediately pour into your mouth. Swift's Direct. to the Butler.
FA'UCHION. n. f. [See FALCHION.] A crooked sword.
A stately tomb, whose top a trumpet bore;
A soldier's fauchon, and a seaman's oar. Dryden's En.
FA'UEEL. n. f. [French.] The fruit of a species of the pal-mtree. See PALM.
FA'VILLOUS. adj. [favilla, Latin.] Consisting of ashes.
As to forestalling of strangers, from the fungous particles about the wicks of the candle, it only signifies a mouth air about them, hindering the avoilation of light and the favillous particles. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 22.
FA'WILCON. } See FALCON.
FA'ULCONRY. }
FAULT. n. f. [faut, faut, Fr. falter, to be deficient, Spanish.
The l is sometimes sounded, and sometimes mute. In conversation it is generally suppressed.]
1. Offence; slight crime; somewhat liable to censure or objection.
The prophet chuseth rather to charge them with the fault of making a law unto themselves, than the crime of transgressing a law which God had made. Hosker, b. iii. f. 6.
He finds no fault with their opinion about the true God, but only that it was not clear and distinct enough. Stillington.
He that but conceives a crime in thought,
Contracts the danger of an actual fault.
Then what must he expect that still proceeds
To commit sin, and work up thoughts to deeds. Dryden.
If you like not my poem, the fault may possibly be in my writing; but more probably 'tis in your morals, which cannot bear the truth of it. Dryden.
They wholly mistake the nature of criticism, who think its business is principally to find fault.
To be desirous of a good name, and careful to do every thing, that we innocently may, to obtain it, is so far from being a fault, even in private persons, that it is their great and indispensible duty. Atterbury's Sermons.
Before his sacred name flies ev'ry fault,
And each exalted stanza teems with thought. Pope.
Which of our thum-cap'd ancestors found fault,
For want of sugar-tongs or spoons for salt? King.
Being void of all friendship and enmity, they never complain, nor find fault with the times. Swift.
2. Defect; want; absence.
I could tell to thee, as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend, I could be sad, and sad indeed too. Shakspeare's Henry IV., p. ii.

FAV

There is no straw given unto thy servants, and they lay unto us, make brick; and behold, thy servants are beaten;
but the fault is in thine own people. Ex. v. 16.
3. Puzzle; difficulty: as, the enquirer is at a fault.
To FAULT. v. n. [from the noun.] To be wrong; to fail.
Which moved him rather in eclogues than otherwise to write, minding to furnish our tongue in this kind wherein it faulteth. Spenser.
To FAULT. v. a. To charge with a fault; to accuse.
For that I will not fault thee,
But for humbleness exalt thee. Old Song.
FA'ULTER. n. f. [from fault.] An offender; one who commits a fault.
Then she, behold the fauter here in sight;
This hand committed that supposed offence. Fairfax, b. ii.
FA'ULTFINDER. n. f. [faut and find.] A censurer; an ob-jector.
FA'ULTILY. adv. [from fauty.] Not rightly; improperly;
defectively; erroneously.
FA'ULTINESS. n. f. [from fauty.]
1. Badness; viciousness; evil disposition.
When her judgment was to be practised in knowing fauti- ness by his first tokens, she was like a young fawn, who coming in the wind of the hunters, doth not know whether it be a thing or no to be eschewed. Sidney, b. ii.
2. Delinquency; actual offences.
The inhabitants will not take it in evil part, that the fauti- ness of their people heretofore is by us so far forth laid open.
Hosker, Preface.
FA'ULTLESS. adj. [from fault.] Without fault; perfect; completely excellent.
Where for our sins he faultless suffered pain,
There where he died, and where he liv'd again. Fairfax.
Who durst thy faultless figure thus deface? Dryden's En.
Whoever thinks a faultless piece to see,
Thinks what ne'er was, nor is, nor e'er shall be. Pope.

- Full fifteen thousand lusty fellows
With fire and sword the fort maintain;
Each was a Hercules, you tell us,
Yet out they march'd like common men. Prior.

8. A word of contempt: the foolish mortal; the mean wretch; the sorry rascal.
Those great fellows scornfully receiving them, as foolish birds fallen into their net, it pleased the eternal justice to make them suffer death by their hands. Sidney, b. ii.

- Cassio hath here been set on in the dark
By Rodorigo, and fellows that are 'scap'd:
He's almost slain, and Rodorigo dead. Shak. Othello.
I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows. Shakespeare's Tempest.

- Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And left me in reputation's banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor likelihood. Shak. Henry IV.

- How oft the fight of means, to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done? for hadst not thou been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd to do a deed of shame,
Thy murder had not come into my mind. Shak. K. John.

- The Moor's abus'd by some most villainous knave,
Some base notorious knave, some curvy fellow. Shak. Othello.
The fellow had taken more fish than he could spend while they were sweet. L'Estrange.

- As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our stock, and the Sisyphian seed
By fraud and theft alters his father's breed. Dryden.

- You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow, as this Mr. Wood, could have got his majesty's broad seal. Swift.
You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, cobler like, the parson will be drunk,
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather and prunella. Pope's Essay on Man.

9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.
The provost commanded his men to hang him up on the nearest tree: then the fellow cried out that he was not the miller, but the miller's man. Hayward.

10. A member of a college that shares its revenues.
TO FELLOW. v. a. To suit with; to pair with; to match.
Fellow is often used in composition to mark community of nature, station, or employment.

- Imagination,
With what's unreal, thou co-active art,
And fellow'st nothing. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

- FELLOW-COMMONER. n. f.
1. One who has the same right of common.
He cannot appropriate, he cannot inclose, without the consent of all his fellowcommoners, all mankind. Locke.

2. A commoner at Cambridge of the higher order, who dines with the fellows.
FELLOW-CREATURE. n. f. One that has the same creator.
Reason is the glory of human nature, and one of the chief eminencies whereby we are raised above our fellowcreatures the brutes in this lower world. Watts's Logic, Introduction.

- FELLOW-HEIR. n. f. Coheir; partner of the same inheritance.
The Gentiles should be fellowheirs. Eph. iii. 6.

- FELLOW-HELPER. n. f. Coadjutor; one who concurs in the same business.
We ought to receive such, that we might be fellowhelpers to the truth. 3 Jo. viii.

- FELLOW-LABOURER. n. f. One who labours in the same design.
My fellowlabourers have likewise commissioned me to perform in their behalf this office of dedication. Dryd. Jew. Ded.

- FELLOW-SERVANT. n. f. One that has the same master.
Not

FEL

Nor less think we heav'n of thee on earth,
Than of our fellow-servant; and inquire Gladly into the ways of God with man. Milt. Parad. Lost.
Fair fellow-servant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my slighted care
Than the bright dame's we serve. Waller.

Their fathers and yours were fellow-servants to the same heavenly matter while they lived; nor is that relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children. Atterbury's Sermons.

FELLOW-SOLDIER. n. f. One who fights under the same commander. An endearing appellation used by officers to their men. Shakesp.

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation. Shakesp.
Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and another. Phil. ii. 25.

FELLOW-STUDENT. n. f. One who studies in company with another. Waller.

I pray thee, do not mock me, fellow-student;
I think it was to see my mother's wedding. Shakesp. Hamlet.

If you have no fellow-student at hand, tell it over with your acquaintance. Waller's Logic.

FELLOW-SUBJECT. n. f. One who lives under the same government. Waller.

The bleeding condition of their fellow-subjects was a feather in the balance with their private ends. Swift.

FELLOW-SUFFERER. n. f. One who shares in the same evils;
one who partakes the same sufferings with another. Swift.

How happy was it for those poor creatures, that your grace was made their fellow-sufferer? And how glorious for you, that you chose to want rather than not relieve the wants of others?
Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

We in some measure share the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons but fellow-sufferers. Addison's Spectator.

FELLOW-WRITER. n. f. One who writes at the same time, or on the same subject. Addison's Spectator.

Since they cannot raise themselves to the reputation of their fellow-writers, they must sink it to their own pitch, if they would keep themselves upon a level with them. Addison's Spectator.

FELLOWFEELING. n. f. [fellow and feeling.]
1. Sympathy.
It is a high degree of inhumanity not to have a fellowfeeling of the misfortune of my brother. L'Estrange.

2. Combination; joint interest.
Even your milkwoman and your nurserymaid have a fellowfeeling. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

FELLOWLIKE. } adj. [fellow and like.] Like a companion;
FELLOWLY. } on equal terms; companionable.
All which good parts he graceth with a good fellowlike, kind, and respectful carriage. Carver's Survey of Cornwall.

One feed for another, to make an exchange.
With fellowly neighbourhood seemeth not strange. Tusser.

FELLOWSHIP. n. f. [from fellow.]
1. Companionship; consort; society.
This boy cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship. Shak. Coriolan.

From blissful bow'rs
Of amaranthine shade, fountain, or spring,
By the waters of life, where'er they fat
In fellowships of joys, the fons of light Halld. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 80.

There is no man but God puts excellent things into his possession, to be used for the common good; for men are made for society and mutual fellowship. Calamy's Sermons.

God having designed man for a sociable creature, made him not only with an inclination and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cement of society. Locke.

2. Association; confederacy; combination.
We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us. Shakesp. Henry V.

Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any settled fellowship, never any solemn agreement amongst themselves what to do, or not to do. Hobbes, b. i. f. 10.

Most of the other Christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of that war. Knot's History of the Turks.

3. Equality.
4. Partnership; joint interest.
Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar load. Parad. Reg.

O love! thou sternly do'st thy power maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyants and thou all fellowship didstain. Dryden.

5. Company; state of being together.
The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship. But hark, a fall! Shakesp. Othello.

6. Frequency of intercourse; social pleasure.
In a great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellowship which is in less neighbourhoods. Bacon's Essays.

FEM

7. Fitness and fondness for ferial entertainments, with good prefixes. Locke.

He had by his excessive good fellowship, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army. Clarendon, b. viii.

8. An establishment in the college with share in its revenue.
Corusades having, by the most extreme parsimony, saved thirty-four pounds out of a beggarly fellowship, went up to London. Swift.

9. [In arithmetic.] That rule of plural proportion whereby we balance accounts, depending between divers persons, having put together a general stock, so that they may every man have his proportional gain, or sustain his proportional part of loss. Cocker's Arithmetic.

10. A rule in arithmetic, by which two or more independent operations of the rule of three may divide any given number into unequal parts, proportional to certain other numbers.
It is so called, because the more common and useful application thereof is in the division of gains, losses, or other things, among partners in company. Malcolm.

FELLY. adv. [from fell.] Cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously. Locke.

Fair ye be sure, but cruel and unkind;
As is a tiger, that with greediness
Hunts after blood, when he by chance doth find
A feeble beast, doth follow him oppress. Spenser's Sonnets.

FEL-DE-SE. n. f. [In law.] He that committeth felony by murdering himself. Locke.

FELON. n. f. [felon, French; felo, low Latin; pel, Saxon.]
1. One who has committed a capital crime.
I apprehend thee for a felon here. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.

And often have you brought the wily fox,
Chas'd even amid' the folds; and made to bleed,
Like felons, where they did the murderous deed. Dryden.

2. A whitlow; a tumour formed between the bone and its investing membrane, very painful.
The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. Wijeman's Surgery.

FELON. adj. Cruel; traitorous; inhuman.
Ay me! what thing on earth, that all things breeds,
Might be the cause of so impatient plight!
What fury, or what fiend with felon deeds,
Hath stirred up to mischievous delight! Spenser.

Then bids prepare th' hospitable treat,
Vain shews of love to veil his felon hate. Pope's Odyssey.

FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; traitorous; villa-nous; malignant; perfidious; destructive.
This man conceived the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception is in the clouds. Watson.

O thieves' night!
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd the lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller? Milton.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen and dies. Dryden.

FELONIOUSLY. adj. [from felonious.] In a felonious way.
FELONOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; felonious.
I am like for desperate dole to die,
Through felonious force of mine enemy. Spenser's Pastoral.

FELONY. n. f. [felonie, Fr. felonía, low Latin, from felon.] A crime denounced capital by the law; an enormous crime.
I will make it felony to drink small beer. Shakesp. Henry VI.

FELT. The preterite of FEEL, which see.
1. Cloth made of wool united without weaving.
It were a delicate stratagem to thee
A troop of horse with felt. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. A hide or skin.
To know whether sheep are found or not, see that the felt be loose. Morimer's Husbandry.

To FELT, v. a. [from the noun.] To unite without weaving.
The same wool one man felt into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into kersey. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To FELTRE, v. a. [from felt.] To clot together like felt.
His felted locks, that on his bosom fell,
On rugged mountains briars and thorns resemble. Fairfax.

FELUCCA. n. f. [felu, Fr. feluca, Arab.] A small open boat with six oars. D'A.

FEMALE. n. f. [femelle, French; femella, Latin.] A female;
one of the sex which brings young.
God created man in his own image, male and female created he them. Gen. i. 27.

Man, more divine,
Lord of the wide world, and wide wat'ry seas,
Indu'd with intellectual sense and soul,
Are masters to their females, and their lords. Shakespeare.

FEMALE. adj.
1. Not masculine; belonging to a female.
If by a female hand he had foreseen
He was to die, his wife had rather been
The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen. Dryden.

2. FEMALE

FEN

2. FEMALE Rhymes. Double rhymes so called, because in French, from which the term is taken, they end in a weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:
Th' excess of heat is but a fable;
We know the torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.

The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spaniard promiscuously, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems. Dryden's Preface to Ann. Mirab.

FEME COVERT. n. f. [French.] A married woman; who is also said to be under covert baron. Blount.

FEME SOL. n. f. [French.] A single woman; an unmarried woman. Blount.

FEMINAILITY. n. f. [from femina, Latin.] Female nature.
If in the minority of natural vigour the parts of femininity take place, upon the increase or growth thereof the masculine appears. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 17.

FEMININE. adj. [femininus, Latin.]
1. Of the sex that brings young; female.
Thus we chastise the god of wine
With water that is feminine,
Until the cooler nymph abate
His wrath, and so congregate. Cleaveland.

2. Soft; tender; delicate.
Her heav'nly form
Angelick, but more soft and feminine. Milton's Parad. Lost.

3. Effeminate; emasculated.
Ninias was no man of war at all, but altogether feminine and subjected to ease and delicacy. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

FEMININE. n. f. A fife; one of the sex that brings young;
a female.
O! why did God create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature? And not fill the world at once With men, as angels, without feminine? Milt. Par. Lost.

FEMORAL. adj. [femorialis, Latin.] Belonging to the thigh.
The largest crooked needle should be used in taking up the femoral arteries in amputation. Sharp's Surgery.

FEN. n. f. [penn, Saxon; venne, Dutch.] A marsh; low flat and moist ground; a moor; a bog.
Mexico is a city that stands in the midst of a great marsh or fen. Abbott's Description of the World.

I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen. Shakesp. Coriolan.

You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate,
As reek o' th' rotten fen. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The surface is of black fen earth. Woodward on Fossils.
He to Portina's wat'ry marishes went;
A long canal the muddy fen divides,
And with a clear unfilmy current glides. Addison.

FENBERRY. n. f. [fen and berry.] A kind of blackberry. Skinner.

FENCE. n. f. [from fence.]
1. Guard; security; outwork; defence.
That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors. Decay of Poetry.

There's no fence against inundations, earthquakes, or hurricanes. L'Estrange, Fable 167.

To put them out of their parents' view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them. Locke.

Let us bear this awful corps to Caesar,
And lay it in his fight, that it may stand
A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath. Addison's Cato.

2. Inclosure; mound; hedge.
In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main;
Th' eternal fences overlap,
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden's Horace.

Of the vast mound that binds the Lucrine lake?
Or the disdainful sea, that, shut from thence,
Roars round the structure, and invades the fence? Dryden.

Employ their wives and unavailing care,
To pass the fences and surprise the fair. Pope.

3. The art of fencing; defence.
I bruised my skin th' other day, with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

4. Skill in defence.
I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despite his nice fence and his active practice. Shakespeare.

To FENCE, v. a.
1. To inclose; to secure by an inclosure or hedge.
Th' inhabitants each pasture and each plain Destroyed have, each field to waste is laid;
In fenced towers bestow'd is their grain,
Before thou cam'st this kingdom to invade. Fairfax, b. ii.

He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass, and set darkness in my paths. Job xix. 8.

FEN

Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bones and sinews. Job x. 11.

He went about to make a bridge to a strong city, which was fenced about with walls. 2 Mac. xii. 13.

See that the churchyard be fenced in with a decent rail, of other inclosure. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. To guard.
So much of adders wisdom I have learnt,
To fence my ear against thy forgeries. Milton's Agonistes.

With love to friend, th' impatient lover went,
Fenc'd from the thorns, and trod the deep descent. Dryden.

To FENCE, v. n.
1. To practise the arts of manual defence; to practise the use of weapons.
He having got some iron, should have it beaten into swords, and put into his servants' hands to fence with, and bang one another. Locke.

2. To guard against; to act on the defensive.
Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against. Locke.

3. To fight according to art.
If a thistle-fing, he falls strait a capering;
He will fence with his own shadow. Shak. Merch. of Venice.

A beauteous heifer in the wood is bred;
The flopping warriors, aiming head to head,
Engage their clashing horns; with dreadful sound
The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound;
They fence and push, and, pushing, loudly roar,
Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in gore. Dryden.

A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies and gamesters company. Locke.

These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgelplying. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

FENCELESS. adj. [from fence.] Without inclosure; open.
Each motion of the heart rises to fury,
And love in their weak bosoms is a rage
As terrible as hate, and as destructive;
So the wind roars o'er the wide fenel's ocean,
And heaves the billows of the boiling deep,
Alike from North, from South, from East, from West. Rawley's Fane Shore.

FENCER. n. f. [from fence.] One who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.
Calmness is great advantage: he that lets
Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets;
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.

A nimble fencer will put in a thrust so quick, that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off. Digby.

FENCIBLE. adj. [from fence.] Capable of defence. Addison.

FENCINGMASTER. n. f. [fence and master.] One who teaches the use of weapons. Addison.

FENCINGSCHOOL. n. f. [fence and school.] A place in which the use of weapons is taught.
If a man be to prepare his son for duels, I had rather mine should be a good wrestler than an ordinary fencer, which is the most a gentleman can attain to, unless he will be constantly in the fencing-school, and every day exercising. Locke.

To FEND, v. n. [from fend.] To keep off; to shut out.
Spread with straw the bedding of thy fold,
With fern beneath, to fend the bitter cold. Dryden's Virgil.

To FEND, v. n. To dispute; to shift off a charge.
The dexterous management of terms, and being able to fend and prove with them, passes for a great part of learning;
but it is learning distinct from knowledge. Locke.

FENDER. n. f. [from fend.]
1. An iron plate laid before the fire to hinder coals that fall from rolling forward to the floor.
2. Any thing laid or hung at the side of a ship to keep off violence. Locke.

FENERATION. n. f. [feneratio, Latin.] Usury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending.
The hare figured not only puffanimity and timidity from its temper, but feneration and usury from its fecundity and superfecundation. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 17.

FENUGREEK. n. f. [fenum Græcum, Latin.] A plant.
It hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a pod, somewhat plain, shaped like a horn, and full of seeds, for the most part rhomboid or kidney-shaped. Müller.

FENNEL. n. f. [fœniculum, Latin.] A plant of strong scent.
It is an umbelliferous plant, whose leaves are divided into capillaceous jags: the petals of the flower are intire, and placed orbicularly, expanding in form of a rose: each flower is succeeded by two oblong thick gibbous seeds, chauced on one side, and plain on the other. Miller.

A fav'ry odour blown, more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at ev'n. Milton.

FENNELFLOWER. n. f. A plant.

FENNELGIANT. n. f. A plant.

FER

It hath a large succulent milky root: the stalks are spongy, and filled with pith: the flowers consist of many leaves, expanded in form of a rose, growing in an umbel: each flower is succeeded by two large oval-shaped flat seeds, which are very thin, and turn black when ripe: the leaves are like those of fennel.

Miller.

FERNY, adj. [from fern.]

1. Marthy; boggy; moorish.

Driving in of piles is used for stone or brick houses, and that only where the ground proves fenny or moorish. Moxon.

The hungry crocodile, and hissing snake,

Lurk in the trouble'd stream and fenny brake. Prior.

2. Inhabiting the marsh.

Fillet of a fenny snake,

In the caudron boil and bake. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

FERNYSTONES, n. s. A plant.

FENSUCKED, adj. [from fen and suck.] Sucked out of marshes.

Infect her beauty,

You fensuck'd fogs, drawn by the pow'ful fun. Sh. K. Lear.

FEOD, n. s. [from feodum, low Latin.] Fee; tenure. Dict.

FEODAL, adj. [from feodal, French, from feod.] Held from another.

FEODARY, n. s. [from feodum, Latin.] One who holds his estate under the tenure of fuit and service to a superior lord.

FEOFF, v. a. [from feoff, French; feoffare, low Latin.]

To put in possession; to invest with right.

FEOFFER, n. s. [from feoffatus, Latin; feoffe, French.] One put in possession.

The late earl of Desmond, before his breaking forth into rebellion, conveyed secretly all his lands to feoffe in trust, in hope to have cut off her majesty from the elcheat of his lands.

Spenker's State of Ireland.

FEOFFMENT, n. s. [from feoffmentum, Latin.] The act of granting possession.

Any gift or grant of any honours, castles, lands, or other immoveable things, to another in fee-simple, that is, to him and his heirs for ever, by the delivery of seisin of the thing given: when it is in writings, it is called a deed of feoffment; and in every feoffment the giver is called the feoffor, feoffator, and he that receiveth by virtue thereof the feoffee, feoffatus.

The proper difference between a feoffor and a donor is, that the feoffor gives in fee-simple, the donor in fee-tail. Covel.

The act of parliament cut off and frustrated all such conveyances as had, by the space of twelve years before his rebellion, been made; within the compass whereof the fraudulent feoffment of others, his accomplices and fellow traitors, were contained.

FERACITY, n. s. [from feracitas, Lat.] Fruitfulness; fertility. Dict.

FERAL, adj. [from feralis, Latin.] Funereal; mournful; deadly.

FERIATION, n. s. [from feriatio, Lat.] The act of keeping holiday; cessation from work.

As though there were any feriation in nature, this season is commonly termed the physicians vacation. Brown's Vulg. Err.

FERRINE, adj. [from ferinus, Latin.] Wild; savage.

The only difficulty that remains is touching those ferine, noxious, and untameable beasts; as lions, tigers, wolves and bears.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FERNENESS, n. s. [from ferine.] Barbarity; savageness; wildness.

A ferine and necessitous kind of life, a conversation with those that were fallen into a barbarous habit of life, would assimilate the next generation to barbarism and ferineness. Hale.

FERTITY, n. s. [from feritas, Latin.] Barbarity; cruelty; wildness; savageness.

He reduced him from the most abject and stupid ferity to his senses, and to sober reason. Woodward's Natural History.

TO FERMENT, v. a. [from fermento, Latin; fermenter, French.]

To exalt or rarify by intestine motion of parts.

Ye vigorous swains! while youth ferments your blood,

Now range the hills, the thickest woods beset,

Wind the thrill horn, or spread the waving net. Pope.

TO FERMENT, v. n. To have the parts put into intestine motion.

FERMENT, n. s. [from ferment, French; fermentum, Latin.]

1. That which causes intestine motion.

The semen puts female into a fever, upon impregnation; and all animal humours which poison, are putrefying ferments.

Floyer on the Humours.

Subdue and cool the ferment of desire. Rogers's Sermons.

2. The intestine motion; tumult.

FERMENTABLE, adj. [from ferment.] Capable of fermentation.

FERMENTAL, adj. [from ferment.] Having the power to cause fermentation.

Cucumbers, being waterfilled, fill the veins with crude and windy ferocities; that contain little fat or spirit, and debilitate the vital acidity and fermental faculty of the stomach. Brown.

FERMENTATION, n. s. [from fermentatio, Latin.] A slow motion of the intestine particles of a mixt body, arising usually from the operation of some active acid matter, which rarifies, exalts, and subtilizes the soft and sulphureous particles: as when leaven or yeast rarifies, lightens, and ferments bread or wort, &c. And this motion differs much from that usually called ebullition or effervescence, which is a violent boiling and struggling between an acid and an alkali, when mixed together.

The juice of grapes, after fermentation, will yield a spiritus ardens.

A man, by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new kind of fermentation; which works them into a finer body, and makes them much clearer than they were before.

The sap, in fluent dence, And lively fermentation, mountings, spreads All this innumerable colour'd scene of things. Thomson.

FERMENTATIVE, adj. [from ferment.] Causing fermentation; having the power to cause fermentation.

Aromatick spirits destroy by their fermentative heat. Arbutn.

FERN, n. s. [from fern, Saxon.] A plant.

The male fern is common on the stumps of trees in woods, and on the banks of ditches: the leaves are formed of a number of small pinnules, denuded on the edges, and set close by one another on slender ribs. On the back of these pinnules are produced the seeds, small and extremely numerous. Deciduous of the root and diet-drinks have been used in chronic disorders and obstructions. The country people esteem it a sovereign remedy for the rickets in children.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood,

Horrid with fern, and intricate with thorn;

Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn. Dryden's Æneid.

There are great varieties of fern in different parts of the world; but they are seldom cultivated in gardens. Miller.

FERNY, adj. [from fern.] Overgrown with fern.

The herd suffic'd, did late repair

To ferny heaths, and to their forest-lare. Dryden.

FEROCIOUS, adj. [from ferox, Latin; feroce, French.]

1. Savage; fierce.

2. Ravenous; rapacious.

The hare, that becometh a prey unto man, unto beasts and fowls of the air, is fruitful even unto superfecundation; but the lion and ferocious animal hath young ones but seldom, and but one at a time.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 16.

Smidley roars in majesty of mud;

Shaking the horrors of his ample brows,

And each ferocious feature grim with ooze.

FET

How should our fevered sores be cured? Hooker, b. i.
Inward corruption and infected sin,
Not purg'd, not heal'd, behind remained still,
And fevering sore did rattle yet within. Fairy Queen, b. i.
I have some wounds upon me, and they smart
To hear themselves remember'd.
—Well might they fever 'gainst ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Mind that their souls
May make a peaceful and a sweet retire
From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor bodies Must lie and fever. Shakespeare's Henry V.
There was imagination, that between a knight whom the duke had taken into some good degree of favour, and Felton, there had been ancient quarrels not yet well healed, which might perhaps be fevering in his breast, and by a certain inflammation produce this effect. Watson.
Passion, anger, and unkindness may give a wound that shall bleed and smart; but it is treachery only that makes it fever. South's Sermons.
Word not in use.

FESTINATE. adj. [festinatus, Latin.] Hasty; hurried. A

Like a shifted wind unto a fall,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about. Shakespeare.

FETCH. n. f. [from the verb.] A stratagem by which any thing is indirectly performed; by which one thing seems intended and another is done; a trick; an artifice.

An envious neighbour is easy to find,
His cumbersome fetches are seldom behind:
His fetch is to flatter, to get what he can;
His purpose once gotten, a pin for thee than. Tuff. Husband.

It is a fetch of wit;
You laying these slight follies on my son,
As 'twere a thing a little foil'd i' th' working. Shak. Hamlet.
But Sidrophel, as full of tricks
As rota men of politics,
Straight cast about to over-reach
Th' unwary conqueror with a fetch. Hudibras, p. ii.
With this fetch he laughs at the trick he hath plaid me. Still.
The fox had a fetch in't. L'Estrange, Fob. 42.

crates, which some learned physicians have of late revived, that the fetus respire in the womb. Boyle.

FETTER. n. f. [from fet.] Quarrel; contention; opposition; war.

Though men would find such mortal fetters
In sharing of their publick goods. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. i.
In former ages it was a constant policy of France to raise and cherish intestine fetters and discords in the ile of Great Britain. Addison's Freeholder.

Our guilty wars, and earth's remotest regions
Lie half unpeopled by the fetters of Rome. Addison's Cato.
FETTER. adj. [from fet.] Pertaining to fess, fess, or tenures by which lands are held of a superiour lord.

FETTER. n. f. A dependence; something held by tenure;
a fee; a fee.

Wales, that was not always the feudal territory of England, having been governed by a prince of their own, had laws utterly strange to the laws of England. Hale.

FEUDATORY. n. f. [from feudal.] One who holds not in chief,
but by some conditional tenure from a superiour.

The duke of Parma was reasonably well tempted to be true to that enterprise, by no less promise than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the signory in chief of the pope, and the protection of the king of Spain.

FEVER. n. f. [fevere, French; febris, Latin.] A disease in which the body is violently heated, and the pulse quickened, or in which heat and cold prevail by turns. It is sometimes continual, sometimes intermittent.

FEW

Think't thou the fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bending? Shak. H. V.
Duncan is in his grave;
After life's fitful fever he sleeps well. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Should not a ling'ring fever be remov'd,
Because it long has rag'd within my blood? Dryden.
He had never dream'd in his life, 'till he had the fever he was then newly recovered of. Locke.

To FEVER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a fever.
The white hand of a lady fever thee!
Shake to look on't. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

FEVERET. n. f. [from fever.] A light fever; febricula.
A light feveret, or an old quartan ague, is not a sufficient excuse for non-appearance. Ayliffe's Parergon.

FEVERFEW. n. f. [febris and fugo, Latin.]
It has a fibrore root: the leaves are conjugated, and divided into many segments: the cup of the flower is squamose and hemispherical: the flowers grow in an umbel upon the top of the stalks, and the rays of the flower are generally white.
The species are nine; but the first, called common feverfew, is the sort used in medicine, and is found wild in many parts of England; but is, however, cultivated in medicinal gardens. Müller.

FEVERISH. adj. [from fever.]
1. Troubled with a fever.
To other climates beasts and birds retire,
And feverish nature burns in her own fire. Creech.

When an animal that gives suck turns feverish, that is, its juices more alkaline, the milk turns from its native genuine whiteness to yellow. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Tending to a fever.
A feverish disorder disabled me. Swift to Pope.
Uncertain; inconstant; now hot, now cold.
We toils and turn about our feverish will,
When all our ease must come by lying still;
For all the happiness mankind can gain,
Is not in pleasure, but in rest from pain. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

4. Hot; burning.
And now four days the sun had seen our woes,
Four nights the moon beheld th' incessant fire;
It seem'd as if the stars more sickly rose,
And farther from the feverish North retire. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

FEVERISHNESS. n. f. [from feverish.] A light disorder of the feverish kind.

FEVEROUS. adj. [fevroux, French, from fever.]

Were feverous, and did tremble. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

2. Having the nature of a fever.
All fev'rous kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs. Milton's Per. Lost.

3. Having a tendency to produce fevers.
It hath been noted by the ancients, that southern winds, blowing much, without rain, do cause a feverous disposition of the year; but with rain, not. Bacon's Natural History.

FEVERY. adj. [from fever.] Diseased with a fever.
O Rome, thy head
Is drown'd in sleep, and all thy body fev'ry. B. John's Catil.

FEUILLAGE. n. f. [French.] A bunch or row of leaves.
I have done Homer's head; and I inclose the outline, that you may determine whether you would have it so large, or reduced to make room for feuillage or laurel round the oval.

FEUILLEMORT. n. f. [French.] The colour of a faded leaf, corrupted commonly to philemt.

FETTERER. n. f. A dogkeeper: perhaps the cleaner of the kennel.

FEW. adj. [few, peopa, Saxon; faa, Danish.]
1. Not many; not in a great number.

We are left but few of many. Jer.
So much the thirst of honour fires the blood;
So many would be great, to few be good;
For who would virtue for herself regard,
Or wed without the portion of reward? Dryd. Juvenal.

On Winter seas we fewer storms behold,
Than foul diseases that infect the fold. Dryden's Virg. Geor.
Men have fewer or more simple ideas from without, according as the objects they converse with afford greater or less variety. Locke.

The fewer still you name, you wound the more;
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score. Pope's Hor. Imitat.
Party is the madness of many, for the gain of a few. Swift.
The imagination of a poet is a thing so nice and delicate, that it is no easy matter to find out images capable of giving pleasure to one of the few, who, in any age, have come up to that character. Berkley to Pope.

2. Sometimes elliptically; not many words.
To answer both allegations at once, the very substance of that they contain is in few but this. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

FÉWEL. n. f. [feu, French.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire: as firewood, coal.
 If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts, must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are as dry fewel, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions and broils? Hooker, Dedication.
 Others may give the fewel or the fire;
 But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire. Denham.
 A known quantity of fewel, all kindled at once, will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it. Bentley's Sermons.
TO FÉWEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fewel.
 Never, alas! the dreadful name,
 That fewels the infernal flame. Cowley.
FÉWNESS. n. f. [from fewel.]
 1. Paucity; smallness of number.
 These, by reason of their fewness, I could not distinguish from the numbers of the rest with whom they are embodied. Dryden's Preface to the Hind and Panther.
 2. Paucity of words; brevity; conciseness.
Keats's and truth, 'tis thus. Shakes. Meaf. for Measure.
TO FEY. v. a. [veghen, Dutch.] To cleanse a ditch of mud.
 Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field,
 That all a dry Summer no water will yield,
 By feying and casting that mud upon heaps,
 Commodities many the husbandman reaps. Tuff. Husband.
FIB. n. f. [A cant word among children.] A lie; a falsehood.
 Destroy his fib or fopphry; in vain,
 The creature's at his dirty work again. Pope's Epistles.
 I so often lie,
 Scarce Harvey's self has told more *fib*s than I. Pope.
TO FIB. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie; to tell lies; to speak falsely.
 If you have any particular mark, whereby one may know when you fib, and when you speak truth, you had best tell it me. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
FIBBER. n. f. [from fib.] A teller of *fib*s.
FIBRE. n. f. [fibra, Fr. fibra, Latin.] A small thread or string; the first constituent parts of bodies.
 Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
 And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.
 2. A fib, in physics, is an animal thread, of which there are different kinds: some are soft, flexible, and a little elastic; and these are either hollow, like small pipes, or spongy and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres: others are more solid, flexible, and with a strong elasticity or spring, as the membranous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Now of all these some are very sensible, and others destitute of all sense: some so very small as not to be easily perceived; and others, on the contrary, so big as to be plainly seen; and most of them, when examined with a microscope, appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves, veins, arteries and muscles. And again, by the various texture and different combination of some or all of those parts, the more compound organs are framed; such as the lungs, stomach, liver, legs and arms, the sum of all which make up the body. Quincy.
 My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
 And every slacken'd fib drops its hold,
 Like nature letting down the springs of life:
 The name of father awes me still. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.
FIBRIL. n. f. [fibrella, French.] A small fibre or string.
 The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little fibrils bound together, and divided into little cells. Cheyne's 1st Prin.
FIBROUS. adj. [fibreus, French, from fibra.] Composed of fibres or lamina.
 The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viscidous is plain; for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a greediness of moisture. Bacon's Natural History.
 I saw Petreus' arms employ'd around
 A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;
 This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bands,
 The trunk was like a sapling in his hands. Dryden.
 The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestines. Arbutnot on Aliments.
FIBULA. n. f. [Latin.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg, and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle. Quincy.
FICKLE. adj. [picol, Saxon.] Changeable; unconstant; irresolute; wavering; unsteady; mutable; changeful; without steady adherence.

FID

- Remember where we are,
 In France amongst a fickle wavering nation. Shak. Hen. VI.
 A slave, whose easy borrow'd pride
 Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows. Shak. K. Lear.
 Or likeliest hovering dreams,
 The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train. Milton.
 They know how fickle common lovers are;
 Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
 For few there are but have been once deceiv'd. Dryden.
 We in vain the fickle sex pursue,
 Who change the constant lover for the new. Prior.
 2. Not fixed; subject to vicissitude.
 He would be loth
 Us to abolish; left the adversary
 Triumph, and say, fickle their state, whom God
 Most favours! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
FICKLENESS. n. f. [from fickle.] Inconstancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.
 Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness; but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Baccha of whom the complained. Sidney.
 Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness,
 In choice and change of thy dear loved dame. Fairy Queen.
 I am a soldier, and unapt to weep,
 Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness. Shakes. Henry VI.
 Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another, since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences. Addison's Freeholders, N^o. 25.
 Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell, I found that what the liked one day he disliked another. Addison.
FICKLY. adv. [from fickle.] Without certainty or stability.
 Do not now,
 Like a young wasteful heir, mortgage the hopes
 Of godlike majesty on bankrupt terms,
 To raise a present pow'r that's fickly held
 By the frail tenure of the people's will. Southern.
FICCO. n. f. [Italian.] An act of contempt done with the fingers, expelling a fig for you.
 Having once recovered his fortrefs, he then gives the fig to all that his adversaries can by siege, force, or famine attempt against him. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
FICTILE. adj. [fictilis, Latin.] Moulded into form; manufactured by the potter.
 The cause of fragility is an impotency to be extended; and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so fictile earth is more fragil than crude earth. Bacon's Nat. History.
FICTITON. n. f. [fictio, Latin; fictio, French.]
 1. The act of feigning or inventing.
 If the presence of God in the image, by a mere fictio of the mind, be a sufficient ground to worship that image, is not God's real presence in every creature a far better ground to worship it? Stillingfleet.
Fiction is of the essence of poetry, as well as of painting: there is a resemblance in one of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real; and in the other of a true story by a fictio. Dryden's Dunciad.
 2. The thing feigned or invented.
 If through mine ears pierce any consolations,
 By wife discourse, sweet tunes, or poets fictions;
 If ought I cease these hideous exclamations,
 While that my soul, fic, the lives in affliction. Sidney.
 So also was the fictio of those golden apples kept by a dragon, taken from the serpent, which tempted Evah. Raleigh.
 3. A falsehood; a lie.
FICTITIOUS. adj. [fictus, Latin.] Fictitious; imaginary; invented. A word coined by Prior.
 With fancy'd rules and arbitrary laws
 Matter and motion man restrains,
 And study'd lines and fictitious circles draws. Prior.
FICTITIOUSLY. adv. [fictitius, Latin.]
 1. Counterfeit; false; not genuine.
 Draw him strictly so,
 That all who view the piece may know
 He needs no trappings of fictitious fame. Dryden.
 2. Feigned; imaginary.
 The human persons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and Belinda resembles you in nothing but in beauty. Pope.
 3. Not real; not true.
 Milton, sensible of this defect in the subject of his poem, brought into it two characters of a shadowy and fictitious nature, in the persons of sin and death, by which means he has interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. Addison's Spect.
FICTITIOUSLY. adv. [from fictitious.] Falsely; counterfeitedly.
 These pieces are fictitiously set down, and have no copy in nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 20.

 Let no fawcy fiddler presume to intrude,
 Unless he is sent for to vary our bliss. Ben. Johnson.
 Nero put the fiddlers to death, for being more skillful in the trade than he was. Taylor's Rule of living.
 These will appear such chits in story,
 'Twill turn all politics to jests,
 To be repeated like John Dory,
 When fiddlers sing at feasts. Dryden.
 When mis delights in her spinnet,
 A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.
FIDDESTICK. n. f. [fiddle and stick.] The bow and hair which a fiddler draws over the strings of a fiddle.
 His grilly beard was long and thick,
 With which he strung his fiddlestick. Hudibras, p. i.
FIDDESTRING. n. f. [fiddle and string.] The string of a fiddle; that which makes the noise.
 A fiddlestring, moistened with water, will sink a note in a little time, and consequently must be relaxed or lengthened one sixteenth. Arbutnot on Air.
FIDELITATY. n. f. [fidelitas, Latin; fidélité, French.]
 1. Honesty; veracity.
 The church, by her public reading of the book of God, preached only as a witness; now the principal thing required in a witness is a fidelity. Hooker, b. v. f. 19.
 2. Faithful adherence.
 They mistake credulity for fidelity. Clarke.
TO FIDGE. v. n. [A cant word.] To move nimbly and to fidget. Irregularly. It implies in Scotland agitation.
 Tim, thou'rt the Funch to stir up trouble in;
 You wriggle, fidge, and make a rout,
 Put all your brother puppets out;
 Run on in a perpetual round,
 To tease, perplex, disturb, confound. Swift.
FIDUCIAL. adj. [fiducia, Latin.] Confident; undoubting.
 Faith is cordial, and such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obediential submission to the commands. Hammond's Pract. Catech.
FIDUCIARY. n. f. [fiduciarius, Latin.]
 1. One who holds any thing in trust.
 2. One who depends on faith without works.
 The second obstructive is that of the fiduciary, that faith is the only instrument of his justification; and excludes good works from contributing any thing toward it. Hammond.
FIDUCIARY. adj.
 1. Confident; steady; undoubting; untouched with doubt.
 That faith, which is required of us, is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiduciary assent to whatever the Gospel has revealed. Wake's Preparation for Death.
 2. Not to be doubted.
 Eliaiana can rely no where upon mere love and fiduciary obedience, unless at her own home, where she is exemplarily loyal to herself in a high exact obedience. Hawel's Voc. Forest.
FIEF. n. f. [féf, French.] A fee; a manor; a possession held by some tenure of a superior.
 To the next realm the stretch'd her fway,
 For painture near adjoining lay,
 A plenteous province and alluring prey;
 A chamber of dependencies was fram'd,
 And the whole féf, in right of poetry, the claim'd. Dryd.
 As they were honoured by great privileges, so their lands were in the nature of fiefs, for which the possessors were obliged to do personal service at sea. Arbutnot on Coins.

FIE

- FIELD. n. f. [fele, Saxon; feld, German; veld, Dutch.]

And cull'd these fiery spirits from the world,
To outlook conquest, and to win renown
Ev'n in the jaws of danger and of death. Shak. K. John.
4. Passionate; outrageous; easily provoked.
You know the fiery quality of the duke;
How unremovable, and fixt he is In his own course. Shakespeare's King Lear.
5. Unrestrained; fierce.
Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,
Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed,
Which his inspiring rider seem'd to know,
With flow but stately pace kept on his course. Shak. R. II.
Through Elis and the Grecian towns he flew;
Th' audacious wretch four fiery couriers drew. Dryden.
6. Heated by fire.
The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut, by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burn by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooker, b. v. 54.

FIG

See! from the brake the whirring pheasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant wings;
Short is his joy; he feels the fiery wound,
Flutters in blood, and panting beats the ground. Pope.
FIFE, n. f. [ffire, French.] A pipe blown to the drum; military wind-musick.
Farewell the plumed troops, and the big war
That make ambition virtue! oh farewell!
Farewell the neighing feed and the shrill trump,
The spirit-stirring drum, th' ear-piercing fife. Shak. Othello.
Thus the gay victim, with fresh garlands crown'd,
Pleas'd with the sacred fife's enlivening sound,
Through gazing crowds in solemn state proceeds. Phillips.

In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love. Dryden.
Just as I will'd, the lots were cast on four.
Myself the fifth. Pope's Odyssey, b. ix.
2. All the ordinals are taken elliptically for the part which they express: a fifth, a fifth part; a third, a third part.
The publick shall have lost four fifths of its annual income for ever. Swift.
FIFTHLY, adv. [from fifth.] In the fifth place.
Fifthly, living creatures have a more exact figure than plants. Bacon's Natural History, No. 607.
FIFTIETH, adj. [pyfcoða, Saxon.] The ordinal of fifty.
If this medium be rarer within the sun's body, than at its surface, and rarer there than at the hundred part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the fiftieth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturn, I see no reason why the increase of density should stop any where. Newton's Opt.
FIFTY, adj. [pyfrix, Saxon.] Five tens.
A wither'd hermit, five score Winters worn,
Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. Shakespeare.
Judas ordained captains over thousands, hundreds, fifties, and tens. 1 Mac. iii. 55.

4. It has with before the person opposed.
5. To contend.
The hot and cold, the dry and humid fight. Sandys.
To FIGHT, v. a. To war against; to combat against.
Himself alone, an equal match he boasts,
To fight the Phrygian and the Ausonian hosts. Dryd. Æn.
FIGHT, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Battle.
2. Combat; duel.
Herilus in single fight I flew,
Whom with three lives Perona did endure;
And thrice I sent him to the Stygian shore,
Till the last ebbing soul return'd no more. Dryden's Æn.
3. Something to screen the combatants in ships.
FIGHTER, n. f. [from fight.] Warrior; duellist.
I will return again into the house, and desire some conduct of the lady: I am no fighter. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
O, 'tis the coldest youth upon a charge,
The most deliberate fighter! Dryden's All for Love.
FIGHTING, participle adj. [from fight.]
1. Qualified for war; fit for battle.
An host of fighting men went out to war by bands. 2 Chron.
2. Occupied by war; being the scene of war.
In fighting fields, as far the spear I throw
As flies the arrow from the well-drawn bow. Pope's Odyssey.
FIGMENT, n. f. [figmentum, Latin.] An invention; a fiction; the idea feigned.
Upon the like grounds was raised the figment of Briareus, who, dwelling in a city call'd Hecatonchiria, the fancies of those times assigned him an hundred hands. Brown's Vulg. Err.
The most frightful passages, probably so strange as to be hardly credible; it carried rather an appearance of figment and invention, in those that handed down the memory of it, than of truth and reality. Woodward's Natural History.
FIGPECKER, n. f. [fig and peck.] A bird.
FIGULATE, adj. [from figulus, Latin.] Made of potters clay.
FIGURABLE, adj. [from figura, Latin.] Capable of being brought to certain form, and retained in it. Thus lead is figurabilis, but not water.
The differences of impenetrable and impenetrable, figurabilis and not figurabilis, scissible and not scissible, are plebeian notions. Bacon's Natural History.
FIGURABILITY, n. f. [from figurabilis.] The quality of being capable of a certain and stable form.
FIGURAL, adj. [from figura.]
1. Represented by delineation.
Incongruities have been committed by geographers in the figural resemblances of several regions. Brown's Vulg. Err.
2. FIGURAL Numbers. Such numbers as do or may represent some geometrical figure, in relation to which they are always considered, and are either lineary, superficial, or solid. Harris.
FIGURATE, adj. [figuratus, Latin.]
1. Of a certain and determinate form.
Plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not; for look how far the spirit is able to spread and continue itself, so far goeth the shape or figure, and then is determined. Bacon.
2. Resembling any thing of a determinate form: as, figurate stones retaining the forms of shells in which they were formed by the deluge.
3. FIGURATE Counterpoint. [In musick.] That wherein there is a mixture of discords along with the concords. Harris.
5. FIGURATE Descant. [In musick.] That wherein discords are concerned, as well, though not so much, as concords; and may well be termed the ornament or rhetorical part of musick, in regard that in this are introduced all the varieties of points, figures, syncopes, diversities of measures, and whatever else is capable of adorning the composition. Harris.
FIGURATION, n. f. [figuratus, Latin.]
1. Determination to a certain form.
Neither doth the wind, as far as it carrieth a voice, with motion thereof confound any of the delicate and articulate figurations of the air in variety of words. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. The act of giving a certain form.

FIG

If motion be in a certain order, there followeth vivification and figuration in living creatures perfect. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
FIGURATIVE, adj. [figurativus, Fr. from figura, Latin.]
1. Representing something else; typical; representative.
This, they will say, was figurative, and served by God's appointment but for a time, to shadow out the true everlasting glory of a more divine sanctity; where into Christ being long since entered, it seemeth that all these curious exhortations should rather cease. Hooker, b. v. f. 15.
2. Changed by rhetorical figures from the primitive meaning;
not literal.
How often have we been rail'd at for understanding words in a figurative sense, which cannot be literally understood without overthrowing the plainest evidence of sense and reason. Sillingsfleet's Def. of Diss. on Rom. Idol.
This is a figurative expression, where the words are used in a different sense from what they signify in their first ordinary intention. Rogers's Sermon 14.
3. Full of figures; full of rhetorical exhortations; full of changes from the original sense.
Sublime subjects ought to be adorned with the sublimest and with the most figurative expressions. Dryden's Juvenal, Pref.
FIGURATIVELY, adv. [from figurative.] By a figure; in a sense different from that which words originally imply; not literally.
The custom of the apostle is figuratively to transfer to himself, in the first person, what belongs to others. Hammond.
The words are different, but the sense is still the same; for therein are figuratively intended Uzziah and Ezechias. Brown.
Satyr is a kind of poetry in which human vices are reprehended, partly dramatically, partly simply; but, for the most part, figuratively and occultly. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedicat.
1. The form of any thing as terminated by the outline.
Flowers have all exquisite figures, and the flower numbers are chiefly five and four; as in primroses, briar-roses, single muskroses, single pinks and gilliflowers, &c. which have five leaves; lilies, flower-de-luces, borages, buglafs, &c. which have four leaves. Bacon's Natural History.
Men find green clay that is soft as long as it is in the water, so that one may print on it all kind of figures, and give it what shape one pleases. Boyle.
Figures are properly modifications of bodies; for pure space is not any where terminated, nor can be: whether there be or be not body in it, it is uniformly continued. Lake.
2. Shape; form; semblance.
He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion. Shakespeare.
3. Person; external form; appearance graceful or inelegant, mean or grand.
The blue German shall the Tigris drink,
E'er I, forsaking gratitude and truth,
Forget the figure of that godlike youth. Dryden's Virgil.
I was charmed with the gracefulness of his figure and delivery, as well as with his discourses. Addison's Spectator.
A good figure, or person, in man or woman, gives credit at first sight to the choice of either. Clarissa.
4. Distinguished appearance; eminence; remarkable character.
While fortune favour'd, while his arms support
I made some figure there; nor was my name Obscure, nor I without my share of fame. Dryden's Æn.
The speech, I believe, was not so much designed by the knight to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country. Addison's Spectator.
Not a woman shall be unexplained that makes a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow. Addison's Guardian.
Whether or no they have done well to let you up for making another kind of figure, time will witness. Addison.
Many princes made very ill figures upon the throne, who before were the favourites of the people. Addison's Freeholder.
5. A statue; an image; something formed in resemblance of somewhat else.
The several statues, which seem'd at a distance to be made of the whitest marble, were nothing else but so many figures in snow. Addison's Freeholder.
6. Representations in painting; persons exhibited in colours.
In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the fineness of his art; for in them consists the principal beauty of his work. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
My favourite books and pictures sell;
Kindly throw in a little figure,
And set the price upon the bigger. Prior.
7. Arrangement; disposition; modification.
The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with the parts of the question. Watson's Logic.
8. A character denoting a number.
Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number
His love to Anthony. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop. tra.
He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great

great task; but that is ever good for the publick: but he that plots to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age.

As in accounts cyphers and figures pass for real sums, so in human affairs words pass for things themselves. South's Sermon.

The horoscope; the diagram of the aspects of the astrological houses.

We do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortune-telling: the works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and dawning beyond our element. Shakespeare.

He set a figure to discover

If you were fled to Rye or Dover. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 1.

Figure flingers and star-gazers pretend to foretell the fortunes of kingdoms, and have no foresight in what concerns themselves.

L'Estrange, Fable 94.

[In theology.] Type representative.

Who was the figure of him that is to come. Romans.

[In rhetoric.] Any mode of speaking in which words are detorted from their literal and primitive sense. In strict acceptance, the change of a word is a trope, and any affection of a sentence a figure; but they are generally confounded by the exactest writers.

Silken terms precise,

Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,

Figures pedantic, these Summer flies. Shakespeare.

Here is a strange figure invented against the plain and natural sense of the words; for by praying to bestow, must be understood only praying to pray.

They have been taught rhetoric, but yet never taught to express themselves in the language they are always to use; as if the names of the figures that embellished the discourse of those, who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well.

Locke.

[In grammar.] Any deviation from the rules of analogy or syntax.

To FIGURE v. a. [figure, Latin.]

1. To form into any determinate shape.

Trees and herbs, in the growing forth of their boughs and branches, are not figured, and keep no order.

Accept this goblet, rough with figur'd gold. Dryd. Virgil.

2. To show by a corporeal resemblance: as in picture or statuary.

Arachne figur'd how Jove did abuse

Europa like a bull, and on his back

Her through the sea did bear; so lively seen,

That it true sea, and true bull ye would ween. Spenser.

Now marks the course of rolling orbs on high,

O'er figur'd worlds now travels with his eye. Pope.

3. To cover or adorn with figures.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,

My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,

My gay apparel for an almsman's gown,

My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shakes. Richard II.

4. To diversify; to variegate with adventitious forms or matter.

But this effusion of such manly drops,

Startle mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd

Than had I seen the vaulty top of heav'n

Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Shakes. K. John.

5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.

When sacraments are laid to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very end for which these heavenly mysteries were instituted; and the matter whereof they consist is such as signifieth, figuratively, and representeth their end.

There is a history in all mens lives,

Figuring the nature of the times deceased. Shakes. Hen. IV.

Marriage rings are not of this stuff:

Oh! why should ought less precious or less tough

The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and actuated by his beams.

Addison on ancient Medals.

6. To image in the mind.

None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood.

If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear

No thought can figure, and no tongue declare. Prior.

7. To prefigure; to foreshow.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun,

In this the heaven figures some event. Shakes. Henry VI.

8. To form figuratively; to use in a sense not literal.

Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas, which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to.

Locke.

Quacks, figure-fingers, pettifoggers, and republican plotters cannot well live without it. Collier of Confidence.

FIL

FILGWORT, n. f. [fig and wort.] A plant.

It hath an anomalous flower, consisting of one leaf, gaping at both sides, and generally globular, cut as it were into two lips, under the upper one of which are two small leaves. Milt.

FILACEOUS, adj. [filum, Lat.] Consisting of threads; composed of threads.

They make cables of the bark of lime-trees: it is the stalk that maketh the filaceous matter commonly, and sometimes the down that groweth above. Bacon's Natural History.

FILACER, n. f. [filaxarius, low Lat. filum.] An officer in the Common Pleas, so called because he files those writs whereon he makes process. There are fourteen of them in their several divisions and counties: they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixed. Harri.

FILAMENT, n. f. [filament, Fr. filamenta, Latin.] A slender thread; a body slender and long like a thread.

The effluvium passing out in a smaller thread, and more enlightened filament, it stirreth not the bodies interposed. Bacon.

The lungs of consumptives have been consumed, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of withered veins and filaments.

Harvey on Consumption.

The ever-rolling orb's impulsive ray

On the next threads and filaments does bear,

Which form the springy texture of the air

And those fill strike the next, 'till to the light

The quick vibration propagates the light. Blackm. Creation.

The dung of horses is nothing but the filaments of the hay, and as such combustible. Arbutnot on Aliments.

FILBERT, n. f. [This is derived by Junius and Skinner from the long beards or hanks, as corrupted from full beard, or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it; and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filbert, the name of him who brought it hither.] A fine hazel nut with a thin shell.

In August comes fruit of all sorts; as plumbs, pears, apricots, barbaries, filberts, mulkmelons, monkhoods of all colours. Bacon's Essay 47.

Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed!

On what else should thy worm of fancy feed?

Yet in a filbert I have often known

Maggots survive, when all the kernel's gone. Dorset.

There is also another kind, called the filbert of Constantinople; the leaves and fruit of which are bigger than either of the former: the best are those of a thin shell. Mortimer.

To FILCH, v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology. The French word filer, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal; to take by theft; to pilfer; to pilage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.

He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have safe being, that none are continually filched and stolen. Spenser.

The champion robbeth by night,

And prowlth and filches by daie. Tusser's Husbandry.

Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;

'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;

But he that filches from me my good name,

Robs me of that which no enriches him,

And makes me poor indeed. Shakespeare's Othello.

My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit. Sidney.

From imposition of strict laws, to free

Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear

To filial works of law, to works of faith. Milt. P. L.

He grieved, he wept, the fight an image brought

Of his own filial love; a faintly pleading thought. Dryden.

2. Bearing the character of relation of a son.

And thus the filial godhead answering spoke. Milt. P. L.

Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,

Sprigs of like leaf erect their filial heads;

And when the parent rose decays and dies,

With a resembling face the daughter buds arise. Prior.

FILIAL, adj. [filial, Fr. filium, Latin.]

1. Pertaining to a son; befitting a son.

My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit. Sidney.

From imposition of strict laws, to free

To filial works of law, to works of faith. Milt. P. L.

He grieved, he wept, the fight an image brought

Of his own filial love; a faintly pleading thought. Dryden.

2. Bearing the character of relation of a son.

And thus the filial godhead answering spoke. Milt. P. L.

Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,

Sprigs of like leaf erect their filial heads;

And when the parent rose decays and dies,

With a resembling face the daughter buds arise. Prior.

FILIAL, n. f. [filial, Fr. filium, Latin.]

1. A thread.

But let me resume the file of my relation, which this object of books, best agreeable to my course of life, hath a little interrupted.

2. A line on which papers are strung to keep them in order.

All records, wherein there was any memory of the king's attainder, should be cancelled and taken off the file. Bacon.

The petitions being thus prepared, do you continually set apart an hour in a day to peruse those, and then rank them into several files, according to the subject matters. Bacon.

Th' apothecary-train is wholly blind;

From files a random recipe they take,

And many deaths of one prescription make. Dryden.

3. A catalogue; roll; series.

Our present musters grow upon the file

To five and twenty thousand men of choice. Shakes. H. IV.

The val'd file

Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle. Shak. Macb.

FIL

4. A line of soldiers ranged one behind another.

Those goodly eyes,

That o'er the files and musters of the war

Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn

Upon a tawny front. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

So saying, on he led his radiant files.

Dazzling the moon. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

5. [Fr. fil, Saxon; vijle, Dutch.] An instrument to rub down prominences.

The rough or coarse-toothed file, if it be large, is called a rubber, and is to take off the unevenness of your work which the hammer made in the forging: the bastard-toothed file is to take out of your work the deep cuts, or file-strokes, the rough file made: the fine-toothed file is to take out the cuts, or file-strokes, the bastard file made; and the smooth file is to take out those cuts, or file-strokes, that the fine file made. Moxon.

Yet they had a file for the mattocks and for the coulters.

Sa. xiii. 21.

The smiths and armourers on palfreys ride,

Files in their hands and hammers at their side,

And nails for loosen'd spears, and thongs for shields provide. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

FILECUTTER, n. f. [file and cutter.] A maker of files.

Gad-reel is a tough sort of steel: filecutters use it to make their chisels, with which they cut their files. Moxon.

To FILE, v. a. [filum, a thread.]

1. To string upon a thread or wire. Whence to file a bile is to offer it in its order to the notice of the judge.

From the day his first bill was filed he began to collect reports. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

2. [From peolan, Saxon.] To cut with a file.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more sparing terms acknowledge little less.

Hooker, b. v. f. 27.

His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue filed, and his eye ambitious. Shakespeare's Love's Labour's Lost.

Let men be careful how they attempt to cure a blemish by *fil*ing or cutting off the head of such an overgrown tooth. Ray.

3. [From filan.] To foul; to sully; to pollute. This sense is retained in Scotland.

For Banquo's issue have I fil'd my mind,

For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd. Shakespeare.

His weeds, divinely fashioned,

All fil'd and mangl'd. Chapman's Iliads, b. xviii.

To FILE, v. n. [from the noun.] To march in a file, not abreast, but one behind another.

All ran down without order or ceremony, 'till we drew up in good order, and fil'd off. Tatler, No. 80.

Did all the grosser atoms at the cell

Of chance fil'd off to form the pond'rous ball,

And undetermined into order fall? Blackmore's Creation.

FILIFORM, n. f. [corrupted from feuille morte, a dead leaf, French.] A brown or yellow-brown colour.

The colours you ought to with for are blue or filiform, turned up with red. Swift's Disc. to the Footman.

FILER, n. f. [from file.] One who files; one who uses the file in cutting metals.

FILIAL, adj. [filial, Fr. filium, Latin.]

1. Pertaining to a son; befitting a son.

My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit. Sidney.

From imposition of strict laws, to free

To filial works of law, to works of faith. Milt. P. L.

He grieved, he wept, the fight an image brought

Of his own filial love; a faintly pleading thought. Dryden.

2. Bearing the character of relation of a son.

And thus the filial godhead answering spoke. Milt. P. L.

Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,

Sprigs of like leaf erect their filial heads;

And when the parent rose decays and dies,

With a resembling face the daughter buds arise. Prior.

FILIAL, n. f. [from filium, Latin.] The relation of a son to a father; relative to paternity.

The relation of paternity and filial, between the first and second person, and the relation between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof, must needs be eternal, because the terms of relation between whom that relation ariseth were eternal. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FILINGS, n. f. [without a singular; from file.] Fragments rubbed off by the action of the file.

The filings of iron infused in vinegar, will, with a decoction of galls, make good ink, without any copperose at all. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 12.

The chippings and filings of those jewels are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Felton on the Class.

To FILE, v. n. [filan, Saxon.]

1. To store 'till no more can be admitted.

Sa. xvi. 1.

File the waterpots with water, and they filled them up to the brim.

Ja. ii. 7.

FIL

The earth is filled with violence through them. Gen. vi. 13.

2. To store abundantly.

Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the waters in the seas. Gen.

3. To satisfy; to content.

Nothing but the supreme and absolute Infinite can adequately fill and super-abundantly satisfy the infinite desires of intelligent beings. Chrym's Phil. Princ.

4. To glut; to surfeit.

Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.

—Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools. Shakespeare.

5. To FILL out. To pour out liquor for drink.

6. To FILL out. To extend by something contained.

I only speak of him

Whom pomp and greatness fits so loose about,

That he wants majesty to fill them out. Dryden.

7. To FILL up. [Up is often used without much addition to the force of the verb.] To make full.

FIL

- Now like a fillet to her head repairs,
And with his circling volumes folds her hairs. Dryd. An.
She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair. Pope's Windsor For.
2. The fleshy part of the thigh: applied commonly to veal.
The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,
On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd:
These morsels stay'd their stomachs; then the rest
They cut in legs and fillets for the feast. Dryden's Linc.
3. Meat rolled together, and tied round.
Fillet of a fenny snake, Shakespeare's Macbeth.
In the cauldron boil and bake.
The mixture thus, by chymick art
United close in every part,
In fillets roll'd, or cut in pieces, Swift.
Appear'd like one continued species.
4. [In architecture.] A little member which appears in the ornaments and mouldings, and is otherwise called listel. Harris.
To FILLET. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To bind with a bantage or fillet.
2. To adorn with an astragal.
He made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapters and filleted them. Ex. xxxviii. 28.
To FILLIP. v. a. [A word, says Skinner, formed from the sound. This resemblance I am not able to discover, and therefore am inclined to imagine it corrupted from fill up, by some combination of ideas which cannot be recovered.] To strike with the nail of the finger by a sudden spring or motion.
If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle. Shak. Hen. IV.
Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars: then let the mutinous winds Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery fun. Shak. Coriol.
We see, that if you fillip a lute-string, it sheweth double or treble. Bacon's Natural History, N. 183.
FILLIP. n. f. [from the verb.] A jerk of the finger let go from the thumb.
FILLY. n. f. [from fillos, Welsh; filie, French.]
1. A young horse or mare.
They die else of gelding, or gelders do rage:
Young fillies so likely of bulk and of bone,
Keep such to be breeders, let gelding alone. Tufts. Husband.
A well-wayed horse will convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall. Suckling.
2. A young mare, opposed to a colt or young horse.
I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile, Neighing in likeness of a filly foal. Shakespeare.
I am joined in wedlock, for my firs, to one of those fillies who are described in the old poet. Addison's Spectator.
FILM. n. f. [from pellicula, Saxon.] A thin pellicle or skin.
While the silver needle did work upon the sight of his eye, to remove the film of the cataract, he never saw any thing more clear or perfect than that white needle. Bacon's N. Hist.
Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,
Which that false fruit that promis'd clearer sight
Had bred. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 412.
A stone is held up by the films of the bladder, and is kept from grating or offending it. Grew's Bill of Mortality.
There is not one infidel so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phenomena of light, fancy, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies. Bentley's Sermons.
He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
And on the sightless eyeballs pour the day. Pope's Messiah.
To FILM. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a pellicle or thin skin.
It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
FILMY. adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.
So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;
And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
Whole filmy cord should bind the struggling fly. Dryden.
They with fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions off, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound, 'till death
Bereave them of their worthless souls; such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain. Phillips.
Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,
Thin glitt'ring textures of the filmy dew;
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
Where light disports in ever-mingling dyes. Pope.
To FILTER. v. a. [from filtrare, low Latin; per filum trahere.]
1. To defecate by drawing off liquor by depending threads.
2. To strain; to percolate.
Dilute this liquor with fair water, filter it through a paper, and so evaporate it. Grew's Museum.
FILTER. n. f. [from filtrum, Latin.]
1. A twist of thread, of which one end is dipped in the liquor to be defecated, and the other hangs below the bottom of the

FIN

- vessel, so that the liquor drips from it. See NEW DISPEN-SATORY.
2. A strainer; a searce.
That the water, passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Ray on the Creation.
FILFTH. n. f. [from filth, Saxon.]
1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.
When we in our viciousness grow hard,
The wife gods seal our eyes;
In our own filth drop our clear judgments. Shakespeare.
Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filth favour but themselves. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet; for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth. Bacon's Natural History.
How perfect then is man? From head to foot Dust'd with filth, and rotten at the root. Sandys.
Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about;
He still has gratitude and sap'ience,
To spare the folks that give him hap'ence. Swift.
2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.
Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson's Sermons.
FILTHY. adj. [from filthy.] Nastily; foully; grossly.
It stuck filthy in the camel's stomach that bulls, bears, and the like, should be armed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange, Fable 78.
FILTHINESS. n. f. [from filthy.]
1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.
Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the others filthiness. Sidney, b. ii.
2. Corruption; pollution.
They held this land, and with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime. Fairy Queen.
They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable. South's Sermons.
FILTHY. adj. [from filth.]
1. Nastily; foul; dirty.
Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
2. Gross; polluted.
As all stories are not proper subjects for an epic poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden's Duressney.
To FILTRATE. v. a. [from filtrare.] To strain; to percolate; to filter.
The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt. Arbutnot on Aliments.
FILTRATION. n. f. [from filtrare.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear. The filtration in use is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind. Quincy.
We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and coagulation, reduced it into crystals, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new crucible. Boyle.
FIMBLE. Hemp. n. f.
The season of pulling of it is first about Lambas, when good part of it will be ripe; that is, the light Summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called fimble hemp. Martin. Herb.
Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own,
In May a good housewife will see it be sown;
And afterwards trim it, to serve at a need,
The fimble to spin, and the carle for her feed. Tufts. Herb.
FIN. n. f. [from fin, Saxon; vin, Dutch.] The wing of a fish;
the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.
He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with fin of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakespeare's Othello.
Their fin consist of a number of gristly bones, long and slender, like pins and needles. Moré's Antid. against Atheism.
Thus at half-ebb a rowling sea
Returns, and wins upon the shore;
The watry herd, affrighted at the roar,
Reft on their fin awhile, and stay,
Then backward take their wond'ring way. Dryden.
Still at his ear the industrious Libys plies;
But as he plies, each busy arm thrinks in;
And by degrees is fashion'd to a fin. Addison's Metam.
FIN-FOOTED.

FIR

- FIN-FOOTED*. adj. [from fin and foot.] Palmipedous; having feet with membranes between the toes.
It is described like fissipedes, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedous or fin-footed, like swans and geese, according to the method of nature in lati-trous or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with fins or oars upon their feet. Brown's Vulg. Err.
FINABLE. adj. [from finis.] That admits a fine.
This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable. Bac.
He sent letters to the council, wherein he acknowledged himself favoured in bringing his cause finable. Hayward.
FINAL. adj. [from finalis, French; finalis, Latin.]

And over them triumphant death his dart
Shook; but delay'd to strike, though oft invoc'd
With vows, as their chief good, and final hope. Milt. P. L.
2. Conclusive; decisive.
There be many examples where sea-fights have been final to the war. Bacon, Essay 30.
Henry spent his reign in establishing himself, and had neither leisure nor opportunity to undertake the final conquest of Ireland. Davies on Ireland.
3. Mortal; destructive.
At last resolv'd to work his final snarl,
He lifted up his hand, but back again did start. Fai. Queen.
4. Respecting the end or motive.
Some things in such sort are allowed, that they be also required as necessary unto salvation, by way of direct, immediate, and proper necessity final; so that, without performance of them, they cannot by ordinary course be saved, nor by any means be excluded from life, observing them. Foster, b. ii.
By its gravity fire raises the water in pumps, siphons, and other engines; and performs all those feats which former philosophers, through ignorance of the efficient cause, attributed to a final, namely, nature's abhorrence of a vacuum. Ray.
Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient. Cellier on Thought.
FINALLY. adv. [from final.]
1. Ultimately; lastly; in conclusion.
Sight bereav'd
May chance to number thee with those Whom patience finally must crown. Milton's Agonists.
2. Completely; without recovery.
Their houses were many times in danger of ruin; yet was there not any house of noble English in Ireland utterly destroyed, or finally rooted out by the hand of justice, but the house of Desmond only. Davies on Ireland.
Doubtless many men are finally lost, who yet have no mens fins to answer for but their own. South's Sermons.
FINANCE. n. f. [French.] Revenue; income; profit. It is seldom used in the singular.
This sort of finance hath been increased by this new device.
The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain; as be the ecclesiastical and forfeitures. Bacon.
His pretence for making war upon his neighbours was their pyracies, though he practised the same trade when he was hindered in his finances at the siege of Byzantium. Arbutnot.
FINANCIER. n. f. [French.] One who collects or farms
the public revenue.

three kinds, the goldfinch, chaffinch, and bulfinch.
To FIND. v. a. [from findan, Saxon; vinde, Dutch.]
1. To obtain by searching or seeking.
Ais, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find.
Whereas thou hast searched all my stuff, what hast thou found of all thy household stuff? Matt. vii. 7.
A bird that flies about,
And beats itself against the cage,
Finding at last no passage out,
It fits and sings. Cowley.
2. To obtain something lost.
When he hath found his sheep, he layeth it on his shoulders rejoicing. Luke xv. 5.
In my school days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
To find the same way, with more advised watch,
I oft found both. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
3. To meet with; to fall upon.
There watchful at the gate they find Suspicion with her eyes behind.
In woods and forests thou art found. Dodley's Miscell.
The bad must miss, the good unthought shall find. Pope.

mind. Ecclus. xiii. 26.
19. To find out. To discover something hidden.
Can't thou by searching find out God? Can't thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? Job ii. 7.
There are agents in nature able to make the particles of bodies stick together by very strong attractions, and it is the business of experimental philosophy to find them out. Newton.
What hinders then, but that thou find her out,
And hurry her away by manly force? Addison's Cato.
20. To find out. To obtain the knowledge of.
The principal part of painting is to find out and thoroughly to understand what nature has made most beautiful. Dryden.
21. To find out. To invent; to excogitate.
A man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold, and to find out every device which shall be put to him. 2 Chron. ii. 14.
22. The particle but is added often without any other use than that it adds some force or emphasis to the verb.
While the proudly march'd about,
Greater conquests to find out,
She beat out Susan by the by. Cowley.
It is agreeable to compare the face of a great man with the character, and to try if we can find out in his looks and features either the haughty, cruel, or merciful temper. Addison.
He was afraid of being insulted with Greek; for which reason he desired a friend to find him out a clergyman rather of plain sense than much learning. Addison's Spectator.
FINDER. n. f. [from find.]
1. One that meets or falls upon any thing.
We will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of mad men. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
2. One that picks up any thing lost.
Some lewd squeaking cryer,
Well pleas'd with one lean thread-bare groat for hire,
May like a devil roar through every street,
And call the finder's conscience, if they meet, Deane.
O yes! if any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry,
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe
The winged wand'rer. Crosbaw.
FINDER-ULT. n. f. [from find and ult.] A censurer; a caviller.
We are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places, stops the mouth of all finder-faults. Shaksp.
FINDY. adj. [from find, Saxon.] Plump; weighty; firm;
solid. Thus the proverb,
A cold May and a windy,
Makes the barn fat and findy, means that it stores the barn with plump and firm grain. Jun.

FIN

FINE. adj. [finne, French; fin, Dutch and Erie, perhaps from finitus, completed, Latin.]

Not any skill'd in loops of fingering fine,
With this so curious net-work might compare. Spenser.
He was arrayed in purple and fine linen. Luke.
2. Refined; pure; free from dross.
Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold. Exra viii. 27.
3. Subtle; thin; tenuous: as, the fine spirits evaporate.
4. Refined; subtly excogitated.

In substance he promised himself money, honour, friends, and peace in the end; but those things were too fine to be fortunate, and succeed in all parts. Bacon.

Whether the scheme has not been pursued so far as to draw it into practice, or whether it be too fine to be capable of it, I will not determine. Temple.

5. Keen; thin; smoothly sharp.

Great affairs are commonly too rough and stubborn to be wrought upon by the finer edges or points of wit. Bacon.

6. Clear; pellucid; transparent: as, the wine is fine.

7. Nice; exquisite; delicate.

Are they not senseless then, that think the soul

Nought but a fine perfection of the sense. Davies.

The irons of planes are set fine or rank: they are set fine, when they stand so shallow below the sole of the plane, that in working they take off a thin shaving. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

8. Artful; dexterous.

The wisdom of all these latter times, in princes affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shiftings of dangers and mischiefs, than solid and grounded courtes to keep them aloof. Bacon.

9. Fraudulent; sly; knavishly subtle.

Through his fine handling, and his cleanly play,

He all those royal signs had stol'n away. Hubbard's Tale.

10. Elegant; with elevation.

He was not only the finest gentleman of his time, but one of the finest scholars. Felton on the Classics.

12. Showy; splendid.

It is with a fine genius as with a fine fashion; all those are displeased at it who are not able to follow it. Pope.

The satirical part of mankind will needs believe, that it is not impossible to be very fine and very filthy. Swift.

13. [Ironically.] Something that will serve the purpose; something worth contemptuous notice.

That same knave, Ford, her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him, master Brook, that ever governed frenzy. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

They taught us, indeed, to cloath, to dwell in houses,

To feast, to sleep on down, to be profuse:

A fine exchange for liberty. Phillips's Briton.

FINE. n. f. [fin, Cimbric.]

1. A mulct; a pecuniary punishment.

The killing of an Irishman was not punished by our law, as manslaughter, which is felony and capital; but by a fine or pecuniary punishment, called an ericke. Davies on Ireland.

2. Penalty.

Even this ill night your breathing shall expire,

Paying the fine of rated treachery. Shaksp. King John.

3. Forfeit; money paid for any exemption or liberty.

The spirit of wantonness is sure scared out of him: if the devil have him not in fee-simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Beside finer set upon plays, games, balls and feasting, they have many customs which contribute to their simplicity. Addis.

How vain that second life in others breath,

Th' estate which wits inherit after death!

Ease, health, and life for this they must resign,

Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine! Pope.

4. [From finis, Latin; fin, enfin, French.] The end; conclusion.

It is seldom used but adverbially, in fine.

In fine, whatsoever he was, he was nothing but what it pleased Zelmane, the powers of his spirit depending of her. Sid.

His resolution, in fine, is, that in the church a number of things are strictly observed, whereof no law of scripture

maketh mention one way or other. Hooker, b. ii. c. 5.

Still the finer the crown;

What'er the courts, the end is the renown. Shakespeare.

Your daughters, ere the fawns as won,

Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter;

In fine, delivers me to fill the time,

Herself most chafly absent. Shak. All's well that ends well.

The blessings of fortune are the lowest: the next are the bodily advantages of strength and health; but the superlative blessings, in fine, are those of the mind. L'Estrange.

In fine, he wears no limbs about him found,

With forces and sicknesses beleagu'd round. Dryden's Juv.

In fine, let there be a perfect relation betwixt the parts and the whole, that they may be entirely of a piece. Dryden.

FIN

To FINE. v. a. [from fine, the adjective.]

1. To refine; to purify.

The fining pot is for silver, and the furnace for gold. Prov.

There is a vein for the silver, and a place for gold, where they fine it. Job xxviii. 1.

2. To embellish; to decorate. Now not in use.

Hugh Capet also, who usurp'd the crown,

To fine his title with some shews of truth,

Convey'd himself as heir to th' lady Lingare. Shaksp. H. V.

3. To make less coarse.

It finer the grass, but makes it short, though thick. Mortim.

4. To make transparent.

It is good also for fuel, not to omit the shavings of it for the fining of wine. Mo timer's Husbandry.

5. [From the substantive.] To punish with pecuniary penalty.

To fine men one third of their fortune, without any crime committed, seems very hard. Luke.

To FINE. v. n. To pay a fine.

What poet ever fin'd for sheriff? or who

By rhymes and verse did ever lord mayor grow? Oldham.

To FINE DRA'W. v. a. [fine and d'au.] To tow up a rent with so much nicety that it is not perceived.

FINE DRA'W. n. f. [from fin'draw.] One whose business is to tow up rents.

FINEFINGERED. adj. [fine and finger.] Nice; artful; exquisite.

The most finest of workman on the ground,

Arachne, by his means was vanquished. Spenser.

FINELY. adv. [from fine.]

1. Beautifully; elegantly; more than justly.

Plutarch says very finely, that a man should not allow himself to hate even his enemies; because, says he, if you indulge this passion on some occasions, it will rise of itself in others.

Addison's Spectator, No. 125.

The walls are painted, and represent the labours of Hercules: many of them look very finely, though a great part of the work has been cracked. Addison on Italy.

2. Keenly; sharply; with a thin edge or point.

Get you black lead, sharpened finely, and put it into quills.

Peachment on Drawing.

3. Not coarsely; not meanly; gaily.

He was alone, save that he had two persons of honour, on either hand one, finely attired in white. Bacon's New Atlantis.

4. In small parts; subtly; not grossly.

Saltpetre was but grossly beaten; for it should not be finely powdered. Boyle.

5. [Ironically.] Wretchedly; in such a manner as to deserve contemptuous notice.

Let laws be made to obey, and not to be obeyed, and you will find that kingdom finely governed in a short time. South.

For him the loves:

She nam'd not me; that may be Torridom,

Whom she has thrice in private seen this day:

Then I am finely caught in my own snare. Dryd. Sp. Exor.

FINENESS. n. f. [from fine.]

1. Elegance; beauty; delicacy.

Every thing was full of a choice fineness, that, if it wanted any thing in majesty, it supplied with increase in pleasure; and if at the first it struck not admiration, it ravished with delight. Sidney.

The softness of her sex, and the fineness of her genius, conspire to give her a very distinguishing character. Prior.

2. Show; splendour; gaiety of appearance.

The fineness of cloaths destroys the ease: it often helps men to pain, but can never rid them of any: the body may languish under the most splendid cover. Decay of Piety.

3. Subtlety; artfulness; ingenuity.

Those, with the fineness of their souls,

By reason guide his execution. Shaksp. Troil. and Cressida.

Our works are, indeed, nought else

But the protractive trials of great Jove,

To find perceptive constancy in men;

The fineness of which metal is not found

In fortune's love. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals;

as whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height: but when they come to such a fineness as serveth the ordinary use, they try no farther. Bacon's Natural History.

The ancients were careful to coin their money in due weight and fineness, only in times of exigence they have diminished both the weight and fineness. Arbutnot on Coins.

FINE'RY. n. f. [from fine.] Show; splendour of appearance;

gaiety of colours.

Dress up your houses and your images,

And put on all the city's finery,

To consecrate this day a festival. Southern.

The capacities of a lady are sometimes apt to fall short in cultivating cleanliness and finery together. Swift.

Don't chuse your place of study by the finery of the prospects, or the most various scenes of sensible things. Watts.

FINE'SSE.

FIN

FINE'SSE. n. f. [French.] Artifice; stratagem: an unnecessary word which is creeping into the language.

A circumstance not much to be stood upon, in case it were not upon some finess. Hayward.

FINE'ER. n. f. [from fine.] One who purifies metals.

Take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer. Prov. xxv. 4.

FINGER. n. f. [finger, Saxon, from fangan, to hold.]

1. The flexible member of the hand by which men catch and hold.

The fingers and thumb in each hand consist of fifteen bones, there being three to each finger: they are a little convex and round towards the back of the hand, but hollow and plain towards the palm, except the last, where the nails are. The order of their dispositions is called first, second, and third phalanx: the first is longer than the second, and the second longer than the third. The upper extremity of the first bone on each finger has a little sinus, which receives the round head of the bones of the metacarpus. The upper extremity of the second and third bones of each finger hath two small sinuses, parted by a small protuberance; and the lower extremity of the first and second bones of each finger has two protuberances, divided by a small sinus: the two protuberances are received into the two sinuses of the upper extremity of the second and third bones; and the small sinus receives the little protube-rance of the same end of the same bones. The first bone of the thumb is like the bones of the metacarpus, and it is joined to the wrist and second of the thumb, as they are to the wrist and first of the fingers. The second bone of the thumb is like the first bones of the fingers, and it is joined to the first and third, as they are to the bones of the metacarpus and second of the fingers. The fingers are moved sideways only upon their first joint. Besides these there are some small bones, called ossa sesamoides, because they resemble sesamum grains: they are reckoned about twelve in each hand: they are placed at the joint of the fingers, under the tendons of the flexors, to which they serve as pulleys. Quincy.

You seem to understand me,

By each at once her choppy finger laying

Upon her skinny lips. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Diogenes, who is never said,

For aught that ever I could read,

To whine, put finger i' th' eye and sob,

Because h' had ne'er another tub. Hudibras.

The hand is divided into four fingers bending forward, and one opposite to them bending backwards, and of greater strength than any of them singly, which we call the thumb, to join with them severally or united; whereby it is fitted to lay hold of objects of any size or quantity. Ray on the Creat.

A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of fingers playing upon all the organ pipes of the world, and making every one found a particular note. Kel against Burnet.

Foot Peg leaved, spun, and knit for a livelihood, 'till her finger ends were sore. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

2. A small measure of extension.

Go now, go trust the wind's uncertain breath,

Remov'd four fingers from approaching death;</

FIR

FIRECHOLO. n. f. See FENNEL, of which plant it is a species.

FIPPLE. n. f. [from fibula, Latin.] A stopper.
You must know, that in recorders, which go with a gentle breath, the concave of the pipe, were it not for the fipple that straiteneth the air, much more than the simple concave, would yield no sound. Bacon's Natural History.

FIR. n. f. [fir, Welsh; purp, Saxon; fyr, Danish.] The tree of which deal-boards are made.

It is ever green; the leaves are single, and for the most part produced on every side of the branches: the male flowers, or catkins, are placed at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are propagated on cones, which are squamose. See PINE-TREE. Miller.

He covered the floor of the house with planks of fir. 1 King.

The fipring fir and flately box adorn. Pope.

FIRE. n. f. [fyr, Saxon; feur, German.]

1. The igneous element.

2. Any thing burning.

A little fire is quickly trodden out,
Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench. Shakef. H. VI.

Where two raging fires meet together,
They do consume the thing that feeds their fury. Shakef.

So contraries on Etna's top conspire;
Here hoary frosts, and by them breaks out fire. Cowley.

3. A conflagration of towns or countries.

There is another liberality to the citizens, who had suffered damage by a great fire. Arbutnot on Coins.

Though safe thou think'st thy treasure lies,
Conceal'd in chests from human eyes,
A fire may come, and it may be Bury'd, my friend, as far from thee. Granville.

4. Flame; light; lustre.

Stars, hide your fires!
Let not night see my black and deep desires! Shakef. Macb.

5. Torture by burning.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire,
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire? Prior.

Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? Isa. xxxiii.

7. Any thing provoking; any thing that inflames the passions.

What fire is in my ears? Can this be true?
Stand I condemn'd for pride and scorn so much? Shakef.

8. Ardour of temper; violence of passion.

He had fire in his temper, and a German bluntness; and, upon provocations, might strain a phrase. Asterbury.

9. Liveliness of imagination; vigour of fancy; intellectual activity; force of expression; spirit of sentiment.

Nor can the frow that age does shed
Upon thy rev'rend head,
Quench or allay the noble fire within,
But all that youth can be thou art. Cowley.

10. The passion of love.

Love various hearts does variously inspire,
It fits in gentle bosoms gentle fire,
Like that of incense on the altar laid;
But raging flames tempestuous souls invade;
A fire which every windy passion blows,
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

The fire of love in youthful blood,
Like what is kindled in bruth-wood,
But for a moment burns. Shadwell.

The neighbours are coming out with forks and fireshovels, and spits, and other domestic weapons. Dryden's Span. Fryar.

FIRESTONE. n. f. [fire and stone.]

The firestone, or pyrites, is a compound metallick fossil, composed of vitriol, sulphur, and an unmetallick earth, but in very different proportions in the several masses. The most common sort, which is used in medicine, is a greenish shapeless kind found in our clay-pits, out of which the green vitriol or copperas is procured. It has its name of pyrites, or firestone, from its giving fire on being struck against a steel much more freely than a flint will do; and all the sparks burn a longer time, and grow larger as they fall, the inflammable matter struck from off the stone burning itself out before the spark becomes extinguished. Hill's Mat. Med.

Firestone is a kind of stone called also Rygate stone, from the place whence it is chiefly brought, being very good for fireheards, ovens, and foves. Builder's Dict.

Firestones, if broke small, and laid on cold lands, must be of advantage. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FIREWOOD. n. f. [fire and wood.] Wood to burn; fewel.

I am constant as the northern star,
Of whole true, fixt, and resting quality,
There is no fellow in the firmament. Shakef. Jul. Cesar.

The Almighty, whose hieroglyphical characters are the unnumbered stars, sun and moon, written on these large volumes of the firmament. Raleigh's History of the World.

The firmament expanse of liquid, pure,
Transparent, elemental air, diffus'd
In circuit to the uttermost convex
Of this great round. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

The steeds climb up the first ascent with pain;
And when the middle firmament they gain,
If downward from the heavens my head I bow,
And see the earth and ocean hang below,
Ev'n I am seiz'd with horror. Addison's Ovid's Metamorph.

What an immensurable space is the firmament, wherein a great number of stars, lesser and lesser, and consequently farther and farther off, are seen with our naked eye, and many more discovered with our glasses! Derham's Astro-Theology.

FIRMAMENTAL. adj. [from firmanentum.] Celestial; of the upper regions.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In firmamental waters dipt above. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

FIST. } n. f. [from fish, Saxon.] The hand clenched with the fingers doubled down, in order to give a blow, or keep hold.

- She quick and proud, and who did Pas despise,
Up with her fish, and took him on the face;
Another time, quoth she, become more wise;
Thus Pas did kiss her hand with little grace. Sidney.

- And being down, the villain fore did beat
And bruise with clownish fish his manly face. Fairy Queen.
Anger causeth paleness in fume; in others tremblings, swelling, foaming at the mouth, stamping, and bending the fish. Bacon's Natural History, N. 716.

- And the same hand into a fish may close,
Which instantly a palm expanded shows. Denham.
Tyrreus, the foster-father of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fish. Dryden's Æn.

they have quite disabled each other. Swift.

- FISTULA.* } n. f. [Latin; fistula, French.]
1. A sinuous ulcer callous within; any sinuous ulcer.

- That fistula which is recent is the easiest of cure: those of a long continuance are accompanied with ulcerations of the gland and caries in the bone. Wise's Surgery.

2. FISTULA Lacrimalis. A disorder of the canals leading from the eye to the nose, which obstructs the natural progress of the tears, and makes them trickle down the cheek; but this is only the first and mildest stage of the disease: in the next there is matter discharged with the tears from the puncta lacrimalia, and sometimes from an orifice broke through the skin between the nose and angle of the eye. The last and worst degree of it is when the matter of the eye, by its long continuance, has not only corroded the neighbouring soft parts, but also affected the subjacent bone. Sharp's Surgery.

- FISTULAR.* } adj. [from fistula.] Hollow like a pipe.
FISTULOUS. } adj. [from fistula; fistuleux, French.] Having the nature of a fistula; callous or sinuous like a fistula.

- How these sinuous ulcers become fistulous, I have shewn
you. Wise's Surgery.

- FIT.* } n. f. [from fight, Skinner, every fit of a disease being a struggle of nature; from fit, in Flemish, frequent, juvius.]
4

FIT

1. A paroxysm or exacerbation of any intermittent distemper.
Small stones and gravel collect and become very large in the kidneys, in which case a fit of the stone in that part is the cure. Sharp's Surgery.

2. Any short return after intermission; interval.
Sometimes 'tis grateful to the rich to try
A short vicissitude, and fit of poverty. Dryden's Horace.
Men that are habitually wicked may now and then, by fit and starts, feel certain motions of repentance. L'Estrange.

- By fit my swelling grief appears,
In rising sighs and falling tears. Addison on Italy.
Thus o'er the dying lamp th' unsteady flame
Hangs quivering on a point, leaps off by fits,
And falls again as loth to quit its hold. Addison's Cato.

- Religion is not the business of some fits only and intervals of our life, to be taken up at certain days and hours, and laid aside for the rest of our time; but a system of precepts to be regarded in all our conduct. Rogers's Sermons.

- All fits of pleasure we balanced by an equal degree of pain or languor: 'tis like spending this year part of the next year's revenue. Swift.

3. Any violent affection of mind or body.
The life did flit away out of her nest,
And all his senses were with deadly fit oppress'd. Fairy Queen.
An ambitious man subjects himself to others, and puts it in the power of every malicious tongue to throw him into a fit of melancholy. Addison's Spectator.

4. Disorder; distemperature.
For your husband,
He's noble, wise, judicious, and best knows
The fit of th' season. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

5. It is used, without an epithet of discrimination, for the hysterial disorders of women, and the convulsions of children;
and by the vulgar for the epilepsy.
Mrs. Bull was so much enraged, that she fell downright into a fit. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

- FIT.* } adj. [written, Flemish, juvius.]
1. Qualified; proper: with for before the noun, and to before the verb.

- Mighty men of valour, fit to go out for war and battle. Chron. vii. 11.
He lends him vain Goliath's sacred sword,
The fit help just fortune could afford. Cowley's Davideis.
This fury fit for her intent she chose,
One who delights in wars and human woes. Dryden's Æn.

- It is a wrong use of my understanding to make it the rule and measure of another man's; a use which it is neither fit for, nor capable of. Locke.

2. Convenient; meet; proper; right.
Since we have said it were good not to use men of ambitious natures, except it be upon necessity, it is fit we speak in what cases they are so. Bacon's Essay 17.

- See how thou could'st judge of fit and meet. Milt. P. L.
It is fit for a man to know his own abilities and weaknesses, and not think himself obliged to imitate all that he thinks fit to praise. Boyle.

FITCHER. } little beast, that robs the henrook and warren.

Skinner

FIX

Skinner calls him the stinking ferret; but he is much larger, at least as some provinces distinguish them, in which the polecat is termed a fitcheat, and the stinking ferret a foat.
 'Tis such another fitcheat! marry, a perfum'd one:
 What do you mean by this haunting of me? Shakespeare.
 The fitcheat, the fulmar, and the like creatures, live upon the face and within the bowels of the earth. Walton's Angler.
FIX'FUL. adj. [fit and full.] Varied by paroxysms; disorder'd by change of maladies.
 Duncan is in his grave;
 After life's fixful fever he sleeps well. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
FIX'LY. adv. [from fit.]
 1. Properly; justly; reasonably.
 Mutinous parts
 That envied his rectis, even so most fixly
 As you malign our senators. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 Where a man cannot fixly play his own part, if he have not a friend, he may quit the stage.
 I cannot fixly compare marriage than to a lottery; for, in both, he that ventures may succeed, and may miss; and if he draw a prize, he hath a rich return of his venture: but in both lotteries there lie pretty store of blanks for every prize.
 The whole of our duty may be expressed most fixly by departing from evil.
 An animal, in order to be moveable, must be flexible; and therefore is fixly made of separate and small solid parts, replete with proper fluids.
 2. Commodiously; meetly.
 To take a latitude,
 Sun or stars are fixly view'd
 At their brightest; but to conclude
 Of longitudes, what other way have we
 But to mark when, and where the dark eclipses be.
FIX'NESS. n. f. [from fit.]
 1. Propriety; meetness; justness; reasonableness.
 In things the fixness whereof is not of itself apparent, nor easy to be made sufficiently manifest unto all, yet the judgment of antiquity, concurring with that which is received, may induce them to think it not unfit.
 The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fixness
 That we adjourn this court.
 To let these hands obey my boiling blood,
 They're apt enough to dilocate and tear
 Thy flesh and bones.
 2. Convenience; commodity; the state of being fit.
 Not time nor place
 Did then cohere, and yet you would make both:
 They've made themselves, and that their fixness now
 Does unmake you.
FIX'MENT. n. f. [from fit.] Something adapted to a particular purpose.
 Poor beseeching: 'twas a fixment for
 The purpose I then follow'd.
FIX'ITER. n. f. [from fit.]
 1. The person or thing that confers fitness for any thing.
 Sowing the sandy gravelly land in Devonshire and Cornwall with French furze-seed, they reckon a great improver of their land, and a fixiter of it for corn.
 2. [from fixta, Italian; fixten, German.] A small piece: as, to cut into fixters.
FIX'Z. n. f. [Norman, from fixt, a son, Fr.] A son. Only used in law and genealogy: as Fitzherbert, the son of Herbert; Fitzthomas, the son of Thomas; Fitzroy, the son of the king. It is commonly used of illegitimate children.
FIVE. adj. [fix, Saxon.] Four and one; half of ten.
 And five of them were wife, and five were foolish.
 No person, no incident, but must be of use to carry on the main design: all things else are like fix fingers to the hand, when nature, which is superfluous in nothings, can do her work with five.
 Five herds, five bleating flocks, his pastures fill'd;
 His lands a hundred yoke of oxen till'd.
 Our British youth lose their figure by that time they are five and twenty.
FIVE'AYED Grass. n. f. Cinquefoil; a species of clover.
FIVES. n. f.
 1. A kind of play with a bowl.
 2. A disease of horses.
 His horse sped with spavins rayed with the yellows, past cure of the fives, and stark spoiled with the staggers.
TO FIX. v. a. [fixer, French; fixus, Latin.]
 1. To make fast, firm, or stable.
 Hell heard the unsufferable noise, hell saw Heav'n ruining from heav'n, and would have fled Affrighted, but that fate had fix'd too deep
 Her dark foundations, and too fast had bound.
 2. To settle; to establish invariably.
 Brightest seraph! tell
 In which of all these orbs hath man

FIX

His fix'd seat, or fix'd seat hath none,
 But all these shining orbs his choice to dwell! Milt. P. L.
 One loves fix'd laws, and the other arbitrary power. Temple.
 When custom hath fix'd his eating to certain stated periods, his stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour.
 3. To direct without variation.
 Why are thine eyes fix'd to the fullen earth,
 Gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight! Shak. H. VI.
 Thus while the Trojan prince employs his eyes,
Fix'd on the walls with wonder and surprize. Dryden's Æn.
 4. To deprive of volatility.
 We pronounce concerning gold, that it is fix'd.
 5. To pierce; to transfix. A sense purely Latin.
 While from the raging sword he vainly flies,
 A bow of steel shall fix his trembling thighs.
 6. To withhold from motion.
 To Fix. v. n.
 1. To settle the opinion; to determine the resolution.
 In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little dent, and put quicksilver, wrapped in a piece of linen, in that hole, and the quicksilver will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer.
 2. To settle the opinion; to determine the resolution.
 Your kindness banishes your fear,
 Resolv'd to fix for ever here.
 3. To lose volatility, so as to be malleable.
 In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little dent, and put quicksilver, wrapped in a piece of linen, in that hole, and the quicksilver will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer.
FIXATION. n. f. [French.]
 1. Stability; firmness; steadiness.
 Your fixation in matters of religion will not be more necessary for your soul's than your kingdom's peace.
 2. Residence in a certain place.
 To light, created in the first day, God gave no proper place or fixation.
 3. Confinement; forbearance of excursion.
 They are subject to errors from a narrowness of soul, a fixation and confinement of thought to a few objects.
 4. Want of volatility; destruction of volatility.
 Upon the compound body three things are chiefly to be observed; the colour, the fragility or plantiness, and the volatility or fixation, compared with the simple bodies.
 It is more difficult to make gold of other metals less ponderous and less material, than via veris, to make silver of lead or quicksilver, both which are more ponderous than silver; so that they need rather a degree of fixation than any condensation.
 5. Reduction from fluidity to firmness.
 Salt dissolved, upon a fixation returns to its affected cubes.
FIXEDLY. adv. [from fixed.] Certainly; firmly; in a manner settled and established.
 If we pretend that the distinction of species, or sorts, is fixedly established by the real and secret constitutions of things.
FIX'EDNESS. n. f. [from fixed.]
 1. Stability; firmness.
 2. Want or loss of volatility.
Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsumed, is an idea that always accompanies our complex idea signified by the word gold.
 3. Solidity; coherence of parts.
 All matter is either fluid or solid, to comprehend all the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies.
 4. Steadiness; settled opinion or resolution.
 A fixedness in religion will not give my conscience leave to consent to innovations.
FIX'IDITY. n. f. [from fixed.] Coherence of parts, oppos'd to volatility. A word of Egypt.
 Bodies mingled by the fire are differing as to fixidity and volatility, and yet are so combined by the first operation of the fire, that itself does scarce afterwards separate them.
FIX'ITY. n. f. [fixiti, French.] Coherence of parts, oppos'd to volatility.
 And are not the sun and fixed stars great earths vehemently hot, whose heat is conveyed by the greatness of the bodies, and the mutual action and reaction between them, and the light which they emit, and whose parts are kept from fuming away, not only by their fixity, but also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them?

FLA

FLA'GORE. n. f. [from fla.]
 1. Position.
 The fixure of her eye hath motion in't,
 As we were mock'd with art.
 2. Stable pressure.
 The firm fixure of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait.
 3. Firmness; stable state.
 Frights, changes, horrors,
 Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
 The unity and married calm of states
 Quite from their fixure.
FLA'GIG. n. f. A kind of dart or harpoon with which scamen strike fish.
FLA'BBY. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Soft; not firm; easily shaking or yielding to the touch.
 Paleness, a weak pulse, palpitations of the heart, flabby and black flesh, are symptoms of weak fibres.
 Pulls out the rags contriv'd to prop
 Her flabby dugs, and down they drop.
FLA'BLIS. adj. [flabilis, Latin.] Blown about by the wind; subject to be blown.
FLA'CCID. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Weak; limber; not stiff; lax; not tense.
 The bowing and inclining the head is found in the great flower of the sun: the cause I take to be is, that the part against which the sun beate waxeth more faint and flaccid in the stalk, and thereby less able to support the flower.
 They whose muscles are weak or flaccid, are unapt to pronounce the letter r.
 The furgeon ought to vary the diet as he finds the fibres are too flaccid and produce fungules, or as they harden and produce callosities.
FLA'CIDITY. n. f. [from flacid.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension; want of stiffness.
 There is neither fluxion nor pain, but flacidity joined with infensibility.
TO FLAG. v. n. [flaggeren, Dutch; pleoogan, Saxon, to fly.]
 1. To hang loose without stiffness or tension.
 Beds of cotton wool hung up between two trees, not far from the ground; in the which, flagging down in the middle, men, wives and children lie together.
 That drag the tragick melancholy night,
 Who with their drowsy, flow, and flagging wings
 Clip dead men's graves.
 It keeps those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibleness and weight, would flag or curl.
 2. To grow spiritless or dejected.
 My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
 Like fowl in air too damp, and lags along
 As if she were a body in a body:
 My senses too are dull and stupidly'd.
 Their edge rebated: sure some ill approaches.
 The pleasures of the town begin to flag and grow languid, giving way daily to cruel inroads from the spleen.
 3. To grow feeble; to lose vigour.
 Juice in language is somewhat less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved, scarce covering the bone, and shews like stones in a sack: some men, to avoid redundancy, run into that; and while they strive to hinder ill blood or juice, they lose their good.
 His stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour, and grow peevish if he passes it; either fretting itself into a troublesome excess, or flagging into a downright want of appetite.
 There must be a noble train of actions to preserve his fame in life and motion; for, when it is once at a stand, it naturally flags and languishes.
 If on sublimer wings of love and praise,
 My love above the stary vault I raise,
 Lur'd by some vain conceit of pride or lust,
 I flag, I drop, and flutter in the dust.
 He sees a spirit hath been raised against him, and he only watches 'till it begins to flag: he goes about watching when to devour us.
TO FLAG. v. a.
 1. To let fall; to suffer to droop.
 Take heed, my dear, youth flies apace;
 As well as Cupid, Time is blind:
 Soon must those glories of thy face
 The fate of vulgar beauty find:
 The thousand loves, that arm thy potent eye,
 Must drop their quivers, flag their wings, and die.
 2. [From flag, a species of stone.] To lay with broad stone.
 The sides and floor are all flagged with excellent marble.

FLA

A white stone used for flagging floors. Woodward on Fossils.
FLAG. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. A water plant with a broad bladed leaf and yellow flower, so called from its motion in the wind.
 She took an ark of bulrushes, and laid it in the flags by the river's brink.
 Can bulrushes but by the river grow?
 Can flags there flourish where no waters flow?
 There be divers fishes that cast their spawn on flags or stones.
 Cut flag roots, and the roots of other weeds.
 2. The colours or ensign of a ship or land forces, by which signals are made at sea, or regiments are distinguished in the field.
 These flags of France that are advanced here,
 Before the eye and prospect of your town,
 Have hither march'd to your endamage. Shak. K. J. hm.
 He hangs out as many flags as he decrieth vessels; square, if ships; if gallees, pendants.
 Let him be girt
 With all the grisly legions that troop
 Under the footy flag of Acheron, Harpies and hydras, or all the monstrous forms
 'Twixt Africa and Inde, I'll find him out,
 And force him to restore his purchase back,
 Or drag him by the curls to a foul death.
 The French and Spaniard, when your flags appear,
 Forget their hatred, and consent to fear.
 The interpretation of that article about the flag is a ground at pleasure for opening a war.
 In either flag the golden serpents bear,
 Erecting crests alike, like volumes rear,
 And mingle friendly hissings in the air.
 Then they, whose mothers, frantick with their fear,
 In woods and wilds the flags of Bacchus bear,
 And lead his dances with dishevell'd hair.
 3. A species of stone used for smooth pavements.
 Part of two flags striated, but deeper on one side than the other.
 Flagstone will not split, as slate does, being found formed into flags, or thin plates, which are no other than so many strata.
FLAG-BROOM. n. f. [from flag and broom.] A broom for sweeping flags or pavements, commonly made of birch-twigs, or of the leaves of the dwarf palm, imported from Spain.
FLAG-OFFICER. n. f. [flag and officer.] A commander of a Squadron.

 Play us a lesson on your flaglet.
FLAGELLATION. n. f. [from flagello, Latin.] The use of the scourge.
 By Bridewell all descend,
 As morning pray'r and flagellation end.
FLA'GGINESS. n. f. [from flaggy.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension.
FLA'GGY. adj. [from flag.]
 1. Weak; lax; limber; not stiff; not tense.
 His flaggy wings, when forth he did display,
 Were like two sails, in which the hollow wind
 Is gather'd full, and worketh speedy way.
 That basking in the sun thy bees may lye,
 And resting there, their flaggy pinions dry.
 2. Weak in taste; insipid.
 Graft an apple-cion upon the stock of a colewort, and it will bear a great flaggy apple.
FLAGITIOUS. adj. [from flagitiuus, Latin.] Wicked; villainous; atrocious.
 No villany or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but, upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it.
 There's no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline.
 First, those flagitious times,
 Pregnant with unknown crimes,
 Conspire to violate the nuptial bed.
 Perjury is a crime of so flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it.
 Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and four dildain,
 Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
 Nor fear a dearth in these flagitious times.

FLA

FLAGRANT. n. f. [from flagrant.] Wickedness; villainy.

FLAGON. n. f. [flaggon, Welsh; flaxe, Saxon; flafke, Danish; flacon, French; flafce, Italian; flafce, Spanish.] A vessel of drink with a narrow mouth.

A mad rogue! he pour'd a flagon of Rhenish on my head once.

More had sent him by a sutor in Chancery two silver flagons.

Did they coin pipots, bowls, and flagons?

Int' officers of horse and dragons? Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.

His trusty flagon, full of potent juice,

Was hanging by, worn thin with age and use. Reverend.

One flagon walks the round, that none should think

They either change, or flint him of his drink. Dryd. Juv.

FLAGRANCY. n. f. [flagrantia, Latin.] Burning; heat; fire.

Lust causeth a flagrancy in the eyes, as the sight and the touch are the things desired, and therefore the spirits resort to those parts.

FLAGRANT. adj. [flagrans, Latin.]

1. Ardent; burning; eager.

A thing which filleth the mind with comfort and heavenly delight, stirreth up flagrant desires and affections, correspondent unto that which the words contain.

2. Glowing; flushed.

See Sappho, at her toilet's greasy task,

And issuing flagrant to an evening mask:

So morning insects, that in muck begun,

Shine, buzz, and fly-blow in the setting sun. Pope's Epistles.

3. Red; imprinted red.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,

The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back.

4. Notorious; flaming.

When fraud is great, it furnishes weapons to defend itself;

and at work, if the crimes be so flagrant that a man is laid aside out of perfect shame, he retires loaded with the spoils of the nation.

With equal poize let steady justice sway,

And flagrant crimes with certain vengeance pay;

But, 'till the proofs are clear, the stroke delay.

FLAGRANT. n. f. [flagro, Latin.] Burning.

FLAGSTAFF. n. f. [flag and staff.] The staff on which the flag is fixed.

The duke, less numerous, but in courage more,

On wings of all the winds to combat flies:

His murdering guns a loud defiance roar,

And bloody crosses on his flagstaff rise. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.

FLAIL. n. f. [flagellum, Latin; fiel, German.] The instrument with which grain is beaten out of the ear.

Our soldiers, like the night owl's lazy flight,

Or like a lazy thresher with a flail,

Fell gently down as if they struck their friends. Sh. H. VI.

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,

His shadowy flail hath threll'd the corn,

That ten day-labourers could not end,

Then lies him down the lubbar-fend.

FLAME. n. f. [flamma, Latin; flamme, French.]

1. A thing that appears loosely held together, like a flock of wool.

O crimson circles, like red flakes in the element, when the weather is hottest.

And from his wide devouring oven sent

A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,

Him all amaz'd, and almost made afraid.

The earth is sometimes covered with snow two or three feet deep, made up only of little flakes or pieces of ice.

Small drops of a misting rain, descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles; which, being ruffled by the wind, in their fall are broken, and clustered together into small parcels, which we call flakes of snow.

Upon throwing in a stone the water boils for a considerable time, and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up.

2. A stratum; layer; lamina.

The flakes of his tough flesh so firmly bound,

As not to be divorced by a wound.

A labourer in his left hand holding the head of the center-pin, and with his right drawing about the beam and teeth, which cut and tore away great flakes of the metal, 'till it received the perfect form the teeth would make.

3. To FLAKE. v. a. [from the noun.] To form in flakes or bodies loosely connected.

FLA

From the bleak pole no winds inclement blow,

Mold the round hail, or flake the fleecy snow. Pope's Ode.

FLAKEY. adj. [from flake.]

1. Loosely hanging together.

The silent hour steals on,

And flaky darkness breaks within the East. Shaksf. Rich. III.

The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,

With sparks that seem to set the world on fire.

Hence, when the snows in Winter cease to weep,

And undissolv'd their flaky texture keep,

Which swell in Summer, and those banks disdain. Blackm.

2. Lying in layers or strata; broken into laminae.

FLAM. n. f. [A cant word of no certain etymology.] A falsehood; a lie; an illusory pretext.

A flam more senseless than the rogue's

Of old aruspicy and augury.

'Till these men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, all pretences or pleas of conscience to the contrary are nothing but cant and cheat, flam and delusion.

What are most of the histories of the world but lies? Lyes immortalized and consigned over as a perpetual abuse and flam upon posterity.

FLAM. n. f. [from the French flamme, a flame.] A transient blaze; a sudden explosion of flame from fat or dripping; and so in Scotland transferred to any thing glozing and flashily illusory.

To FLAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive with a lie. Merely cant.

For our ignorance was flam'd,

To damn ourselves 't avoid being damn'd. Hudibras, p. iii.

God is not to be flam'd off with lies, who knows exactly what thou can't do, and what not.

FLAMBEAU. n. f. [French.] A lighted torch.

The king seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy.

As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the Sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death.

FLAME. n. f. [flamma, Latin; flamme, French.]

1. Light emitted from fire.

Is not flame a vapour, fume, or exhalation heated red hot, that is, is not as to shine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame.

What flame, what lightning e'er

So quick an active force did bear!

2. Fire.

Jove, Prometheus' theft allow;

The flames he once stole from thee, grant him now. Cowley.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; brightness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all our elder plays,

This and Philaster have the loudest flame;

Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame:

In both our English genius is expert,

Lofty and bold, but negligently dress'd.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Smit with the love of kindred arts we came,

And met congenial, mingling flame with flame.

5. Passion of love.

My heart's on flames, and does like fire

To her aspire.

Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove

All the extremities of love.

No warning of th' approaching flame;

Swiftly like sudden death it came:

I lov'd the moment I beheld.

To FLAME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine as fire; to burn with emission of light.

Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this?

He fell flaming through th' ethereal sky

To bottomless perdition.

2. To shine like flame.

Behold it like an ample curtain spread,

Now break'd and glowing with the morning red;

Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,

And chusing fable for the peaceful night.

3. To break out in violence of passion.

FLAMECOLOURED. adj. [flame and colour.] Of a bright yellow colour.

'Tis strong, and it does indifferent well in flamecoloured stockings.

Then first the flamen tasted living food;

Next his grim idol smear'd with human blood.

FLAMMATION. n. f. [flammatio, Latin.] The act of setting on flame.

White or crystalline arsenick, being artificial, and sublimed with salt, will not endure flammation.

FLAMMABLE. n. f. [flammabile, Latin.] The quality of admitting to be set on fire.

In the sulphur of bodies torrifed, that is, the oily, fat and unctuous parts, consist the principles of flammability.

FLAMMEOUS. adj. [flammeus, Latin.] Consisting of flame; resembling flame.

This flammeous light is not over all the body.

FLAMMIFEROUS. adj. [flammifer, Latin.] Bringing flame.

FLAMMIVOMOUS. adj. [flamma and vomo, Latin.] Vomiting out flame.

FLAMMY. adj. [from flame.]

1. Inflamed; burning; flaming.

My thoughts imprisoned in my secret woes,

With flammy breaths do issue off in found.

2. Having the nature of flame.

The vital spirits of living creatures are a substance compounded of an airy and flammy matter; and though air and flame, being free, will not well mingle, yet bound in by a body they will.

FLANK. n. f. [flanc, French, according to Menage, from λαγαν; more probably from latens, Latin.]

1. That part of the side of a quadruped near the hinder thigh.

The belly shall be eminent by shadowing the flank.

2. [In men.] The lateral part of the lower belly.

He said, and, pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent:

Through Paris shield the forceful weapon went,

His corselet pierces, and his garment rends,

And glancing downward near his flank descends.

3. The side of any army or fleet.

Great ordnance and small shot thundered and showered upon our men from the rampier in front, and from the galleries that lay at sea in flank.

The other half of the battle, and the whole flank of the rear, was clothed by the carriages.

Gray was appointed to stand on the left side, in such sort as he might take the flank of the enemy.

To right and left the front

Divided, and to either flank retir'd.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the bastion which reaches from the curtain to the face, and defends the opposite face, the flank and the curtain.

To FLANK. v. a.

1. To attack the side of a battalion or fleet.

2. To be posted so as to overlook or command any pass on the side; to be on the side.

With fates aver'd, against their king's command,

Arm'd on the right, and on the left they stand,

And flank the passage.

By the rich scent we found our perfum'd prey,

Which, flank'd with rocks, did close in covert lay:

FLANKER. n. f. [from flank.] A fortification jutting out so as to command the side of a body marching to the assault.

The Turks, discouraged with the loss of their fellows, and fore beaten by the Spaniards out of the flankers, were enforced to retire.

To FLANKER. v. a. [flanquer, French.] To defend by lateral fortifications.

FLANNEL. n. f. [gülanen, Welch, from gulan, wool, Davies.]

A soft nappy stuff of wool.

I cannot answer the Welch flannel.

FLAP. n. f. [loeppe, Saxon.]

1. Any thing that hangs broad and loose, fastened only by one side.

There is a peculiar provision for the windpipe, that is, a cartilaginous flap upon the opening of the larynx, which hath an open cavity for the admission of the air.

Some surgeons make a crucial incision, upon the supposition that the wound will more easily heal by turning down the flaps.

2. The motion of any thing broad and loose.

3. [A disease in horses.]

When a horse is said to have the flaps, you may perceive his lips to be swelled on both sides of his mouth; and that which is in the blisters is like the white of an egg: you must, to cure it, cut some flashes with a knife, and rub it once with salt, and it will cure.

To FLAP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a flap, as flies are beaten.

A hare, hard put to it by an eagle, took sanctuary in a ditch with a beetle: the eagle flaps off the former, and devoured the other.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,

This painted cloud of dirt, that stinks and stings.

2. To move with a flap or noise made by the stroke of any thing broad.

The dira flapping on the shield of Turnus, and fluttering about his head, disheartened him in the duel.

FLA

With fruitless toil

Flap filmy pinions oft, to extricate

Their feet in liquid shackles bound.

Three times, all in the dead of night,

A bell was heard to ring;

And shrieking at her window thrice

The raven flap'd his wing.

To FLAP. v. n.

1. To ply the wings with noise.

'Tis common for a duck to run flapping and fluttering away,

as if maimed, to carry people from her young.

2. To fall with flaps, or broad parts depending.

When suffocating mists obscure the moon,

Let thy worst wig, long us'd to florms, be worn;

This knows the powder'd footman, and with care

Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair.

FLAPDRAGON. n. f.

1. A play in which they catch raisins out of burning brandy, and, extinguishing them by closing the mouth, eat them.

2. The thing eaten at flapdragon.

He plays at quots well, and eats conger and fennel, and drinks candles ends for flapdragons, and rides the wild mare with the boys.

To FLAPDRAGON. v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow; to devour.

But to make an end of the ship, to see how the sea flap-dragoned it.

FLA'PEARED. adj. [flap and ear.] Having loose and broad ears.

A whorlson, beetleheaded, flapeared knave.

To FLARE. v. n. [from fluden, to flutter, Dutch, Skinner; perhaps accidentally changed from glare.]

1. To flutter with a splendid show.

She shall be loose enrob'd,

With ribbands pendant flaring 'bout her head.

2. To glitter with transient lustre.

Doctrine and life, colours and light, in one

When they combine and mingle, bring

A strong regard and awe; but speech alone

Doth vanish like a flaring thing,

And in the ear, not confidence, ring.

3. To glitter offensively.

When the sun begins to sting

His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring

 11. Peremptory; absolute; downright.
 His horse with flat tiring taught him, that discrete flays make speedy journeys. Sidney.
 It is a flat wrong to punish the thought or purpose of any before it be enacted; for true justice punisheth nothing but the evil act or wicked word. Spenser's State of Ireland.
 As it is in the nature of all men to love liberty, so they become flat libertines, and fall to all licentiousness. Spenser.
 You start away,
 And lend no ear unto my purposes;
 Those prisoners you shall keep:
 — I will, that's flat. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

FLA

Thus repuls'd, our final hope
 Is flat despair: we must exasperate
 Th' Almighty Victor to spend all his rage,
 And that must end us. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
 If thou sin in wine or wantonness,
 Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
 Frailty gets pardon by submissiveness:
 But he that boasts, thrusts that out of his story:
 He makes flat war with God, and doth defy
 With his meek clod of earth the spacious sky. Herbert.
 You had broke and robb'd his house,
 And stole his talismanique louse;
 And all his new-found old inventions,
 With flat felonious intentions. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. i.
 Not shrill; not acute; not sharp in sound.
 If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle. Bacon's Natural History.

FLAT. n. f.
 1. A level; an extended plane.
 The strings of a lute, viol, or virginals, give a far greater sound, by reason of the knot, board and concave underneath, than if there were nothing but only the flat of a board to let in the upper air into the lower. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Because the air receiveth great tincture from the earth, expose flesh or fish, both upon a stake of wood some height above the earth, and upon the flat of the earth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 It comes near an artificial miracle to make divers distinct eminences appear a flat by force of shadows, and yet the shadows themselves not to appear. Watson's Architecture.
 He has cut the side of the rock into a flat for a garden; and by laying on it the waste earth, that he has found in several of the neighbouring parts, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit. Addison on Italy.
 2. Even ground; not mountainous.
 Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
 'Till of this flat a mountain you have made,
 'T' o'erstop old Pelion, or the skyish head
 Of blue Olympus. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 The way is ready and not long,
 Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
 Fast by a mountain. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
 3. A smooth low ground exposed to inundations.
 The ocean, overpeering of his lift,
 Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste,
 Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
 O'erbears your officers. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 All the infections, that the sun sucks up
 From bogs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall. Shakespeare's Tempest.
 Half my power's this night,
 Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;
 These Lincoln wathes have devoured them. Shak. K. John.
 Shallow; strand; place in the sea where the water is not deep enough for ships.
 I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
 But I should think of shallows and of flats. Shakespeare.
 The difficulty is very great to bring them in or out through so many flats and sands, if wind and weather be not very favourable. Raleigh's Essay.
 Having newly left these grammatical flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable confusions, we are now on the sudden turn'd with their unballast'd wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy. Milton on Education.
 Full in the prince's passage hills of sand,
 And dang'rous flats, in secret ambush lay,
 Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
 And seamen with dissembled depths betray. Dryden.
 The sea could not be narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.
 5. The broad side of a blade.
 A darted mandate came
 From that great will which moves this mighty frame,
 Bid me to thee, my royal charge, repair,
 To guard thee from the demons of the air;
 My flaming sword above 'em to display,
 All keen and ground upon the edge of day,
 The flat to sweep the visions from thy mind,
 The edge to cut 'em through that stay behind. Dryden.
 6. Depression of thought or language.
 Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when 'tis evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together? Dryden.
 7. A surface without relief, or prominences.
 Are there then such ravishing charms in a dull unvaried flat, to make a sufficient compensation for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the living hills. Bentley's Sermon.
 To

FLA

To FLAT. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To level; to depress; to make broad and smooth.

With ivy canopy'd, and interwove

With flaunting honeyfuckle. Milton.

These courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient to flaunt it out, being frequently enough fain to immo-late their own desires to their vanity. Boyle.

Here, attir'd beyond our purse, we go,

For useless ornament and flaunting show:

We take on trust, in purple robes to shine,

And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine. Dryden's Juvenal.

You tot, you loiter about alehouses, or flaunt about the streets in your new-gilt chariot, never minding me nor your numerous family. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

2. To be hung with something loose and flying. This seems not to be proper.

Fortune in men has some small difference made;

One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade. *Pope's Essay.*FLAUNT. n. f. Any thing loose and airy.

How would he look to see his work so noble,

Wildly bound up, what would he say! or how

Should I in these my borrow'd flaunts behold

The sternness of his presence! *Shaksp. Winter's Tale.*FLAVOUR. n. f.

1. Power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 488.

2. Sweetness to the smell; odour; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and the blushing rose,

With bending heaps, to nigh their bloom disclose,

Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows. *Dry.*FLAVOURS. adj. [from flavour.]

1. Delightful to the palate.

Sweet grapes degen'tate there, and fruits declin'd

From their first flav'rous taste, renounce their kind. Dryden.

2. Fragrant; odorous.

FLAW. n. f. [Flaw, to break; ploh, Saxon, a fragment;

flaw, Dutch, broken in mind.]

1. A crack or breach in any thing.

This heart shall break into a thousand flaws,

Or ere I weep. Shaksp. King Lear.

Wool, new-thorn, being laid casually upon a vessel of ver-juice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the ver-juice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw, and had not the bung-hole open. Bacon's Natural History.

We found it exceeding difficult to keep out the air from getting in at any imperceptible hole or flaw. Boyle.

A flaw is in thy ill-bak'd vessel found;

Tis hollow, and returns a jarring sound. Dryden's Pers.

As if great Atlas, from his height,

Should sink beneath his heavenly weight;

And with a mighty flaw the flaming wall, as once it shall,

Should gape immense, and, rushing down, o'erwhelm this mortal ball. Dryden.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,

Or some frail China-jar receive a flaw. Pope.

He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach or flaw, and supply it immediately, else time alone will bring all to ruin. Swift.

2. A fault; defect.

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scrivener and brokers do value unfound men to serve their own turn. Bacon's Essays.

Traditions were a proof alone,

Could we be certain such they were, so known:

But since some flaws in long descents may be,

They make not truth, but probability. Dryden.

And laid her dowry out in law,

To null her jointure with a flaw. Hudibras, p. iii. c. 1.

Their judgment has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires. *Addison's Spectator.*So many flaws had this vow in its first conception. *Atter.*3. A sudden gust; a violent blast. [from fla, Latin.]

Being incens'd, he's fuming

As humours as Winters, and as faden Shaksp. Hen. IV.

Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,

Should patch a wall, & expel the Winter's flaw. Shaksp. Ham.

As a huge fish, laid

Near to the cold weed-gathering shore, is with a north flaw

Shoots back; so, sent against the ground, [frigid]

Was foil'd Eurialus. Chapman's Iliads.

Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,

And snow, and hail, and stormy gust, and flaw,

Boreas, and Cæcias, and Argettes loud,

And Thræcias rend the woods, and seas upturn. Milton.

I heard the rack,

As earth and sky would mingle; but myself

Was distant; and these flaws, though mortals fear them,

As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,

Or to the earth's dark basis underneath,

Are to the main inconsiderable. Milton's Paradise Lost.

FLA

4. A tumult; a tempestuous uproar.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,

Until the golden circuit on my head

Do calm the fury of this madbrain'd flaw. Shaksp. Hen. VI.

The fort's revolted to the emperor,

The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn,

And deluges of armies from the town

Came pouring in: I heard the mighty flaw;

When first it broke, the crowding ensigns saw

Which choak'd the passage. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

5. A sudden commotion of mind.

Oh these flaws and starts,

Impostors to true fear, would become

A woman's story at a Winter's fire. *Shaksp. Macbeth.*To FLAW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break; to crack; to damage with fissure.

But his flaw'd heart,

Alack, too weak the conflict to support;

Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,

Burst smilingly. Shaksp. King Lear.

The cup was flawed with such a multitude of little cracks, that it looks like a white, not like a crystalline cup. Boyle.

The brazen cauldrons with the froths are flaw'd,

The garment stiff with ice, at hearths is thaw'd. Dryden.

2. To break; to violate. Out of use.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd

Our merchant's goods. *Shaksp. Henry VIII.*FLAWLESS. adj. [from flaw.] Without cracks; without defects.

A star of the first magnitude, which the more high, more vast, and more flawless, shines only bright enough to make itself conspicuous. *Boyle on Colours.*FLAWN. n. f. [plena, Saxon; flan, French; vlaye, Dutch.]A fort of cuttard; a pie baked in a dish. *Di.*To FLAWTER. v. a. To scrape or pare a skin. *Ainsworth.*FLAWY. adj. [from flaw.] Full of flaws.FLAX. n. f. [pleax, plex, Saxon; vlay, Dutch.]

1. The fibrous plant of which the finest thread is made.

The leaves, for the most part, grow alternately on branches:

the cup of the flower consists of one leaf, is tubulous, and divided into five parts at the top: the flower consists of five leaves, which expand in form of a clove-gillflower: the ova-ry, which rises from the centre of the flowercup, becomes an almost globular fruit, which is generally pointed, and composed of many cells, in which are lodged many plain smooth seeds, which are blunt at one end, and generally sharp at the other. The species are six. The first sort is that which is cultivated for use in divers parts of Europe, and is reckoned an excellent commodity. It should be cultivated. Miller.

2. The fibres of flax cleaned and combed for the spinner.

I'll fetch some flax, and whites of eggs,

To apply to his bleeding face. Shaksp. King Lear.

Then on the rock a scanty measure place

Of vital flax, and turn'd the wheel apace,

And turning fung. *Dryden's Ovid, b. viii.*FLAXCOMB. n. f. [flax and comb.] The instrument with which the fibres of flax are cleaned from the brittle parts.

FLAXDRESSER. n. f. [flax and dress.] He that prepares flax for the spinner.

FLAXEN. adj. [from flax.]

1. Made of flax.

The matron, at her nightly task,

With penive labour draws the flaxen thread. Thomf. Winter.

The best materials for making ligatures are the flaxen thread that shoemakers use. Sharp's Surgery.

2. Fair, long and flowing, as if made of flax.

I bought a fine flaxen long wig, that cost me thirty guineas.

His locks behind, *Addison's Guardian, N^o. 97.*FLAXWEED. n. f. A plant.To FLAY. v. a. [cut flay, Ilandick; flay, Danish; vlayen, Dut.]

1. To strip of the skin.

I must have suffered famine, been eaten with wild beasts, or have fallen into the hands of the Spaniards, and been flayed alive. Raleigh's Apology.

While the old levitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to flay the sacrifices. Saith.

Then give command the sacrifice to haste;

Let the flay'd victims in the plains be cast;

And sacred vows, and mystick song, apply'd

To grilly Pluto and his gloomy bride. Pope's Odyssey, b. x.

2. To take off the skin or surface of any thing.

They flay their skin from off them, break their bones, and chop them in pieces. Mac. iii. 3.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed of cutting scraws, which is flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins, or make up their ditches. *Swift.*FLAYER. n. f. [from flay.] He that strips off the skin of any thing.

FLEA. n. f. [plea, Saxon; vlaye, Dutch; fleach, Scottish.] A small red insect remarkable for its agility in leaping, which sucks the blood of larger animals.

While wormwood hath feed, get a handful or twain,

To lave against March to make flea to refrain: White.

FLE

Where chamber is sweep'd, and wormwood is strown,

No flea for his life dare abide to be known. Tuff. Husband.

Flea breed principally of straw or mats, where there hath been a little moisture. Bacon's Natural History.

A valiant flea, that dares eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion. *Shaksp. Henry V.*To FLEA. v. a. [from the noun.] To clean from fleas.FLEABANE. n. f. [flea and bane.] A plant.

It hath undivided leaves, which, for the most part, are glutinuous, and have a strong scent: the cup of the flower is for the most part scaly, and of a cylindrical form: the flower is composed of many florets, which are succeeded by seeds with a downy substance adhering to them. *Miller.*FLEABITE. n. f. [flea and bite.]

1. Red marks caused by fleas.

The attendance of a cancer is commonly a breaking out all over the body, like a fleabiting. Wise's Surgery.

2. A small hurt or pain like that caused by the sting of a flea.

A gout, a cholic, a cutting off an arm or leg, or searing

the flesh, are but fleabites to the pains of the soul. Harvey.

The same epidemic that breaks one man's back, is not a flea-biting to another. *L'Estrange, Fable 129.*FLEABITEN. adj. [flea and bite.]

1. Stung by fleas.

2. Mean; worthless.

Fleabitten tyrod, an assembly brew'd

Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude

Chaos of presbytry, where laymen guide,

With the tame woolpack clergy by their side. *Cleveland.*FLEAK. v. a. [from fleas, Latin. See FLAKE.] A small lock, thread, or twill.

The business of men depend upon these little long fleaks or threads of hemp and flax. *Moré's Antidote against Avarice.*FLEAM. n. f. [corrupted from phlebotomus, the instrument used in phlebotomy.] An instrument used to bleed cattle, which is placed on the vein, and then driven by a blow.

FLEAWORT. n. f. [flea and wort.] A plant.

This plant agrees with plantain and buckhorn-plantain in every respect, excepting that this rises up with leafy stalks, and divides into many branches; whereas both the others produce their flowers upon naked pedicels. *Miller.*To FLECK. v. a. [fleck, German, a spot. Skinner: perhaps itis derived from fleak, or fleke, an old word for a grate, hurdle, or any thing made of parts laid transverse, from the Ilandick flake.] To spot; to streak; to stripe; to dapple; to variegate.

Let it not see the dawning fleet the skies,

Nor the grey morning from the ocean rise. Sandys.

Fleck'd in her face, and with disorder'd hair,

Her garments ruffled, and her bosom bare. *Dryden's Juven.*Both fleck'd with white, the true Arcadian strain. *Dryden.*To FLECKER. v. a. [from fleck.] To spot; to mark with strokes or touches of different colours; to mark with red whelks.

The grey-eyed morn smiles on the frowning night,

Check'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light;

And darkness fleck'd, like a drunkard, reels

From forth day's path, and Titan's burning wheels. Shaksp.

FLED. The preterite and participle not properly of fly, to use the wings, but of flee, to run away.

The truth is fled far away, and leaving is hard at hand.

In vain for life he to the altar fled; *2 Esdr. xiv. 18.*Ambition and revenge have certain speed. *Prior.*FLEDGE. adj. [flederen, to fly, Dutch.] Full-feathered; able to fly; qualified to leave the nest.

Lay waving round. *Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.*To FLEDGE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To furnish with wings; to supply with feathers.

The birds were not as yet fledged enough to shift for themselves. L'Estrange, Fable 72.

The speedy growth of birds that are hatched in nests, and fed by the old ones 'till they be fledged, and come almost to full bigness in about a fortnight, seems to me an argument of providence. Ray on the Creation.

The sandals of celestial mould,

Fledg'd with ambrosial plumes, and rich with gold,

Surround her feet. *Pope's Odyssey, b. i.*To FLEE. v. n. pret. fled. [This word is now almost universally written fly, though properly to fly, plegan, is to move with wings, and flee, plean, to run away. They are now confounded.] To run from danger; to have recourse to shelter.

Behold, this city is near to flee unto. Gen. xix. 20.

2. Facility; obsequiousness; compliance.
Ductility; manageableness.
The flexibleness of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable. Lace.

FLI

- FLEXILE. adj. [flexilis, Latin.] Pliant; easily bent; obsequious to any power or impulse.
Every flexile wave
Obeys the blast, th' aerial tumult swells. Thomson's Summer.
FLEXION. n. f. [flexio, Latin.]
1. The act of bending.
2. A double; a bending; part bent; joint.
Of a sinuous pipe that may have some four flexions, trial would be made. Bacon's Natural History, No. 222.
3. A turn towards any part of quarter.
Pity causeth sometimes tears, and a flexion or cast of the eye aside. Bacon's Natural History, No. 71.
FLEXOR. n. f. [Latin.] The general name of the muscles which act in contracting the joints.
Flatterers, who have the flexor muscles so strong that they are always bowing and cringing, might in some measure be corrected by being tied down upon a tree by the back. Arbutnot.
FLEXUOUS. adj. [flexuosus, Latin.]
1. Winding; full of turns and meanders; tortuous.
In regard of the soul, the numerous and crooked narrow crannies, and the restrained flexuous rivulets of corporeal things, are all contemptible. Digby on the Soul.
2. Bending; not strait; variable; not steady.
The trembling of a candle discovers a wind, that otherwise we do not feel; and the flexuous burning of flames doth shew the air beginneth to be unquiet. Bacon's Natural History.
FLEXURE. n. f. [flexura, Latin.]
1. The form or direction in which any thing is bent.
Contrary is the flexure of the joints of our arms and legs to that of quadrupeds: our knees bend forward, whereas the same joint of their hind legs bends backward. Ray.
2. The act of bending.
The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy;
His legs are for necessity, not flexure. Shak. Trail. and Cress.
3. The part bent; the joint.
His mighty strength lies in his able loins,
And where the flexure of his navel joins. Sandy.
4. Obsequious or servile cringe.
Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bends? Shak. Hen. V.
To FLICKER. v. a. [flicker, Dutch; pliecpaan, Saxon.]
To flutter; to play the wings; to have a fluttering motion.
Under th' allowance of your grand aspect,
Whose influence, like the wreath of radiant fire,
On flickering Phœbus' front. Shakepeare's King Lear.
'Twas ebbing darkness, past the mid' of night,
And Phosphor, on the confines of the light,
Promis'd the sun, ere day began to spring;
The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,
And flickering on her nest, made short essays to sing. Dry.
At all her stretch her little wings she spread,
And with her feather'd arms embrac'd the dead;
Then flickering to his pallid lips, she strove
To print a kiss, the last essay of love. Dryden.
FLYER. n. f. [from fly.]
1. One that runs away; a fugitive; a runaway.
Cam'st thou from where they made the stand?
— I did;
Though you, it seems, came from the fliers. Shak. Cymbel.
The gates are ope, now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fliers. Shakepeare's Coriolanus.
Now the fliers from and forsakers of their places, carry the parliamentary power along with them. King Charles.
2. That part of a machine which, by being put into a more rapid motion than the other parts, equalizes and regulates the motion of the rest; as in a jack.
The flier, tho't had laden feet,
Turn'd so quick, you scarce could see't. Swift.
FLIGHT. n. f. [from To fly.]
1. The act of flying or running from danger.
And now, too late, he wishes for the flight,
That strength he waded in ignoble flight. Denham.
He thinks by flight his mistress must be won,
And claims the prize because he best did run. Dryd. Ind. Em.
As eager of the chase, the maid
Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd;
Pan saw and lov'd, and, burning with desire,
2. Removal to another place.
The fury sprang above the Stygian flood;
And on her wicker wings, sublime through night,
She to the Latian palace took her flight. Dryden's Æn.
3. The act of using wings; volation.
For he so swift and nimble was of flight,
That from this lower tract he dar'd to fly
Up to the clouds, and thence with pinions light
To mount aloft unto the crystal sky. Spenser's Maiepeoms.
Winds that tempests brew,
When through Arabian groves they take their flight,
Made wanton with rich odours, lose their spice. Dryden.
4. Removal

FLI

4. Removal from place to place by means of wings.
Ere the bat hath flown
His cloyster'd flight. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The fowls shall take their flight away together. 2 Ejd. v. 6.
Fowls, by Winter forc'd, forsake the floods,
And wing their hasty flight to happier lands. Dryden's En.
5. A flock of birds flying together.
Flights of angels wing thee to thy rest. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
They take great pride in the feathers of birds; and this they took from their ancestors of the mountains, who were invited unto it by the infinite flights of birds that came up to the high grounds. Bacon's New Atlantis.
I call at will, doubt not,
Comm and a table in this wilderness;
And call swift flights of angels ministrant,
Array'd in glory, on my cup attend. Milton's Par. Lost.
6. The birds produced in the same season: as, the harvest flight of pigeons.
A volley; a shower; as much shot as is discharged at once.
At the first flight of arrows flew,
Full three-score Scots they flew. Cherry Chase.
Above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, pricked me like to many needles; and besides they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs. Gulliver's Travels.
8. The space past by flying.
Heat of imagination; fall of the foul.
Old Pindar's flights by him are reacht,
When on that gale his wings are stretcht. Denham.
He shew'd all the stretch of fancy at once; and if he has fail'd in some of his flights, it was but because he attempted every thing. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.
Strange graces still, and stranger flights the had;
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope, Epistle ii.
Trust me, dear! good humour can prevail,
When airs and flights, and screams and scolding fail. Pope.
10. Excursion on the wing.
If there were any certain height where the flights of ambition end, one might imagine that the interest of France were but to conserve its present greatness. Temple.
It is not only the utmost pitch of impiety, but the highest flight of folly, to deride these things. Tillotson, Sermon 2.
11. The power of flying.
In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
- FLIGHTY. adj. [from flight.]
1. Fleeting; swift.
Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
2. Wild; full of imagination.
FLIMSY. adj. [Of this word I know not any original, and suspect it to have crept into our language from the cant of manufacturers.]
1. Weak; feeble; without strength of texture.
2. Mean; spiritless; without force.
Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines. Pope, Epistle ii.
- TO FLINCH. v. n. [corrupted from fling. Skinner.]
1. To shrink from any suffering or undertaking; to withdraw from any pain or danger.
Every martyr could keep one eye steadily fixed upon immortality, and look death and danger out of countenance with the other; nor did they flinch from duty, for fear of martyrdom. South's Sermons.
A child, by a constant course of kindness, may be accustomed to bear very rough usage without flinching or complaining. Locke.
Oh ingratitude, that John Bull, whom I have honoured with my friendship, should flinch at last, and pretend that he can disburse no more money. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
2. In Shakespeare it signifies to fail.
If I break time, or flinch in property
Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die. Shakespeare.
- FLINCHER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who shrinks or fails in any matter.
TO FLING. preter. flung; part. flung or flung. v. a. [from fligo, Latin, Skinner: according to others from flying; so to fling is to let flying.]
1. To cast from the hand; to throw.
The matrons flung their gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs Upon him. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
'Tis fate that flings the dice; and as the flings,
Of kings makes peasants, and of peasants kings. Dryden.
2. To dart; to cast with violence.
How much unlike that Hector who return'd Clad in Achilles' spoils; when he, among
A thousand ships, like Jove, his lightning flung. Denham.
3. To scatter.
Every beam new transient colours flings,
Colours that change whenever they wave their wings. Pope.
4. To drive by violence.

FLI

- A heap of rocks, falling, would expel the waters out of their places with such a violence as to fling them among the highest clouds. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
5. To move forcibly.
The knight feeling his habitation reduced to so small compact, ordered all the apartments to be flung open. Addison's Spect.
 6. To eject; to dismiss.
Cromwell, I charge thee fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
 7. To cast reproach.
I know thy gen'rous temper:
Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it;
It strait takes fire. Addison's Cat.
 8. To force into another condition; properly into a worse.
Squalid fortune, into baseness flung,
Doth scorn the pride of wonted ornaments. Spenser.
 9. To FLING down. To demolish; to ruin.
These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some of those which were before standing. Woodward's Natural History.
 10. To FLING off. To baffle in the chase; to defeat of a prey.
These men are too well acquainted with the chase to be flung off by any false steps or doubles. Addison's Spectator.
 - TO FLING. v. n.
1. To flounce; to wince; to fly into violent and irregular motions.
The angry beast
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if he had been beside his sense. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.
Their consciences are galled by it, and this makes them
wince and fling as if they had some mettle. Tillotson's Sermon.
 2. To FLING out. To grow unruly or outrageous: from the act of any angry horse that throws out his legs.
Duncan's horses,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out, Contending 'gainst obedience. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 - FLING. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A throw; a cast.
2. A gibe; a sneer; a contemptuous remark.
No little scribbler is of wit so bare,
But has his fling at the poor wedded pair. Addison.
I, who love to have a fling
Both at senate-house and king,
Thought no method more commodious
Than to throw their vices odious. Swift.
 - FLINGER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. He who throws.
2. He who jeers.
 - FLINT. n. f. [plur. Saxon.]
1. A semi-pellucid stone, composed of crystal debased, of a blackish grey, of one similar and equal substance, free from veins, and naturally invetted with a whitish crust. It is sometimes smooth and equal, more frequently rough: its size is various. It is well known to strike fire with steel. It is useful in glassmaking. Hill on Flint.
Searching the window for a flint, I found
This paper. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
Love melts the rigour which the rocks have bred;
A flint will break upon a featherbed. Clarendon.
There is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in fire kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled by a beam from the sun. South's Sermons.
Take this, and lay your flint edg'd weapon by. Dryden.
I'll fetch quick fuel from the neighb'ring wood,
And strike the sparkling flint, and dress the food. Prior.
 2. Any thing eminently or proverbially hard.
Your tears, a heart of flint Might tender make. Spenser.
Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault. Sh. Ant. and Cleop.
 - FLINTY. adj. [from flint.]
1. Made of flint; strong.
Tyrant custom
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down. Shakespeare's Othello.
A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back. Dryden.
 2. Full of stones.
The gathering up of flints in flinty ground, and laying them on heaps, is no good husbandry. Bacon's Natural History.
 3. Hard of heart; cruel; savage; inexorable.
I did him a desired office,
Dear almost as his life; which gratitude,
Through flinty Tartar's bosom, would peep forth,
And answer thanks. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.
 - FLIPP. n. f. [A cant word.] A liquor much used in ships, made by mixing beer with spirits and sugar.
The tarawlin and swabber is lolling at Madagascar, with some drunken funburnt whore, over a can of flip. Denham.
 - FLIPPANT. adj. [A word of no great authority, probably derived from flip-flap.]

1. Nimble;

FLI

1. Nimble; moveable. It is used only of the act of speech.
An excellent anatomist promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices, which render it so wonderfully voluble or flippant. Addison.
2. Pert; talkative.
Away with flippant epilogues. Thomson.
- FLIPPANTLY. adv. [from the adjective.] In a flowing prating way.

FLIRT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A quick clatlick motion.
In unflirting the fan are several little flirts and vibrations, as also gradual and deliberate openings. Addison's Spectator.
Before you pass th' imaginary flights
While the spread fan o'erlurds your closing eyes,
Then give one flirt, and all the vision flies. Pope.
2. A sudden trick.
Have licence to play,
At the hedge a flirt,
For a sheet or a flirt. Ben. Johnson's Gypsies.
3. A pert young hussy.
Scurvy knave, I am none of his flirt gills; I am none of his skains mates. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
Several young flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world. Addison's Guardian, No. 109.
- FLIRTATION. n. f. [from flirt.] A quick sprightly motion. A cant word among women.
A muslin flounce, made very full, would give a very agreeable flirtation air. Pope.
- TO FLIRT. v. n. [from To flirt; or from flitter, Danish, to remove.]
1. To fly away.
Likelt it seemeth, in my simple wit,
Unto the fair sunshine in Summer's day,
That when a dreadful storm away is flit,
Through the broad world doth spread his goodly ray. Spenser.
His grudging ghost did strive
With the frail flesh; at last it flitted is,
Whether the souls do die of men that live amiss. Fairy Qu.
2. To remove; to migrate. In Scotland it is still used for removing from one place to another at quarter-day, or the usual term.
So hardly he the flitted life does win,
Unto her native prison to return. Fairy Queen, cant. 7.
It became a received opinion, that the souls of men, departing this life, did flit out one body into some other. Hooker.
3. To flutter; to rove on the wing.
He made a glancing shot, and mis'd the dove;
Yet mis'd so narrow, that he cut the cord
Which fasten'd, by the foot, the flitting bird. Dryden's En.
Fear the just gods, and think of Scylla's fate!
Chang'd to a bird, and sent to flit in air. Pope.
4. To be flur or unfatle.
Himself up high he lifted from the ground,
And with strong flight did forcibly divide
The yielding air, which nigh too feeble found Her flitting parts, and element unfound. Fairy Queen, b. i.
He stoop'd at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to flitting air resign'd. Dryden's En.
- FLIRT. adj. [from flit.] Swift; nimble; quick.
And in his hand two darts exceeding flit,
In peison and in blood, of malice and delight. Fairy Qu.
- FLIRCH. n. f. [flocce, Saxon; flycke, Danish; flyche, flache,
French. Skinner.] The side of a hog salted and cured.
But heretofore 'twas thought a sumptuous feast,
On birthdays, festivals, or days of state,
A salt dry flitch of bacon to prepare;
If they had fresh meat, 'twas delicious fare. Dryden's Juv.
While he from out the chimney took
A flitch of bacon off the hook,
Cut out large slices to be fry'd.
He sometimes accompanies the present with a flitch of bacon. Swift.
- FLITTERMOUSE. n. f. The bat.
- FLITTING. n. f. [plur. Saxon; scandal.] An offence; a fault.

by a deluge. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
Now flocks with snow's the misty mountain-ground,
And floated fields lie undistinguish'd round. Pope's Statius.
The vast parterres a thousand hands shall make:
Lo! Cobham comes, and floats them with a lake. Pope.
- FLAOT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of floating; the flux; the contrary to the ebb. A sense now out of use.
Our trust in the Almighty is, that with us contentions are now at their highest float. Hooker, Preface.
Of this kind is some disposition of bodies to rotation, particularly from East to West; of which kind we conceive the main float and reflux of the sea is, which is by content of the universe, as part of the diurnal motion. Bacon's Nat. History.
- 2. Any body so contrived or formed as to swim upon the water.
They took it for a ship, and, as it came nearer, for a boat;
but it proved a float of weeds and rushes. L'Estrange's Fables.
A passage for the weary people make;
With other floats the standing water throw,
Of maffy itones make bridges, if it flow. Dryden's Virgil.

FLO'RID. adj. [floridus, Latin.]

1. Productive of flowers; covered with flowers.
2. Bright in colour; flushed with red.
Our beauty is in colour inferior to many flowers; and when it is most florid and gay, three fits of an ague can change it into yellowness and leanness. Taylor's Rule of Living.
The qualities of blood in a healthy state are to be florid, when let out of the vessel, the red part congealing strongly and soon. Abulcasim on Aliments.

3. Embellished; splendid; brilliant with decorations.
The florid, elevated, and figurative way is for the passions; for love and hatred, fear and anger, are begotten in the soul, by shewing their objects out of their true proportion. Dryden.
How did, pray, the florid youth offend,
Whose speech you took, and gave it to a friend? Pope.
FLORIDITY. n. f. [from florid.] Freshness of colour.
There is a floridity in the face from the good digestion of the red part of the blood. Flager on the Humours.

FLORIDNESS. n. f. [from florid.]
1. Freshness of colour.
2. Embellishment; ambitious elegance.

Such cheeses, good Cicerly, ye floted too high. Tupper.
FLO'USON. n. f. [from flote.] Goods that swim without an owner on the sea.
FLO'TTEN. part. [from flote.] Skimmed. Skinner.

To FLOUNCE. v. n. [flop, Dutch, to plunge.]
1. To move with violence in the water or mire; to struggle or dash in the water.
With his broad fins and forked tail he dives
The rising surge, and flounces in the waves. Addison's Ovid.

2. To move with weight and tumult.
Six flouncing Flanders mares
Are e'en as good as any two of theirs. Prior.

3. To move with passionate agitation.
When I'm duller than a post,
Nor can the plainest word pronounce,
You neither fume, nor fret, nor flounce. Swift.

To FLOUNCE. v. a. To deck with flounces.
She was flounced and furbelowed from head to foot; every ribbon was crinkled, and every part of her garments in curl. Addison's Spectator, No. 129.

They have got into the fashion of flouncing the petticoat to very deep, that it looks like an entire coat of lutealizing. Pope.
FLOUNCE. n. f. [from the verb.] Any thing sewed to the garment, and hanging loose, so as to swell and shake.

Nay, oft in dreams invention we bestow,
To change a flounce, or add a furbelow. Pope.
A muslin flounce, made very full, would be very agreeable. Pope.

FLO'UNDER. n. f. [flynder, Danish; fluke, Scottish.] The name of a small flat fish.

Like the flounder, out of the frying-pan into the fire. Camd.
Flounder will both thrive and breed in any pond. Mortimer.

To FLO'UNDER. v. n. [from flounce.] To struggle with violent and irregular motions: as a horse in the mire.
Down goes at once the horseman and the horse;
That courser stumbles on the fallen steed,
And flound'ring throws the rider o'er his head. Dryden.

FLO

The more inform'd, the less he understood,
And deeper sunk by flound'ring in the mud.
He chaps the bit, impatient of his loss,
And starts aside, and flounders at the cross. Dryden.
He plung'd for sense, but found no bottom there;
Then writ and flound'ring on, in mere despair. Pope's Dunci.

To FLOURISH. v. n. [floreo, florere, Latin.]
1. To be in vigour; not to fade.
The righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree. Pf. xcii. 12.
Where e'er you tread, the blushing flow'r's shall rise,
And all things flourish where you turn your eyes. Pope.
2. To be in a prosperous state.

If I could find example
Of thousands, that had struck anointed kings,
And flourish'd after, I'd not do't: but since Nor brass, nor stone, nor parchment, bears not one,
Let villany itself forswear't. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Harry, that prophesied thou should'st be king,
Doth comfort thee in sleep; live thou and flourish. Shakespeare.
He was the patron of my manhood, when I flourish'd in the opinion of the world, though with small advantage to my fortune. Dryden's Dedicat. to Lord Clifford.

3. To use florid language; to speak with ambitious copiousness and elegance.
Whilst Cicero adds the part of a rhetorician, he dilates and flourishes, and gives example instead of rule. Baker.
You should not affect to flourish in a copious harangue and a diffusive style in company. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

They dilate sometimes, and flourish long upon little incidents, and they skip over and but lightly touch the drier part of their theme. Watts's Logic.

4. To describe various figures by intersecting lines; to play in wanton and irregular motions.
Impetuous spread
The stream and smooking, flourish'd o'er his head. Pope.

5. To boast; to brag.
[In music.] To play some prelude.
To FLOURISH. v. a.

1. To adorn with vegetable beauty.
With shadowy verdure flourish'd high,
A sudden youth the groves enjoy. Fonten.
2. To adorn with figures of needle work.
3. To work with a needle into figures.

All that I shall say will be but like bottoms of thread close wound up, which, with a good needle, perhaps may be flourish'd into large works. Bacon's War with Spain.
4. To move any thing in quick circles or vibrations by way of show or triumph.

And all the powers of hell in full applause
Flourish'd their snakes, and tof'd their flaming brands. Cra.
Against the post their wicker shields they crush, Flourish the sword, and at the plastron push. Dryden's Tro.
5. To adorn with embellishments of language; to grace with eloquence ostentatiously diffusive.

We should add the labours of Hercules, though flourish'd with much fabulous matter; yet it doth notably set forth the content of all nations and ages in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating giants, monsters and tyrants. Bacon.
6. To adorn; to embellish; to grace.
To bring you thus together, 'tis no fin,
Sith that the justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

FL'OURISH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Bravery; beauty.
I call'd thee then vain flourish of my fortune;
I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,
The presentation of but what I was. Shakespeare's Richard III.

The flourish of his sober youth,
Was the pride of naked truth. Crashaw.
2. An ostentatious embellishment; ambitious copiousness; far-fetched elegance.

This is a flourish: there follow excellent parables. Bacon.
We can excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow the flourish of poetry thereon, or those commendatory conceits which popularly set forth the eminence of this creature. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 5.

The apprehension is so deeply rivetted into my mind, that such rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen or brush it out. More's Divine Dialogues.

Villanies have not the same countenance, when there are great interests, plausible colours, and flourishes of wit and rhetoric interposed between the sight and the object. L'Estr.

The so much repeated ornament and flourish of their former speeches was commonly the truest word they spoke, though least believed by them. South's Sermons.

Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes he flurs his crimes;
He lards with flourishes his long harangue;
'Tis fine, say't thou; what to be prais'd, and hang? Dryd.

3. Figures formed by lines curiously or wantonly drawn.
A child with delight looks upon emblems finely drawn and painted, and takes some pleasure in beholding the neat charaeters and flourishes of a bible curiously printed. Boyle.

They were intended only for ludicrous ornaments of nature, like the flourishes about a great letter that signify nothing, but are made only to delight the eye. More against Atheism.
FLO'URISHER. n. f. [from flourish.] One that is in prime or in prosperity.

They count him of the green-hair'd eld, they may, or in his flow'r;
For not our greatest flourisher can equal him in pow'r. Chapman's Iliads.

To FLOUT. v. a. [fluyten, Dutch; flaunce, Frisick.] To mock; to insult; to treat with mockery and contempt.
You must flout my insufficiency. Shakespeare.
The Norwegian banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He mock'd us when he begg'd our voices;
Certainly he flouted us downright. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
She rail'd at her, that the should be so immodest to write to one the knew would flout her. Shakespeare.

Flout flouts me. Walton's Angler.
To Flout. v. n. To practise mockery; to behave with contempt; to sneer.

Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off this argument? Shakespeare.
With talents well endu'd
To be scurrilous and rude;
When you perty raise your snout,
Flee and gibe, and laugh and flout. Swift.

Flout. n. f. [from the verb.] A mock; an insult; a word or act of contempt.
He would ask of those that had been at the other's table,
Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given? Bacon.
She opened it, and read it out,
With many a smile and leering flout. Hudibras, p. iii.

Their doors are barr'd against a bitter flout;
Snarl, if you please; but you shall snarl without. Dryden.
How many flouts and jeers must I expose myself to by this repentance? How shall I answer such an old acquaintance when he invites me to an intemperate cup? Calamy's Serm.

Flouter. n. f. [from flout.] One who jeers.
To FLOW. v. n. [flop, Saxon.]

1. To run or spread as water.
The god am I, whose yellow water flows
Around these fields, and fattens as it goes. Dryden's Æn.
Fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below. Dryden.
Endless tears flow down in streams. Swift.

2. To run; opposed to standing waters.
With other flows the standing water flow;
Of massy stones make bridges, if it flow. Dryden.

2. To rise; not to ebb.
This river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between. Shakespeare.

3. To melt.
Oh that thou wouldst rent the heavens, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence. Is. lxiv. 1.

4. To proceed; to issue.
I'll use that tongue I have; if wit flow from't,
I shall do good. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

The knowledge drawn from experience is quite of another kind from that which flows from speculation or discourse. South.

5. To glide smoothly without aperity: as, a flowing period.
This discourse of Cyprian, and the flowers of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been of a great wit and flowing eloquence. Hakewill on Providence.

6. To write smoothly; to speak volubly.
Virgil is sweet and flowing in his hexameters. Dryden.
Did sweeter sounds adorn my flowing tongue
Than ever man pronounc'd, or angel sung. Prior.

7. To abound; to be crowded.
The dry streets flow'd with men. Chapman.

8. To be copious; to be full.
Then shall our names,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shak. Hen. V.
There e'ry eye with stumb'ring chains the bound,
And dash'd the flowing goblet to the ground. Pope's Odyssey.

9. To hang loose and waving.
He was clothed in a flowing mantle of green silk, interwoven with flowers. Spektator, No. 425.

To Flow. v. a. To overflow; to deluge.
In a hot dry Summer watering would be a very great advantage to hops; but it is scarce practicable, unless you have a stream at hand to flow the ground. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Flow. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The rise of water; not the ebb.
Some, from the diurnal and annual motion of the earth, endeavour to solve the flows and motions of these seas, illustrating the same by water in a bowl, that rises or falls according to the motion of the vessel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The ebb of tides, and their mysterious flows,
We as arts elements shall understand. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

2. A sudden plenty or abundance.
The noble power of suffering bravely is as far above that of enterprising greedily, as an unblemished conscience and inflexible resolution are above an accidental flow of spirits, or a sudden tide of blood. Pope.

3. A stream of diction; volubility of tongue. Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the draining of an hour-glass; but an effectual procuring that a man know something which he knew not before, or to know it better. South.

FLOWER. n. f. [flour, French; flor, flor, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds.

Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have petala, a stamen, apex and stylus; and whatever flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other smaller ones, and which usually have but one single style; and compounded, which consist of many florets, all making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower all of one intire leaf, though sometimes cut or divided a little way into many seeming petala, or leaves; as in borage, bugloss, &c. or polypetalous, which have distinct petala, and those falling off singly, and not all together, as the seeming petala of monopetalous flowers always do: but those are further divided into uniform and difform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike; but the difform have no such regularity, as in the flowers of sage, deadnettle, &c. A monopetalous difform flower is likewise further divided into, first, semi-fistular, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the arilistochia: 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthum and scordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers: and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and so turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamæcistus, &c. but most commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and so represents a kind of helmet, or monkhood; and from thence these are frequently called galeate, eucullate, and galeculate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes also the lamium is intire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Coriculate; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as in the linaria, delphinium, &c. and the carniculum, or calcar, is always impervious at the tip or point. Compounded flowers are either, first, discous or discoidal; that is, whose florets are set together so close, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the flower plain and flat, which therefore, because of its round form, will be like a discus; which disk is sometimes radiated, when there is a row of petala standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c. and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanacetum: 2d, planifolious, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in circular rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched uneven and jagged, as the hieracia, &c. 3d, fistular, which is compounded of many long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jaws at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petala, are called staminate, apetalous, and capillaceous; and those which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the july, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cat-tail. The term campaniformis is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel. Miller.

Good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying ere they sicken. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
With flow'r inwoven tresses torn,
The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn. Milton.
Beauteous flow'rs why do we spread
Upon the monuments of the dead?
Though the same fun with all diffusive rays
Blush in the rose and in the diamond blaze,
We praise the stronger effort of his power,
And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.
If the blossom of the plant be of most importance, we call it a flower; such are daisies, tulips, and carnations. Watts.
2. An ornament; an embellishment. This discourse of Cyprian, and the excellent flowers of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been a sweet and powerful orator. Hakewill on Providence.
Truth needs no flow'rs of speech. Pope.
3. The prime; the flourishing part. Alas! young man, your days can ne'er be long: In flow'r of age you perish for a long. Pope's Horace Impr.
4. The edible part of corn; the meal. The bread I would have in flower, so as it might be baked still to serve their necessary want. Spenser on Ireland.
I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a fort of glue. Arbutnot on Aliments.

FLO

But by thy care twelve urns of wine be fill'd,
Next these in worth, and firm those urns be seal'd;
Be twice ten measures of the choicest flour
Prepar'd, ere yet descends the evening hour. Pope's Odyssey.

5. The most excellent or valuable part of any thing; quintessence. The choice and flower of all things profitable the Palms do more briefly contain, and more movingly express, by reason of their poetical form. Hasker.

Thou hast slain

The flower of Europe for his chivalry. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
The French monarchy is exhausted of its bravest subjects; the flower of the nation is consumed in its wars. Addison.

6. That which is most distinguished for any thing valuable. He is not the flower of courtesy; but, I warrant him, as gentle as a lamb. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

FLOWER de LUCE. n. f. A bulbous iris. It hath a lily flower of one leaf, shaped like that of the common iris: the point has three leaves, and the empalement turns to a fruit shaped like that of the common iris. Its root is bulbous. Milner specifies thirty-four species of this plant; and among them the Persian flower de luce is greatly esteemed for the sweetness and beauty of its variegated flowers, which are in perfection in February, or the beginning of March.

Crop'd are the flower de luce in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
The iris is the flower de luce. Pacham.
To FLOW'ER. v. n. [florir, French, or from the noun.]
1. To be in flower; to be in blossom; to bloom; to put forth flowers.
So forth they marched in this goodly fort,
To take the solace of the open air,
And in fresh flowering fields themselves to sport. Fairy Queen.
Sacred hill, whose head full high,
Is, as it were, for endless memory
Of that dear Lord, who oft thereon was found,
For ever with a flow'ring garland crown'd. Fairy Queen.
Then herbs of every leaf, that sudden flower'd,
Op'ning their various colours. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load. Dryden's Georg.
To leafless shrubs the flow'ring palms succeed,
And od'rous myrtle to the noisome weed. Pope's Messiah.

2. To be in the prime; to flourish. Whilome in youth, when flower'd my youthful spring,
Like swallow swift, I wandered here and there;
For heat of heedless lust me did so sting,
That I of doubted danger had no fear. Spenser's Pastoral.
This cause detain'd me all my flow'ring youth,
Within a loathsome dungeon there to pine. Shak. Hen. VI.
3. To froth; to ferment; to mantle, as new bottled beer. Those above water were the best, and that beer did flower a little; whereas that under water did not, though it were fresh. Bacon's Natural History, N. 385.
An extreme clarification doth spread the spirits to smooth that they become dull, and the drink dead, which ought to have a little flowering. Bacon's Natural History.
4. To come as cream from the surface. If you can accept of these few observations, which have flower'd off, and are, as it were, the burnishing of many studious and contemplative years, I here give you them to dispose of. Milton on Education.

To FLOW'ER. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with fictitious or imitated flowers. Sometimes her head she fondly would disguise
With gaudy garlands, or fresh flow'rets dight,
About her neck, or rings of ruffles plight. Fairy Queen.
No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flow'rets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile pacer. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
That same dew, which sometime on the buds
Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,
Stood now within the pretty flow'ret's eyes,
Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail. Shakespeare.
So to the sylvan lodge
They came, that like Pomona's arbour smil'd,
With flow'rets deck'd, and fragrant smells. Milt. Par. Lost.
Then laughs the childish year with flow'rets crown'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around;
But no substantial nourishment receives,
Infirm the stalks, unfold are the leaves. Dryden's Fables.

FLOW'RGARDEN. n. f. [flower and garden.] A garden in which flowers are principally cultivated. Observing that this manure produced flowers in the field, I made my gardener try those shells in my flowergarden, and I never saw better carnations or flowers. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FLOW'ERINESS. n. f. [from flower.] 1. The state of abounding in flowers.

2. Floridness

FLU

2. Floridness of speech.

FLOW'ERINGBUSH. n. f. A plant.

The leaves are triangular and grassy, the stalks naked, and the flowers disposed in an umbella upon the top of the stalk, each consisting of six leaves: three of them are large, and three small, which are expanded in form of a rose. Milner.

FLOW'ERT. adj. [from flower.] Full of flowers; adorned with flowers real or fictitious.

My mother Circe, with the syrens three,
Amid't the flow'ry kirtl'd Naiades. Milton.

Day's harbinger
Comes dancing from the East, and leads with her
The flow'ry May, who from her green lap throws
The yellow cowslip and the pale primrose. Milton.

O'er his fair limbs a flow'ry veil he threw. Pope's Odyssey.

To her the flow'ry grove, the flow'ry field,
The streams and fountains, no delight could yield. Pope.

FLOW'INGLY. adv. [from flow.] With volubility; with abundance.

FLOW'K. n. f. [flake, Scott.] A flounder; the name of a fish. Amongst these the fluke, sole, and plaice follow the tide up into the fresh waters. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

FLOW'KWORT. n. f. The name of a plant.

FLOW'N. Participle of fly, or flee, they being confounded. 1. Gone away.

For those,
Appointed to sit there, had left their charge,
Flown to the upper world. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

Where, my deluded sense! was reason flown?
Where the high majesty of David's throne? Prior.

2. Puffed; inflated; elate. And when night
Darkens the freets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine. Milton's P. L.

FLU'CTUANT. adj. [fluctuans, Latin.] Wavering; uncertain. To be longing for this thing to-day, and for that thing to-morrow; to change likings for loathings, and to stand willing and hankering at a venture, how is it possible for any man to be at rest in this fluctuant wandering humour and opinion? L'Estrange.

To FLUCTUATE. v. n. [fluctuo, Latin.] 1. To roll to and again as water in agitation.

The fluctuating fields of liquid air,
With all the curious meteors hovering there,
And the wide regions of the land, proclaim
The Pow'r Divine, that rais'd the mighty frame. Blackmore.

2. To float backward and forward, as with the motion of water.

3. To move with uncertain and hasty motion. The temper
New part puts on; and, as to passion mov'd, Fluctuates disturb'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

4. To be in an uncertain state; to feel sudden vicissitudes. As the greatest part of my estate has been hitherto of an unsteady and volatile nature, either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tenements. Addison's Spectator, N. 549.

5. To be irresolute; to be undetermined.

FLUCTUATION. n. f. [fluctuatio, Latin; fluctuation, French, from fluctuo.] 1. The alternate motion of the water.

Its fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, storms, shores, shelves, and every interjacency irregulates. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 17.

They were caused by the impulses and fluctuation of water in the bowels of the earth. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Uncertainty; indetermination. It will not hinder it from making a profelyte of a person, that loves fluctuation of judgment little enough to be willing to be eased of it by any thing but error. Boyle.

FLUE. n. f. [A word of which I know not the etymology, unless it be derived from fluo of fly.] 1. A small pipe or chimney to convey air, heat, or smoke.

2. Soft down or fur, such as may fly in the wind.

FLUE'LIN. n. f. The herb SPEEDWELL.

FLU'ENCY. n. f. [from fluens.] 1. The quality of flowing; smoothness; freedom from harshness or asperity.

Fluency of numbers, and most expressive figures for the poet, morals for the serious, and pleasantries for admirers of points of wit. Garth's Preface to Ovid.

2. Readiness; copiousness; volubility. Our public liturgy must be calhied, the better to please those men who gloried in their extemporary vein and fluency. King Charles.

Th' unthinking victors vainly boast their pow'r's;
Be their's the mulquet, while the tongue is ours;
We reason with false fluency and fire,
The beams we baffle, and the learned tire. Ticell.

The common fluency of speech in many men, and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter, and a scarcity of words; for whoever is a master of language, and hath a mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to hesitate upon the choice of both. Swift's Thoughts on various Subjects.

FLU'ENT. adj. [fluens, Latin.] 1. Liquid.

It is not malleable; but yet is not fluent, but stupified. Bac.

2. Flowing; in motion; in flux. Motion being a fluent thing, and one part of its duration being absolutely independent upon another, it doth not follow that because any thing moves this moment, it must necessarily continue to do so to the next. Ray on the Creation.

3. Ready; copious; voluble. Those have some natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluent and luxurious speech. Bacon.

I shall lay before you all that's within me,
And with most fluent utterance. Denham's Sephy.

FLU'ENT. n. f. Stream; running water. Confiding in their hands, that sed'ulous strive
To cut th' outrageous flood; in this distress,
Ev'n in the fight of death. Phillips.

FLUID. adj. [fluidus, Latin; fluide, French.] Having parts easily separable; not solid.

Or serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same war'ry cloud,
Left it again dissolve, and show'r the earth? Milt. P. Lost.

If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton's Opt.

FLU'ID. n. f. [In physick.] Any animal juice: as the blood. Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole course of the fluids. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

FLU'IDITY. n. f. [fluiditas, Fr. from fluide.] The quality in bodies opposite to solidity; want of adherence between the parts. Heat promotes fluidity very much, by diminishing the tenacity of bodies: it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids; as of oil, balsam and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance. Newton's Opt.

A disease opposite to this spiffitude is too great fluidity. Arb.

FLU'IDNESS. n. f. [from fluide.] That quality in bodies opposite to stability. What if we should say that fluidness and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture, the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too? Boyle.

FLU'IMERY. n. f. A kind of food made by coagulation of wheatflower or oatmeal. Milk and slummary are very fit for children. Lucke.

FLUNG. participle and preterite of fling. Thrown; cast. Several statues the Romans themselves flung into the river, when they would revenge themselves. Addison on Italy.

FLU'OR. n. f. [Latin.] 1. A fluid state.

The particles of fluids which do not cohere too strongly, and are of such a smallness as renders them most susceptible of those agitations which keep liquors in a fluid, are most easily separated and rarified into vapours. Newton's Opt.

2. Catamenia. Newton's Opt.

FLU'ARY. n. f. 1. A gust or storm of wind; a hasty blast. The boat was overtaken by a sudden flurry from the North. Gulliver's Travels.

2. Hurry; a violent commotion. To FLUSH. v. n. [fluere, Dutch, to flow; fluus, or flux, Fr.] 1. To flow with violence.

The pulse of the heart he attributes to an ebullition and sudden expansion of the blood in the ventricles, after the manner of the milk, which, being heated to such a degree, doth suddenly, and all at once, flub up and run over the vessel. Ray.

It flubbes violently out of the cock for about a quart, and then stops. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To come in haste. If the place but affords
Any store of lucky birds,
As I make 'em to flub,
Each owl out of his bush. Ben. Johnson's Owls.

3. To glow in the skin; to produce a colour in the face by a sudden afflux of blood. Had left the salt of most unrighteous tears
Ere yet the flubbing in her gauled eyes,
She married. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Thus Eve with count'enance blithe her story told,
But in her cheek distemper flubbing glow'd. Milt. Par. Lost.

What can be more significant than the sudden flubbing and confusion of a blush? Collier of the Aspects.

FLU

3. Affluence; abundance. This sense is obsolete.

Those who grow old in fluency and ease,
Behold him tost on seas. Sandys's Paraphrase on Job.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandys.

FLU'ENT. adj. [fluens, Latin.] 1. Liquid.

It is not malleable; but yet is not fluent, but stupified. Bac.

2. Flowing; in motion; in flux. Motion being a fluent thing, and one part of its duration being absolutely independent upon another, it doth not follow that because any thing moves this moment, it must necessarily continue to do so to the next. Ray on the Creation.

3. Ready; copious; voluble. Those have some natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluent and luxurious speech. Bacon.

I shall lay before you all that's within me,
And with most fluent utterance. Denham's Sephy.

FLU'ENT. n. f. Stream; running water. Confiding in their hands, that sed'ulous strive
To cut th' outrageous flood; in this distress,
Ev'n in the fight of death. Phillips.

FLUID. adj. [fluidus, Latin; fluide, French.] Having parts easily separable; not solid.

Or serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same war'ry cloud,
Left it again dissolve, and show'r the earth? Milt. P. Lost.

If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton's Opt.

But in her cheek distemper flubbing glow'd. Milt. Par. Lost.

What can be more significant than the sudden flubbing and confusion of a blush? Collier of the Aspects.

What

FLU

- What means that lovely fruit? What means, alas!
That blood, which flushes guilty in your face? Dryden.
At once, array'd
In all the colours of the flushing year,
The garden glows. Thomson's Spring, l. 95.
4. To shine. Obsolete.
A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Spenser.
To FLUSH. v. a.
1. To colour; to redden.
The glowing dames of Zama's royal court,
Have faces flush'd with more exalted charms. Addis. Cato.
Some court, or secret corner seek,
Nor flush with flame the passing virgin's cheek. Gay's Triv.
2. To elate; to elevate.
A prosperous people, flushed with great victories and successes, are rarely known to confine their joys within the bounds of moderation and innocence. Atterbury's Sermons.
FLUSH. adj.
1. Fresh; full of vigour.
He took my father grossly, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blown, and flush as May;
And how his audit stands, who knows, save heav'n? Shak.
I love to wear cloths that are flush,
Not preface old rags with plush. Cleaveland.
2. Affluent; abounding. A cant word.
Lord Strat was not very flush in ready, either to go to law or clear old debts; neither could he find good bail. Arbuthnot.
FLUSH. n. f. [fluxus, Latin.] A sudden impulse; violent flow.
Never had any man such a loss, cries a widower, in the flush of his extravagancies for a dead wife. L'Estrange.
The pulse of the arteries is not only caused by the pulsation of the heart, driving the blood through them in manner of a wave or flush, but by the coats of the arteries themselves. Ray.
Succels may give him a present flush of joy; but when the short transport is over, the apprehension of losing succeeds to the care of acquiring. Rogers's Sermons.
2. Cards all of a sort.
To FLUSH. v. a. [from To flush.] To make hot and rosy with drinking; to make half drunk.
Three lads of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits,
Have I to-night flush'd with flowing cups,
And they watch too. Shakespeare's Othello.
FLUTE. n. f. [flute, French; flute, Dutch.]
1. A musical pipe; a pipe with stops for the fingers.
Th' oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke. Shak. Ant. and Cleo.
The soft complaining flute
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whisper'd by the warbling lute. Dryden.
2. A channel or furrow in a pillar, like the concave of a flute split.
To FLUTE. v. a. To cut columns into hollows.
To FLUTTER. v. n. [placere, Saxon; flutter, French.]
1. To take short flights with great agitation of the wings.
As an eagle stirr'd up her nest, flutter'd over her young, and spreadeth abroad her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him. Deut. xxxii. 11.
When your hands untie these strings,
Think you've an angel by the wings;
One that gladly will be nigh,
To wait upon each morning-sigh;
To flutter in the balmy air
Of your well-perfum'd pray'r.
They fed, and, flut'ring, by degrees withdrew. Dryden.
Of your well-perfum'd pray'r.
They fed, and, flut'ring, by degrees withdrew. Dryden.
2. To move about with great show and bustle without consequence.
Excess muddies the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Grew.
No rag, no scrap of all the beau or wit,
That once flut'ers, and that once to writ. Pope's Dunci.
3. To be moved with quick vibrations or undulations.
Ye spirits! to your charge repair;
The flut'ring fan be Zephyretta's care. Pope.
They the tall mast above the vessel rear,
Or teach the flut'ring sail to float in air. Pope's Odyssey.
4. To be in agitation; to move irregularly; to be in a state of uncertainty.
The relation being brought him what a glorious victory was got, and with what difficulty, and how long the flutter'd upon the wings of doubtful success, he was not surpris'd.
It is impossible that men should certainly discover the agreement or disagreement of ideas, whilst their thoughts flutter about, or stick only in founts of doubtful signification. Locke.
Esteem we these, my friends! event and chance,
Produc'd by atoms from their flut'ring dance! Prior.
Some never arrive at any deep, solid, or valuable knowledge, because they are perpetually fluttering over the surface of things. Watts.
His thoughts are very fluttering and wandering; and cannot be fix'd attentively to a few ideas successively. Watts.
To FLUTTER. v. a.

1. The act of flowing; passage.
The most simple and primary motion of fire is a flux, in a direct line from the centre of the fuel to its circumference.
By the perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of them is thrown out of the body. Arbuthnot.
2. The state of passing away and giving place to others.
The heat of the sun in animals whose parts are successive, and in a continual flux, can produce a deep and perfect gloss of blackness. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 10.
What the stated rate of interest should be, in the constant change of affairs, and flux of money, is hard to determine. Locke.
In the constituent matter of one body, turning naturally to another like body, the stock or fund can never be exhausted, nor the flux and alteration sensible. Woodward.
Languages, like our bodies, are in a perpetual flux, and stand in need of recruits to supply the place of those words that are continually falling through disuse. Felton on the Cliffs.
3. Any flow or issue of matter.
Quinces stop fluxes of blood. Arbuthnot on Diet.
4. Dysentery; disease in which the bowels are excoriated and bleed; bloody flux.
Eat eastern spices, secure
From burning fluxes and hot calenture. Hallifax.

2. To salivate; to evacuate by spitting.
He might fashionably and genteelly have been duelled or flux'd into another world. South.
FLUXION. n. f. [fluxus, Latin.] Easiness of separation of parts; possibility of liquefaction.
Experiments seem to teach, that the supposed aversion of nature to a vacuum is but accidental, or in consequence, partly of the weight and fluidity, or at least flexibility of the bodies here below. Boyle.
FLUXION. n. f. [fluxus, Latin.]
1. The act of flowing.
2. The matter that flows.
3. [In mathematics.] The arithmetick or analysis of infinitely small variable quantities; or it is the method of finding an infinite small or infinitely small quantity, which, being taken an infinite number of times, becomes equal to a quantity given.
A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, are not worth the labour of those who design the learned professions as the business of life. Watts.
To FLY. pret. flew or fled; part. fled or flown. v. n. [pleogan, Saxon. To fly is properly to use wings, and gives flew and flown. To flee is to escape, or go away, pleon, Saxon, and makes fled. They are now confounded.]
1. To move through the air with wings.
Ere the bat hath flown
His cloister'd flight. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven. Gen. i. 20.
These men's hastiness the warrier sort of you do not commend: ye wish they had held themselves longer in, and not flown so dangerously abroad before the feathers of the cause had been grown. Hawke.
2. To pass through the air.
Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward. Job v.
3. To pass away.
E'en a romance, a tune, a rhyme,
Help thee to pass the tedious time,
Which else would on thy hand remain;
Though flown, it ne'er looks back again. Prior.
4. To pass swiftly.
The scouts with flying speed
Return, and through the city spread the news.
Earth rolls back beneath the flying speed. Dryden.
5. To

FLY

5. To spring with violence; to fall on suddenly.
A servant that he bred, thri'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master; who, threat enrag'd,
Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead. Shakespeare.
Though the dogs have never seen the dog-killer, yet they will come forth, and bark and fly at him. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
No honour, no fortune, can keep a man from being miserable, when an enraged conscience shall fly at him, and take him by the throat. South's Sermons.
6. To move with rapidity.
Glad to catch this good occasion,
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
A fair example to his master gave;
He baffles heads, to save his own, made fly;
And now, the sultan to preserve, mult die. Waller.
7. To burst asunder with a sudden explosion.
Behold, a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.
8. To break; to shiver.
[pleon, Saxon; fliehen, German.] To run away; to attempt escape. [In this sense the verb is properly to flee, when fled is formed; but the following examples shew that they are confounded.]
Which when the valiant elf perceiv'd, he leapt,
As lion fierce, upon the flying prey. Spenser.
Macduff is fled to England. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Ye shall flee, as ye fled from before the earthquake. Zech. xiv. 5.
Abiathar escaped, and fled after David. 1 Sa. xxii. 20.
What wonder if the kindly beams he shed,
Reviv'd the drooping arts again;
If science rais'd her head,
And soft humanity, that from rebellion fled. Dryden.
He oft desir'd to fly from Israel's throne,
And live in shades with her and love alone. Prior.
I'll fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry plains;
From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,
Forake mankind, and all the world but love. Pope.
10. To fly in the face. To insult.
This would discourage any man from doing you good, when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face; and he must expect only danger to himself. Swift's Drapier's Letters.
11. To act in defiance.
Fly in nature's face:
—But how, if nature fly in my face first?
—Then nature's the aggressor. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
12. To fly off. To revolt.
Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,
They have travell'd all the night! mean fetches;
The images of revolt, and flying off. Shakespeare's King Lear.
The traitor Syphax
Flew off at once with his Numidian horde. Addison's Cato.
13. To fly out. To burst into passion.
How easy is a noble spirit discern'd,
From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out
In countenances, makes a noise, and stinks. Ben. Jonson's Catil.
Passion is apt to ruffle, and pride will fly out into contumely and neglect. Collier's Friendship.
14. To fly out. To break out into licence.
You use me like a courier spur'd and rein'd;
If I fly out, my fierceness you command. Dryden.
Papists, when unopposed, fly out into all the pageantries of worship; but in times of war, when they are hard pressed by arguments, lie close intrenched behind the council of Trent.
15. To fly out. To start violently from any direction.
All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained. Bentley's Sermons.
16. To fly out. To discharge.
The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rended sky. Graville.
17. To be light and unencumbered; as, a flying camp.
To FLY. v. a.
1. To shun; to avoid; to decline.
Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;
Pursuing that which flies, and flying what pursues. Shakespeare.
O Jove, I think
Foundations fly the wretched; such I mean,
Where they should be relieved. Shakespeare.
If you fly physick in health altogether, it will be too strange for your body when you shall need it. Bacon's Essays.
O whether shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this horrid spectacle. Milton's Agonistes.
2. To refuse association with.
Sleep flies the wretch; or when with cares oppress'd,
And his toid limbs are weary'd into rest,
Then dreams invade. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 13.
3. To quit by flight.
Nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryden.

FOA

- Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore,
The first who sail'd in air. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.
4. To attack by a bird of prey.
If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly other ravening fowl, and kill them, it is somewhat worth. Bacon.
5. It is probable that flew was originally the preterite of fly, when it signified volation, and fled when it signified escape:
flown should be confined likewise to volation; but these distinctions are now confounded.
FLY. n. f. [pleoge, Saxon.]
1. A small winged insect of many species.
As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare's King Lear.
My country neighbours begin to think of being in general, before they come to think of the fly in their sheep, or the tares in their corn. Locke.
To prevent the fly, some propose to sow asses with the seed.
To heedless flies the window proves
A constant death. Thomson's Summer.
2. That part of a machine which, being put into a quick motion, regulates and equalises the motion of the rest.
If we suppose a man tied in the place of the weight, it were easy, by a single hair fastened unto the fly or balance of the jack, to draw him up from the ground. Wilkins.
3. FLY, in a compass. That part which points how the wind blows.
To FLY-BLOW. v. a. [fly and blow.] To taint with flies; to fill with maggots.
I cannot discern any labyrinth, unless in the perplexity of his own thoughts; for I am unwilling to believe that he doth it with a design to play tricks, and to flyblow my words, to make others distrust them. Stillingfleet.
Like a flyblown cake of tallow;
Or, on parchment, ink turn'd yellow. Swift.
So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and flyblow in the setting sun. Pope's Epistles.
FLY-BLOW. n. f. [fly and blow.] A kind of vessel nimble and light for sailing.
FLY-CATCHER. n. f. [fly and catch.] One that hunts flies.
There was more need of Brutus in Domitian's days, to redeem or mend, than of Horace, to laugh at a flycatcher. Dry-
The swallow was a flycatcher as well as the spider. L'Estr.
FLYER. n. f. [from fly.]
1. One that flies or runs away.
They hit one another with darts, as the others do with their hands, which they never throw counter, but at the back of the flyer. Sandy's Journey.
He grieves for many Britons should be lost;
Taking more pains, when he beheld them yield,
To save the flyers than to win the field. Waller.
2. One that uses wings.
3. The fly of a jack.
4. [In architecture.] Stairs made of an oblong square figure, whose fore and backfides are parallel to each other, and so are their ends: the second of these flyers stands parallel behind the first, the third behind the second, and so are laid to fly off from one another. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
To FLY-FISH. v. n. [fly and fish.] To angle with a hook baited with a fly.
I shall next give you some other directions for fly-fishing. Walton's Angler.
FOAL. n. f. [pola, Saxon.] The offspring of a mare, or other beast of burthen. The custom now is to use colt for a young horse, and foal for a young mare; but there was not originally any such distinction.
Also flew his speed,
And with his winged heels did tread the wind,
As he had been a foal of Pegafus's kind. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Twenty she-asses and ten foals. Gen. xxxii. 15.
To FOAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth a foal.
Give my horse to Timon: it foals me straight
Ten able horses. Shakespeare's Timon.
Such colts as are
Of generous race, straight, when they first are foal'd,
Walk proudly. Mary's Georgicks.
About September take your mares into the house, where keep them 'till they foal. Mortimer's Husbandry.
FOALBIT. n. f. Plants.
FOALFOOT. n. f. [from the noun.] The white substance which agitation or fermentation gathers on the top of liquors; froth; spume.

FOLIAGE. n. s. [folium, Latin; feuille, French.] Leaves; tufts of leaves; the apparel of leaves to a plant.

The great columns are finely engraven with fruits and foliage, that run twisting about them from the very top to the bottom. Addison on Italy.

When swelling buds their odorous foliage shed,
And gently harden into fruit, the wife
Spare not the little offsprings, if they grow Redundant. Phillips.

To FOLIATE. v. a. [foliatus, folium, Latin.] To beat into laminae or leaves.

Gold foliated, or any metal foliated, cleaveth. Bacon.
If gold be foliated, and held between your eyes and the light, the light looks of a greenish blue. Newton's Opt.

FOLIATION. n. s. [foliatio, folium, Latin.] The act of beating into thin leaves.

1. The act of beating into thin leaves.
2. Foliation is one of the parts of the flower of a plant, being the collection of those fugacious coloured leaves called petals, which constitute the compass of the flower; and also sometimes to secure and guard the fruit which succeeds the foliation, as in apples, pears, &c. and sometimes stands within it, as in cherries, apricots, &c. for these, being of a tender and pulpy body, and coming forth in the colder parts of the Spring, would be often injured by the extremities of weather, if they were not thus protected and lodged up within their flowers. Quincy.

FOLIATURE. n. s. [from folium, Latin.] The state of being hammered into leaves. Dich.

FOLIO. n. s. [in folio, Latin.] A large book, of which the pages are formed by a sheet of paper once doubled.

FOLIOMORT. adj. [folium mortuum, Latin.] A dark yellow; the colour of a leaf faded: vulgarly called phylomet.

A flinty pebble was of a dark-green colour, and the exterior cortex of a foliomet colour. Woodward on Fossils.

FOLK. n. s. [polc, Saxon; volk, Dutch.]

1. People, in familiar language.

Never troubling him, either with asking questions, or finding fault with his melancholy, but rather fitting to his dolorous discourses of their own and other folks misfortune. Sidney.

Dorilus having married his sister, had his marriage in short time blessed, for so the folk went to say, how unhappy soever the children after grow, with a son. Sidney.

When with greatest art he spoke,
You'd think he talk'd like other folk;
For all a rhetorician's rules
Teach nothing but to name his tools. Hadibras, p. i.

2. Nations; mankind.

Thou shalt judge the folk righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Psalms lvi. 4.

3. Any kind of people as discriminated from others.

The river thrice hath flow'd, no ebb between;
And the old folk's time's dotting chronicles,
Say it did so a little time before. Shakspeare.

Anger is a kind of baseness; as it appears well in the weakness of children, women, old folks, and sick folks. Bacon's Essay.

4. It is now used only in familiar or burlesque language.

Old good man Dobson of the green,
Remembers he the tree has seen,
And goes with folks to shew the light. Swift.

He walk'd, and wore a threadbare cloak;
He din'd and suppt at charge of other folks. Swift.

FOLKMORE. n. s. [from folk and more.]

Those hills were appointed for two special uses, and built by two several nations: the one is that which you call folk-motes, built by the Saxons, and signifies in the Saxon a meeting of folk. Spenser on Ireland.

FOLLICLE. n. s. [folliculus, Latin.]

1. A cavity in any body with strong coats.

Although there be no eminent and circular follicle, no round bag or vesicle, which long containeth this humour; yet is there a manifest receptacle of choler from the liver into the guts. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 1.

2. Follicle is a term in botany signifying the seed-vesicles, capsulae feminis, or case, which some fruits and seeds have over them; as that of the alkengi, pedicularis, &c. Quincy.

To FOLLOW. v. a. [folgian, Saxon; volgen, Dutch.]

1. To go after; not before or side by side.

I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf. Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. To pursue as an enemy.

Wherever guilt can fly, revenge can follow. Irene.

3. To attend as a dependant.

And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and followed Saul to the battle. 1 Sa. xvii. 13.

Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion,

FOL

That in the nature of their lords rebels:
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. Shak. K. Lear.

Let not the muse then flatter lawless sway,
Nor follow fortune where she leads the way. Pope.

4. To pursue.

Not yielding over to old age his country delights, he was at that time following a merlin. Sidney, b. ii.

Some pious tears the pitying hero paid,
And follow'd with his eyes the fleeting shade. Dryden's En.

We follow fate, which does too fast pursue. Dryden.

5. To succeed in order of time.

6. To be consequential, as effects to causes.

7. To imitate; to copy.

Where Rome keepeth that which is ancienter and better,
Others, whom we much more affect, leaving it for newer, and changing it for worse, we had rather follow the perfections of them whom we like not, than in defects resemble them whom we love. Hooker, b. v. f. 28.

Ill patterns are sure to be followed more than good rules. Locke on Education.

8. To obey; to observe.

If all who do not follow oral tradition as their only rule of faith are out of the church, then all who follow the council of Trent are no Christians. Tillotson, Preface.

Most men admire
Virtue, who follow not her lore. Paradise Regain'd, b. vii.

9. To confirm by new endeavours; to keep up indefatigably.

They bound themselves to his laws and obedience; and in case it had been followed upon them, as it should have been, they should have been reduced to perpetual civility. Spenser.

10. To attend to; to be busied with.

He that undertaketh and followeth other men's business for gain, shall fall into suits. Ecclesiast. xxix. 9.

To FOLLOW. v. n.

1. To come after another.

Peter followed afar off. Luke xxii. 54.

The famine shall follow close after you. Jer. xlii. 16.

Welcome all that lead or follow
To the oracle of Apollo. Ben. Johnson.

2. To be posterior in time.

3. To be consequential, as effect to cause.

If the neglect or abuse of liberty to examine what would really and truly make for his happiness mislead him, the mis carriage that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.

4. To tempt one to do what is neither for their own nor the good of those under their care, great mischiefs cannot but follow. Locke.

5. To be consequential, as inference to premises.

Though there are or have been sometimes dwarfs, and sometimes giants in the world; yet it does not follow that there must be such in every age, nor in every country. Temple.

This dangerous doctrine must necessarily follow, from making all political power to be nothing else but Adam's paternal power. Locke.

6. To continue endeavours.

Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord. Hof.

FOLLOWER. n. s. [from follow.]

1. One who comes after another; not before him, or side by side.

Little gallant, you were wont to be a follower; but now you are a leader: whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels? Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

No stop, no stay, but clouds of sand arise,
Spurn'd and cast backward on the follower's eyes. Dryden.

2. A dependant.

3. An attendant.

4. An associate; a companion.

How accompanied, canst thou tell that?
—With Poins, and other his continual followers. Sb. H. IV.

5. One under the command of another.

I hold it no wisdom to leave unto them too much command over their kindred, but rather withdraw their followers from them as much as may be, and gather them under the command of law. Spenser's State of Ireland.

The understanding that should be eyes to the blind faculty of the will, is blind itself; and so brings all the inconveniences that attend a blind follower, under the conduct of a blind guide. Saunders's Sermon.

And forc'd Æneas, when his ships were lost,
To leave his followers on a foreign coast. Dryden's En.

6. A scholar; an imitator; a copyer; one of the same sort.

Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ. 1 Cor. xi. 1.

The true profession of Christianity invariably engages all its followers to do good to all men. Spray's Sermon.

Every one's idea of identity will not be the same that Pythagoras and thousands of his followers have. Locke.

The studious head or generous mind,
Poet or patriot, rose but to reform
The faith and moral nature gave before. Pope's Essay.

FON

FOLLY. n. s. [folie, French.]

1. Want of understanding; weakness of intellect.

2. Criminal weakness; depravity of mind.

Think! it thou, that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakspeare, King Lear.

3. Act of negligence or passion unbecoming gravity or deep wisdom. In this sense it has a plural.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy. Shakspeare.

Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,
Whom folly pleases, or whose follies please. Pope's Horace.

To FOMENT. v. a. [fomentor, Latin; fomentor, French.]

1. To cherish with heat.

Every kind that lives,
Fomented by his virtual power, and warm'd. Milton's P. L.

2. To bathe with warm lotions.

He fomented the head with opiates to procure sleep, and a solution of opium in water to foment the forehead. Arbutnot.

3. To encourage; to support; to cherish.

They love their givings, and foment their deeds no less than parents do their children. Watson.

Blame then thyself, as reason's law requires,
Since nature gave, and thou fomentest my fires. Dryden.

They are troubled with those ill humours, which they themselves infused and fomented in them. Locke.

FOMENTATION. n. s. [fomentatio, Fr. from foment.]

1. A fomentation is partial bathing, called also stuping, which is applying hot fluids to any part, dipped in medicated decoctions, whereby the steams breathe into the parts, and difficult obstructions humours. Quincy.

Fomentation callet forth the humour by vapours; but yet, in regard of the way made by the poultice, draweth gently the humours out: for it is a gentle fomentation, and hath withal a mixture of some stupefactive. Bacon's Natural History.

2. The lotion prepared to foment the parts.

The medicines were prepared by the physicians, and the lotions or fomentations by the nurses. Arbutnot on Coins.

FOMENTER. n. s. [from foment.] An encourager; a supporter

These fatal distempers, as they did much hurt to the body politic at home, being like humours stirred in the natural without evacuation, so did they produce disadvantageous effects abroad; and better had it been, that the raisers and fomenters of them had never sprung up in Druidia. Howell.

FON. n. s. [Scott. A word now obsolete.] A fool; an idiot.

Sicker I hold him for a greater fon,
That loves the thing he cannot purchase. Spenser's Past.

FOND. n. s. [fenn, Scottish.] A word of which I have found no satisfactory etymology. To fonne is in Chaucer to doat, to be foolish.

1. Foolish; silly; indifferent; imprudent; injudicious.

This we know that the Grecians or Gentiles did account foolishness; but that they ever did think it a fond or unlikely way to seek men's conversion by sermons, we have not heard. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.

He was beaten out of all love of learning by a fond school-master. Ascham.

Tell these sad women,
'Tis fond to wait inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at them. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Grant I may never prove so fond
To trust man on his oath or bond. Shakspeare's Timon.

Tamer than sleep, fonder than a woman's tear,
Fond thoughts may fall into some idle brain;
But one belief of all, is ever wife. Davies.

2. Fondly; valued by folly.

How subtly to detain thee I devise,
Inviting thee to hear while I relate;
Fond! were it not in hope of thy reply. Mil. Paradise Lost.

So fond are mortal men,
As their own ruin on themselves 't invite. Milton's Agonistes.

'Twas not revenge for griev'd Apollo's wrong
Those ass's ears on Midas' temples hung;
But fond repentance of his happy wish
But reason with your fond religion fights;
For many gods are many infinities. Dryden's Tyrant. Levi.

This is fond, because it is the way to cheat thyself. Tillotson.

3. Trifling; valued by folly.

Not with fond thebes of the tested gold,
Or stones, whose rate are either rich or poor
As fancy values them. Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.

4. Foolishly tender; injudiciously indulgent.

I'm a foolish fond wife,
Like Venus I'll shine. Addison.

Be fond and be fine. Addison.

5. Pleased in too great a degree; foolishly delighted.

FONDLY. adv. [from fond.]

FAME. n. s. [fama, Latin; font, French.]

1. Fame is in itself a real good, if we may believe Cicero, who was perhaps too fond of it. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

I, fond of my well-chosen feat,
My pictures, medals, books complete. Prior.

Some are so fond to know a great deal at once, and love to talk of things with freedom and boldness before they thoroughly understand them. Watts's Improvem. of the Mind.

To FOND. v. a. [from the noun.] To treat with great

To FONDLE. v. a. [fondle, French; to caress; to cocker.

Howe'er unjust your jealousy appear,
It does my pity, not my anger move:
I'll fondle it as the forward child of love. Dryden's Aurengz.

When amidst the fervour of the feast,
The Tyrian hugs, and fondles thee on her breast,
And with sweet kisses in her arms confrains,
Thou may'st infuse thy venom in her veins. Dryden's En.

They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting; but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to use any fondling expressions. Gulliver's Travels.

To FOND. v. n. To be fond of; to be in love; to doat on.

How will this sadge? My master loves her dearly;
And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And he, mistaken, seems to dote on me. Shakspeare.

FONDLE. n. s. [from fond.] One who fondles.

FONDLING. n. s. [from fondle.] A person or thing much fondled or caressed; something regarded with great affection.

Partiality in a parent is commonly unlucky; for fondlings are in danger to be made fools, and the children that are least cockered make the best and wisest men. L'Estrange.

The bent of our own minds may favour any opinion or action, that may shew it to be a fondling of our own. Locke.

Any body would have guessed mis to have been bred up under a cruel stepdame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

Bred a fondling and an heirless,
Drest like any lady may rely;
Cocker'd by the servants round,
Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

FONDLY. adv. [from fond.]

1. Foolishly; weakly; imprudently; injudiciously.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence. Shak. H. IV.

Sorrow and grief of heart
Makes him speak fondly, like a frantick man. Shakspeare.

Picinus fondly adviseth, for the prolongation of life, that a vein be opened in the arm of some wholesome young man, and the blood to be sucked. Bacon's Natural History.

The military mound
The British files transcend, in evil hour
For their proud foes, that fondly brav'd their fate. Phillips.

Some valuing those of their own side or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind;
Fondly we think we merit honour then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men. Pope's Criticism.

Under those sacred leaves, secure
From common lightning of the skies,
He fondly thought he might endure
The flashes of Ardelia's eyes. Swift.

2. With great or extreme tenderness.

Ev'n before the fatal engine clos'd,
A wretched syph too fondly interpos'd:
Fate urg'd the sheers, and cut the syph in twain. Pope.

Fondly or severely kind. Savage.

FONDNESS. n. s. [from fond.]

1. Foolishness; weakness; want of sense; want of judgment.

Fondness it were for any, being free,
To covet fetters, though they golden be. Spenser's Sonnets.

2. Foolish tenderness.

My heart had still some foolish fondness for thee;
But hence! 'tis gone: I give it to the winds. Addison, Cato.

Hopeless mother!
Whose fondness could compare her mortal offspring
To those which fair Latona bore to Jove. Prior.

3. Tender passion.

Your jealousy perverts my meaning still;
My very hate is construed into fondness. A. Phill. Dist. Motti.

Corinna, with that youthful air,
Is thirty and a bit to spare:
Her fondness for a certain earl Began when I was but a girl. Swift.

4. Unrealisable liking.

They err that either through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing that is less than a sincere resolution of new obedience, attended with faithful endeavour, and meet fruits of this change. Hammond's Fundamentals.

FONT. n. s. [font, Latin; fonte, French.] A stone vessel in which the water for holy baptism is contained in the church.

The presenting of infants at the holy font is by their god-fathers. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.

I have

FOO

I have no name, no title;
No, not that name was given me at the font. Shaksp. R. II.
FOUNTAIN. n. f. [fontaine, French.] An issue; a discharge opened in the body.
A person plethorick, subject to hot defluxions, was advised to a fountain in her arm. Wifeman of Infammation.
FONTANGE. n. f. [from the name of the first wearer.] A knot of ribbons on the top of the head-dress. Out of use.

These old fashioned fontanges rose an ell above the head: they were pointed like steeples, and had long loose pieces of crape, which were fringed, and hung down their backs. Addis.
FOOD. n. f. [foode, Sax. voeden, Dut. to feed; feed, Scott.]
1. Victuals; provision for the mouth.

On my knees I beg,
That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food. Shaksp. Prov. xiii. 23.
Under whose lowly roof thou hast vouchsaf'd
To enter, and these earthly fruits to taste;
Food not of angels, yet accepted so.
As that more willingly thou couldst not seem
At heav'n's high feasts to have fed. Milton's Paradise Lost.
They give us food, which may with nectar vie,
And wax that does the absent sun supply. Waller.

2. Any thing that nourishes.
Give me some musick: musick, moody food
Of us that trade in love. Shaksp. Antony and Cleopatra.
O dear son Edgar,
The food of thy abused father's wrath,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd lay, I had eyes again. Shaksp. King Lear.

FOODFUL. adj. [food and full.] Fruitful; full of food; plentiful.
There Titus was to see, who took his birth
From heav'n, his nursing from the foodful earth. Dryden.
FOODY. adj. [from food.] Eatable; fit for food.
To vessels, wine she drew;
And into well few'd facks pour'd foody meal. Chapman.

FOOL. n. f. [fo, Welsh; fol, Hindick; fol, French.]
1. One whom nature has denied reason; a natural; an idiot.
Do'st thou call me fool, boy?
—All thy other titles thou hast given away that thou wast born with.

The fool multitude, that chafe eye cloth teach,
Not learning more than the fond eye cloth teach,
Which pry not to the interior. Shak. Merchant of Venice.
It may be asked, whether the eldest son, being a fool, shall inherit paternal power before the younger, a wife man. Locke.
He thanks his stars he was not born a fool. Pope.

2. [In Scripture.] A wicked man.
The fool hath said in his heart there is no God. Pf. xiv. 1.
3. A term of indignity and reproach.
To be thought knowing, you must first put the fool upon all mankind. Dryden's F. vernal, Preface.

4. One who counterfeits folly; a buffoon; a jester.
Where's my knave, my fool? Go you, and call my fool hither. Shaksp. King Lear.
I scorn, although their drudge, to be their fool or jester. Milt.
If this disguise fit not naturally on so grave a person, yet it may become him better than that fool's coat. Denham.

5. To play the fool. To play pranks like a hired jester; to jest; to make sport.
Returning where I left his armour, found another instead thereof, and armed myself therein to play the fool. Sidney.

6. To play the fool. To act like one void of common understanding.
Well, thus we play the fools with the time,
And the spirits of the wife fit in the clouds
And mock us. Shaksp. Henry IV. p. ii.
Is it worth the name of freedom to be at liberty to play the fool, and draw shame and misery upon a man's self? Locke.

7. To make a fool. To disappoint; to defeat.
'Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-hungry, to challenge him to the field, and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.

TO FOOL. v. n. [from the noun.] To trifle; to toy; to play; to idle; to sport.
I, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you; so you may continue and laugh at nothing still. Shaksp. Tempest.

FOOL not; for all may have,
If they dare try, a glorious life, a grave. Herbert.
If you have the luck to be court-fools, those that have either wit or honesty, you may fool withal, and spare not. Denham.
It must be an indolent youth that provides against age; and he that fools away the one, must either beg or starve in the other. L'Estrange.

He must be happy that knows the true measures of fooling.
Is this a time for fooling? L'Estrange, Fable 74.
TO FOOL. v. a.
1. To treat with contempt; to disappoint; to frustrate; to defeat.

FOO

And shall it in more shame be further spoken,
That you are fool'd, discarded, and shoo'd off? Shak. H. IV.
If it be you that stir these daughters hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much To bear it tamely. Shaksp. King Lear.

When I am read, thou feign'st a weak applause,
As if thou wert my friend, but lackest a cause:
This but thy judgment fools; the other way
Would both thy folly and thy spite betray. Ben. Jonson.

Him over-weaning
To over-reach; but with the serpent meeting,
Fool'd and beguill'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
If men loved to be deceived and fooled about their spiritual estate, they cannot take a surer course than by taking their neighbour's word for that, which can be known only from their own heart. South's Sermons.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
For fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit.
I'm tir'd with waiting for this chemick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.
I would advise this blinded set of men not to give credit to those, by whom they have been so often fooled and imposed upon. Addison's Freeholder, No. 7.

2. To infatuate.
It were an handsome plot,
But full of difficulties, and uncertain;
And he's so fool'd with downright honesty,
He'll ne'er believe it. Denham's Sophy.

A long and eternal adieu to all unlawful pleasures,
The longer he's fool'd or imposed upon by them. Calamy's Sermon.
A boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer and richer, perhaps fool him so far as to make him enjoy less in his riches than others in poverty. Temple.

3. To cheat; as, to fool one of his money.
FOOLBORN. adj. [fol and born.] Foolish from the birth.
Reply not to me with a foolborn jest. Shaksp. Henry IV.
FOOLERY. n. f. [from fool.]

1. Habitual folly.
To lery, fir, does walk about the orb like the sun; it shines every where: I would be sorry, fir, but the fool should be as oft with your master as with my mistress. Shak. Twelfth Night.

2. An act of folly; trifling practice.
It is mere foolery to multiply distinct particulars in treating of things, where the difference lies only in words. Watts.

3. Object of folly.
That Pythagoras, Plato, or Orpheus believed in any of these fooleries, it cannot be suspected. Raleigh's History.
We are transported with fooleries, which, if we understood, we should despise. L'Estrange's Fables.

FOOLHAPPY. adj. [fool and happy.] Lucky without contrivance or judgment.
As when a ship, that flies fair under sail,
An hidden rock escap'd unawares,
That lay in wait her wreck for to bewail;
The mariner, yet half amazed, stares
At perils past, and yet in doubt ne dares
To joy at his foolhappy oversight. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 6.

FOOLHARDINESS. n. f. [from foolhardy.] Mad rashness; courage without sense.
A false glozing parasite would call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly. South's Sermon.
There is a difference betwixt daring and foolhardiness; Lucan and Statius often ventured them too far, our Virgil never. Dryden's Duynepoer.

FOOLHARDINESS. n. f. [fool and hardiness, French.] Foolhardiness; adventurousness without judgment. Obsolete.
More huge in strength than wife in works he was,
And reason with foolhardy over-ran;
Stern melancholy did his courage pass,
And was, for terror more, all arm'd in shining brass. F. 2.

FOOLHARDY. adj. [fool and hardy.] Daring without judgment; madly adventurous; foolishly bold.
One mother, when as her foolhardy child
Did come too near, and with his talons play,
Half dead through fear, her little babe reviv'd. Fairy Queen.

Some would be so foolhardy as to presume to be more of the cabinet-council of God Almighty than the angels. Hawth.
If any yet be so foolhardy,
T' expose themselves to vain jeopardy;
If they come wounded off, and lame,
No honour's got by such a main. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

FOOLTRAP. n. f. [fool and trap.] A snare to catch fools in; as a flytrap.
Betts, at the first, were fooltraps, where the wife
Like spiders lay in ambush for the flies. Dryden.

FOOLISH. adj. [from fool.]
1. Void of understanding; weak of intellect.
Thou foolish woman, seest thou not our mourning? 2 Esdr.
He, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

2. Imprudent; indiscreet.
We are come off

FOO

Nor cowardly in retire. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
3. Ridiculous; contemptible.
It is a foolish thing to make a long prologue, and to be short in the story itself. 2 Mac. ii. 32.

Pray do not mock me;
I am a very foolish fond old man;
I fear I am not in my perfect mind. Shaksp. King Lear.
What could the head perform alone,
If all their friendly aids were gone?
A foolish figure he must make;
Do nothing else but sleep and ake. Prior.

[In Scripture.] Wicked; sinful.
FOOLISHLY. adv. [from foolish.] Weakly; without understanding. In Scripture, wickedly.
Although we boast our Winter fun looks bright,
And foolishly are glad to see it at its height;
Yet to much sooner comes the long and gloomy night. Swift.

FOOLISHNESS. n. f. [from foolish.]
1. Folly; want of understanding.
2. Foolish practice; actual deviation from the right.
Foolishness being properly a man's deviation from right reason, in point of practice, must needs consist in his pitching upon such an end as is unsuitable to his condition, or pitching upon means unsuitable to the compassing of his end. South.

Charm'd by their eyes, their manners I acquire,
And shape my foolishness to their desire. Prior.
FOOLSTONES. n. f. A plant.
The characters are: it hath an anomalous flower, consisting of six dissimilar leaves; the five uppermost of which are so disposed as to imitate in some manner a helmet. Miller.

FOOT. n. f. plural feet. [poet, Saxon; voet, Dutch; fud, Scottish.]
1. The part upon which we stand.
The queen that bore thee,
Off'n'er upon her knees than on her feet,
Died ev'ry day she liv'd. Shaksp. Macbeth.

His affection to the church was so notorious, that he never departed it till both it and he were over-run and trod under foot. Clarendon.
2. That by which any thing is supported in the nature of a foot.
3. The lower part; the base.
Yond towers, whose wanton tops do bus the clouds,
Must kiss their own feet. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.

Freting, by little and little, washes away and eats out both the tops and sides and feet of mountains. Hakewill on Provid.
4. The end; the lower part.
What dismal cries are those?
—Nothing; a trifling sum of misery,
New added to the foot of thy account:
Thy wife is seiz'd by force, and born away. Dryd. Cleomen.

5. The act of walking.
Antiochus departed, weening in his pride to make the land navigable, and the sea passable by foot. 2 Mac. v. 21.
6. On FOOT. Walking; without carriage.
Israel journeyed about six hundred thousand on foot. Ex. xii.

7. A posture of action.
The centurions and their charges distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

8. Infantry; footmen in arms. In this sense it has no plural.
Lucas gathered threecore thousand choice men of feet, and five thousand horsemen. 2 Mac. iv. 28.
Himself with all his foot entered the town, his horse being quartered about it. Clarendon, b. viii.

Thrice horse and foot about the fires are led,
And thrice with loud laments they wail the dead. Dryden.
9. State; character; condition.
See on what foot we stand; a scanty shore,
The sea behind, our enemies before. Dryden's F. n.

In specifying the word Ireland, it would seem to innuinate that we are not upon the same foot with our fellow subjects in England. Swift's Drapier's Letters.
What colour of excuse can be for the contempt with which we treat this part of our species, that we should not put them upon the common foot of humanity, that we should only set an insignificant fine upon the man who murders them? Addis.

10. Scheme; plan; settlement.
There is no wellwisher to his country without a little hope, that in time the kingdom may be on a better foot. Swift.
I ask, whether upon the foot of our constitution, as it stood in the reign of the late king James, a king of England may be depose? Swift.

11. A state of incipient existence.
If such a tradition were at any time set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult how it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson's Sermons.

12. It seems to have been once proverbially used for the level, the square, par.
Were it not for this easy borrowing upon interest, men's necessities would draw upon them a most sudden undoing, in that they would be forced to sell their means, be it lands or goods, far under foot. Bacon's Essays.

FOO

13. A certain number of syllables constituting a distinct part of a verse.

Feet, in our English versifying, without quantity and joints, be sure signs that the verse is either born deformed, unnatural, or lame. Ajcham's Schoolmaster.
Didst thou hear these verses?
—O yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some o' them had in them more feet than the verses would bear. Shaksp.

14. Motion; action.
While other jests are something rank on foot,
Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender to marry. Shaksp. Mer. Wives of Windsor.
In the government of the world the number and variety of the ends on foot, with the secret nature of most things to which they relate, must make a distinct remark of their congruity, in some cases very difficult, and in some unattainable. Grew.

15. A measure containing twelve inches.
When it signifies measure it has often, but vitiously, foot in the plural.
An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linnen cloth, being buried for a fortnight's space four foot deep within the earth, came forth no ways mouldy or rotten. Bacon.

16. Step.
This man's son would, every foot and anon, be taking some of his companions into the orchard. L'Estrange.
TO FOOT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance; to tread wantonly; to trip.
Lonely the vale and full of horror stood,
Brown with the shade of a religious wood;
The moon was up, and shot a gleamy light;
He saw a quire of ladies in a round,
That fealty seem'd to skim the ground. Dryden.

2. To walk; not ride; not fly.
By this the dreadful beast drew nigh to land,
Half flying, and half footing in his haste. Fairy Queen.
Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night. Sh.
The man set the boy upon the ass, and footed it himself. L'Estrange.

With them a man sometimes cannot be a penitent, unless he also turns vagabond, and foots it to Jerusalem; or wanders over this or that part of the world, to visit the shrine of such or such a pretended faint. South.
If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try, for once, who can foot it farthest. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

TO FOOT. v. a.
1. To spurn; to kick.
You, that did void your rheum upon my beard, and foot me as you spurn a stranger cur over your threshold. Shaksp.

2. To settle; to begin to fix.
What confederacy have you with the traitors Late footed in the kingdom? Shaksp. King Lear.

3. To tread.
Saint Withold footed thrice the world:
He met the night-mare, and her name told;
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right. Shak. K. Lear.

There haply by the ruddy damsel seen,
Or shepherd boy, they fealty foot the green. Tickell.
FOOTBALL. n. f. [foot and ball.] A ball commonly made of a blown bladder caled with leather, driven by the foot.

Am I so round with you as you with me,
That like a football you do spurn me thus? Shaksp.
Such a Winter-piece should be beautified with all manner of works and exercises of Winter; as footballs, felling of wood, and sliding upon the ice. Peacham.

As when a sort of lusty shepherds try
Their force at football, care of victory
Makes them salute so rudely, breast to breast,
That their encounter seems too rough for jest. Waller.

One rolls along a football to his foes,
One with a broken truncheon deals his blows. Dryden.
He was sensible the common football was a very imperfect imitation of that exercise. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scribl.

FOOTBOY. n. f. [foot and boy.] A low menial; an attendant in livery.
Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
This honest man, wait like a lowly footboy
At chamber-door? Shaksp. Henry VIII.
Though I had no body to assist but a footboy, yet I made shift to try a pretty number of things. Boyle on Colours.

Whenever he imagines advantage will redound to one of his footboys by oppression of me, he never disputes it. Swift.
FOOTBRIDGE. n. f. [foot and bridge.] A bridge on which passengers walk; a narrow bridge.
Palemon's shepherd, fearing the footbridge was not strong enough, loaded it so long, till he broke that which would have born a bigger burden. Sidney.

FOOTCLOATH. n. f. [foot and cloth.] A sumpter cloth.
Three

FOO

Three times to-day my foot-loath horse did stumble,
And started when he look'd upon the Tower,
As loth to bear me to the slaughterhouse. Shaksp. Rich. III.
FOOTED. adj. [from foot.] Shaped in the foot.
Snouted and tailed like a boar, and footed like a goat. Græu.
FOOTFIGHT. n. f. [from foot and fight.] A fight made on foot, in opposition to that on horseback.
So began our footfight in such sort, that we were well entered to blood of both sides. Sidney, b. ii.
FOOTHOLD. n. f. [from foot and hold.] Space to hold the foot; space on which one may tread surely.
So they all fell to work at the roots of the tree, and left it to little foothold, that the first blast of wind laid it flat upon the ground. L'Estrange.
He's never well 'till he's at the top: he has nothing above him to aspire to, nor any foothold left him to come down by.
L'Estrange, Fable 6.

FOOTING. n. f. [from foot.]

1. Ground for the foot.
I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;
As full of peril and adventurous spirit
As to o'erwalk a current, roaring loud,
On the unfeeling footing of a spear. Shaksp. Henry IV.
As Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did shew the footing found, for all the flood. Davies.
In ascents, every step gained is a footing and help to the next. Holder's Elements of Speech.
2. Foundation; basis; support; root.
Cloven flukes; and, wondrous to behold,
Their sharpen'd ends in earth their footing place,
And the dry poles produce a living race. Dr. d. Virg. Georg.
All those sublime thoughts take their rise and footing here:
the mind first not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered. Locke.
The reasoning faculties of the soul would not know how to move, for want of a foundation and footing in most men, who cannot trace truth to its fountain and original. Locke.
3. Place.
Whether they unctuous exhalations are,
Fir'd by the sun, or seeming to alone;
Or each some more remote and slippery star,
Which loses footing when to mortals shewn. Dryden.

4. Tread; walk.
I would outnight you did no body come:
But hark, I hear the footing of a man. Shak. Merch. of Ven.
Break off, break off; I feel the different found
Of some chafte footing near about this ground:
Run to your throuds, within these brakes and trees;
Our number may affright. Milton.
5. Dance.
Make holiday: your rye-draw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one In country footing. Shaksp. Henry IV.

6. Steps; road; track.
He grew strong among the Irish; and in his footing his son continuing, hath increased his said name. Spenser on Ireland.
Like running we-ds, that have no certain root; or like footings up and down, impossible to be traced. Bacon's H. VII.
7. Entrance; beginning; establishment.
Ever since our nation had any footing in this land, the state of England did desire to perfect the conquest. Davies.
The defeat of colonel Bellasis gave them their first footing in Yorkshire. Clarendon, b. viii.

8. State; condition; settlement.
No useful arts have yet found footing here;
But all untaught and savage does appear. Dryd. Ind. Emp.
State; condition; settlement.
Gaul was on the same footing with Egypt, as to taxes. Arb.

FOOTLICKER. n. f. [from foot and lick.] A slave; an humble fawner; one who licks the foot.
Do that good mischief which may make this island
Thine own for ever; and I, thy Caliban,
For ay thy footlicker. Shaksp. Henry IV.

1. A soldier that marches and fights on foot.
The numbers levied by her lieutenant did consist of footmen three millions, of horsemen one million. Raleigh's History.
2. A low mental servant in livery.
He was carried in a rich chariot, litterwise, with two horses at either end, and two footmen on each side. Bacon.
Like footmen running before coaches,
To tell the inn what lord approaches. Prior.

FOOTMANSHIP. n. f. [from footman.] The art or faculty of a runner.

The Irish archers espying this, suddenly broke up, and committed the safety of their lives to their nimble footmanship. Hayward.
Yet, says the fox, I have baffled more of them with my wiles and shifts than ever you did with your footmanship. L'Estr.

FOOTPACE. n. f. [from foot and pace.]
1. Part of a pair of stairs, whereon, after four or five steps, you arrive to a broad place, where you make two or three paces before you ascend another step, thereby to ease the legs in ascending the rest of the stairs. Mason's Mech. Exerc. 16.

FOP

2. A pace no faster than a slow walk.
FOOTPAD. n. f. [from foot and pad.] A highwayman that robs on foot, not on horseback.
FOOTPATH. n. f. [from foot and path.] A narrow way which will not admit horses or carriages.
Know'st thou the way to Dover?
—Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath. Shak. K. Lear.
FOOTPOST. n. f. [from foot and post.] A post or messenger that travels on foot.
For carrying such letters, every thoroughfare weekly ap-pointeth a footpost, whose dispatch is well near as speedy as the horses. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
FOOTSTALL. n. f. [from foot and stall.] A woman's stirrup.
FOOTSTEP. n. f. [from foot and step.]

1. Trace; track; impression left by the foot.
Clear-lighted reason wisdom's judgment leads,
And sense, her vassal, in her footsteps treads. Denham.
A man shall never want crooked paths to walk in, if he thinks that he is in the right way, where ever he has the footsteps of others to follow. Locke.
2. Token; mark; notice given.
Let us turn our thoughts to the frame of our system, if there we may trace any visible footsteps of Divine Wisdom and Benevolence. Bentley's Sermons.
3. Example.

FOOTSTOOL. n. f. [from foot and stool.] Stool on which he that sits places his feet.
Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
And made our footstool of security. Shaksp. Henry VI.
They whose sacred office 'tis to bring
Kings to obey their God, and men their kings,
By these mysterious links to fix and tie
Men to the footstool of the Deity. Denham's Sophy.
Let echoing anthems make his praises known
On earth, his footstool, as in heav'n his throne. Roscommon.
By the phrase of worshipping his footstool, no more is meant than worshipping God at his footstool. Stillingfleet.

FOP. n. f. [A word probably made by chance, and therefore without etymology.] A simpering; a coxcomb; a man of small understanding and much ostentation; a pretender; a man fond of show, dress, and flattery; an impertinent.
A whole tribe of fops. Shaksp. King Lear.
Got 'twixt asleep and wake.
When such a positive abandon'd fop,
Among his numerous absurdities,
Stumbles upon some tolerable line,
I fret to see them in such company. Roscommon.
The leopard's beauty, without the fox's wit, is no better than a fop in a gay coat. L'Estrange.

In a dull stream, which moving slow,
You hardly see the current flow;
When a small breeze obstructs the course,
It whirls about for want of force,
And in its narrow circle gathers
Nothing but chaff, and straws, and feathers:
The current of a female mind
Stops thus, and turns with ev'ry wind;
Thus whirling round, together draws Fools, fops, and rakes, for chaff and straws. Swift.

FOPDIDDLE. n. f. [from fop and doodle.] A fool; an insignificant wretch.
Where sturdy butchers broke your noddle,
And handled you like a fopdoodle. Hudibras, p. ii.

FOPPERY. n. f. [from fop.]
1. Folly; impertinence.
Let not the found of shallow foppery enter
My sober house. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.
I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guilefulness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters the fun, the moon and stars, as if we were villains on necessity. Shaksp. King Lear.

2. Affectation of show or importance; showy folly.
3. Foolery; vain or idle practice; idle affectation.

They thought the people were better let alone in their fopperies, than to be suffered to break loose from that subjection which their superstition kept them in. Stillingfleet.
But though we fetch from Italy and France
Our fopperies of tune, and mode of dance,
Our sturdy Britons scorn to borrow sense. Granville.

I wish I could say quaint fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects. Swift to the Lord High Treasurer.

FOPPISH. adj. [from fop.]
1. Foolish; idle; vain. Fools

FOR

Fools ne'er had less grace in a year;
For wife men are grown foppish,
And know not how their wits to wear,
Their manners are so apish. Shaksp. King Lear.
2. Vain in show; foolishly ostentatious; vain of dress.
With him the present still some virtues have;
The vain are sprightly, and the stupid grave;
The slothful negligent, the foppish neat;
The lewd are airy, and the dry discreet. Garth's Dispensat.
The Romans grew extremely expensive and foppish in this article; so that the emperor Aurelian forbid men that variety of colours on their shoes, allowing it still to women. Arbuth.
FORBISHL. adv. [from foppish.] Vainly; ostentatiously.
FORBISHNESS. n. f. [from foppish.] Vanity; showy or osten-tationary vanity.

FORPILING. n. f. [from fop.] A petty fop; an under-rate coxcomb.
Thy works in Chloë's toilet gain a part,
And, with his tailor, share the foppish heart. Tickell.

FOR. prep. [from, Saxon; voor, Dutch.]
1. Because of.
That which we for our unworthiness are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that God for the worthiness of his son would not withstanding vouchsafe to grant. Hooker, b. v. f. 47.

Edward and Richard,
With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath,
Are at our backs. Shaksp. Henry VI. p. iii.
Speak, good Cominius;
Leave nothing out for length.
For as much as the question cannot be scanned, unless the time of Abraham's journey be considered of, I will search into a tradition concerning his travels. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
An astrologer faith, if it were not for two things that are constant, no individual would last one moment. Bacon.
For as much as it is a fundamental law in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any other provocation, make war upon Christendom for the propagation of their laws; so the Christians may at all times, as they think good, be upon the prevention. Bacon's War with Spain.
The governor, falling out, took great store of victual and warlike provision, which the Turks had for haste left behind them. Knuttel's History of the Turks.
Their offer he willingly accepted, knowing that he was not able to keep that place three days, for lack of victual. Knuttel.

Quit, quit, for shame; this will not move,
This cannot take her:
If of herself she will not love,
Nothing can make her.
Care not for frowns or smiles. Denham's Sophy, Prod.
The hypocrite or carnal man hopes, and is the wickedest for hoping. Hammond's Pract. Catech.
Let no man, for his own poverty, become more oppressing in his bargains; but quietly recommend his estate to God;
and leave the success to him.
Persons who have lost most of their grinders, having been compelled to use three or four only in chewing, wore them so low that the inward nerve lay bare, and they would no longer for pain make use of them. Ray on the Creation.

I but revenge my fate; disdain'd, betray'd,
And suffering death for this ungrateful maid. Dryden.
Sole on the barren sands, the suff'ring chief Roar'd out for anguish, and indulg'd his grief. Dryden.
For his long absence church and state did groan,
Madness the pulpit, faction seiz'd the throne. Dryden.
Nor with a superstitious fear is aw'd
For what befalls at home, or what abroad. Dryd. Virg. Gen.
I, my own judge, condemn'd myself before;
For pity, aggravate my crime no more. Dryden's Aurengz.

Matrons of renown,
When tyrant Nero burnt th' imperial town,
Shrick'd for the downfall in a doleful cry,
For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die. Dryden.
Children, discountenanced by their parents for any fault, find a refuge in the caresses of foolish flatterers. Locke.
A sound mind in a sound body is a short but full description of a happy state in this world: he that has these two has little more to wish for, and he that wants either of them will be but little the better for any thing else. Locke.

The middle of the gulph is remarkable for tempests. Addis.
My open'd thought to joyous prospect rais'd,
And for thy mercy let me sing thy praise. Prior.
Which best or worst, you could not think;
And die you must, for want of drink. Prior.
It is a most infamous scandal upon the nation, to reproach them for treating foreigners with contempt. Swift.

We can only give them that liberty now for something, which they have so many years exercised for nothing, of railing and scribbling against us.
Your sermons would be less valuable, for want of time. Swift.

2. With respect to; with regard to.

FOR

Rather our state's defective for requital,
Than we to stretch it out. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
A paltry ring
That she did give me, whose poetry was,
For all the world, like cutlers poetry
Upon a knife; love me and leave me not. Shaksp. Henry IV.
As thou art at this hour, was Richard then. Shaksp. H. IV.
It was young counsel for the persons, and violent counsel for the matters. Bacon, Essay 21.
Authority followeth old men, and favour and popularity youth; but for the moral part, perhaps, youth will have the pre-eminence, as age hath for the politick. Bacon's Essays.
Comets are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comet for magnitude or colour, produceth what kind of effects. Bacon, Essay 54.

For me, if there be such a thing as I.
He faith these honours consisted in preserving their memories, and praising their virtues; but for any matter of worship towards them, he utterly denies it. Stillingfleet.
Our laws were for their matter foreign. Hales.

Now for the government, it is absolute monarchy; there being no other laws in China but the king's command. Temple.
For me, no other happiness I own,
Than to have born no issue to the throne. Dryd. Tyr. Love.
For me, my stormy voyage at an end,
I to the port of death securely tend. Dryden's Æn. b. xii.
After death, we spirits have just such natures
We had, for all the world, when human creatures. Dryden.
Such little waifs, and yet so full of spite;
For bulk mere insects, yet in mischief strong. Tate's Juv.
Hobbes has given us a correct explanation of the sense in general; but for particulars and circumstances, he continually lops them. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

Lo, some are yellom, and the rest as good,
For all his lordship knows, but they are wood. Pope.
3. In this sense it has often as before it.
As for Maramaldus the general, they had no just cause to milk him, being an old captain of great experience. Knuttel.
4. In the character of.
If a man can be fully assured of any thing for a truth, without having examined what is there that he may not embrace for truth? Locke.

She thinks you favour'd:
But let her go, for an ungrateful woman. A. Phillips.
Say, is it fitting in this very field,
This field, where from my youth I've been a carter,
I, in this field, should die for a deserter? Gay.
5. With resemblance of.
I hear for certain, and do speak the truth,
The gentle York is up. Shaksp. Henry IV. p. ii.
Now, now for sure, deliverance is at hand,
The kingdom shall to Israel be restor'd. Paradise Regain'd.
The startling feed was seiz'd with sudden fright,
And bounding, o'er the postmill cast the knight;
Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead. Dryden.

6. Considered as; in the place of.
Our present lot appears
For happy, though but ill; for ill, not worst,
If we procure not to ourselves more woe. Milton's Pa. Lost.
The council-table and star-chamber held for honourable that which pleased, and for just that which profited. Clarendon.
Read all the prefaces of Dryden,
For those out critics much confide in;
Though meely writ at first for fillings,
To raise the volume's price a shilling. Swift.

7. In advantage of; for the sake of.
An ant is a vile creature for itself; but it is a shrewd thing in an orchard. Bacon, Essay 24.
He refused not to die for those that killed him, and shed his blood for some of those that spilt it. Boyle.
Whether some hero's fate,
In words worth dying for, he celebrate. Cowley.

8. Conducive to; beneficial to.
Shall I think the world was made for one,
And men are born for kings, as beasts for men,
Not for protection, but to be devour'd? Dryd. Span. Fryar.

It is for the general good of human society, and confe-quently of particular persons, to be true and just; and it is for mens health to be temperate. Tillotson, Sermon 1.
It can never be for the interest of a believer to do me a mischief, because he is sure, upon the balance of accounts, to find himself a loser by it. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 186.

9. With intention of going to a certain place.
We sailed from Peru, where we had continued for the space of one whole year, for China and Japan, taking with us victuals for twelve months. Bacon's New Atlantis.
As she was brought for England, she was cast away near Harwich haven. Hayward.
We sailed directly for Genoa, and had a fair wind. Addison.

FOR

10. In comparative respect.
For tulks with Indian elephants he strove,
And Jove's own thunder from his mouth he drove. Dryden.
11. In proportion to.
As he could see clear for those times, through superstition; so he would be blinded, now and then, by human policy. Bacon's Henry VII.
Your understandings are not bright enough for the exercise of the highest acts of reason. Tillotson, Sermon 4.
12. With appropriation to.
Shadow will serve for Summer: prick him; for we have a number of shadows to fill up the multer-book. Shakef. H. IV.
13. After O an expression of desire.
O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention! Shak. H. V. Prologue.

Thus much for the beginning and progress of the deluge.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
15. Inducing to as a motive.
There is a natural, immutable, and eternal reason for that which we call virtue, and against that which we call vice. Till.
16. In expectation of.
He must be back again by one and twenty, to marry and propagate: the father cannot stay any longer for the portion, nor the mother for a new lot of babies to play with. Locke.
17. Noting power or possibility.
For a holy person to be humble, for one whom all men esteem a saint, to fear lest himself become a devil, is as hard as for a prince to submit himself to be guided by tutors. Taylor.
18. Noting dependence.
The colours of outward objects, brought into a darkened room, depend for their visibility upon the dimmings of the light they are beheld by. Boyle on Colours.
19. In prevention of; for fear of.

translate him line for line, is impossible. Dryden.
We take a falling meteor for a star. Cowley.
23. In supply of; to serve in the place of.
Most of our ingenious young men take up some cried-up English poet for their model, adore him, and imitate him, as they think, without knowing wherein he is defective. Dryden.
24. Through a certain duration.
Some please for once, some will for ever please. Reform.
Those who sleep without dreaming, can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy, without their knowing it. Locke.
The administration of this bank is for life, and partly in the hands of the chief citizens. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
Since, hir'd for life, thy servile muse must sing
Successive conquests, and a glorious king;
And bring him laurels, whatso'er they cost. Prior.
The youth transported, asks without delay
To guide the fun's bright chariot for a day. Garth's Ovid.
25. In search of; in quest of.
Some of the philosophers have run to far back for arguments of comfort against pain, as to doubt whether there were any such thing; and yet, for all that, when any great evil has been upon them, they would cry out as loud as other men.
Tillotson, Sermon 5.
26. According to.
Chymists have not been able, for aught is vulgarly known,
by fire alone to separate true sulphur from antimony. Boyle.
27. Noting a state of fitness or readiness.
Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you. Shakespeare.
If he be brave, he's ready for the stroke. Dryden.
28. In hope of; for the sake of; noting the final cause.
How quickly nature
Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish, over-careful fathers,
Have broke their sleeps with thoughts, their brains with care,
Their bones with industry: for this, engross'd
The canker'd heaps of strong achieved gold:
For this they have been thoughtful to myself
For this sons with arts and martial exercises. Shakef. H. IV.
The kingdom of God was first rent by ill counsel; upon

FOR

- which counsel there are set, for our instruction, two marks.
Bacon.
- For he writes not for money, nor for praise,
Nor to be call'd a wit, nor to wear bays. Denham.
There we shall see, a light worthy dying for, that blessed Saviour, who so highly deserves of us. Boyle.
He is not disposed to be a fool, and to be miserable for company. Tillotson, Sermon 1.
- Even death's become to me no dreadful name;
In fighting fields, where our acquaintance grew,
I saw him, and contemn'd him first for you. Dryd. Aureng.
For this, 'tis needful to prevent her art,
And fire with love the proud Phœnician's heart. Dryd. Virg.
Some pray for riches; riches they obtain;
But watch'd by robbers, for their wealth are slain. Dryden.
Let them, who truly would appear my friends,
Employ their swords like mine for noble ends. Dryd. Aureng.
Scholars are frugal of their words, and not willing to let any go for ornament, if they will not serve for use. Felton.
29. Of tendency to; towards.
It were more for his honour to raise his siege, than to spend so many good men in the winning of it by force. Kneller.
The kettle to the top was hoist;
But with the uplide down, to show
Its inclination for below. Swift.
30. In favour of; on the part of; on the side of.
Ye suppose the laws for which ye strive are found in Scripture; but those not against which we strive. Locke, Preface.
It becomes me not to draw my pen in the defence of a bad cause, when I have so often drawn it for a good one. Dryden.
Jove was for Venus; but he fear'd his wife.
He for the world was made, not us alone. Cowley.
They must be void of all zeal for God's honour, who do not with sighs and tears intercede with him. Smalridge's Sermon.
Aristotle is for poetical justice. Dennis.
They are all for rank and foul feeding. Felton.
31. Noting accommodation or adaptation.
Fortune, if there be such a thing as she,
Spies that I bear to well her tyranny,
That she thinks nothing else to fit me. Dennis.
A few rules of logic are thought sufficient, in this case, for those who pretend to the highest improvement. Locke.
It is for wicked men to dread God; but a virtuous man may have undisturbed thoughts, even of the justice of God.
Tillotson, Sermon 4.
His country has good havens, both for the Adriatick and Mediterranean. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
Persia is commodiously situated for trade both by sea and land. Arbutnot on Catin.
32. With intention of.
And by that justice hath remov'd the cause
Of those rude tempests, which, for rapine sent Too oft, alas, involv'd the innocent. Waller.
Here huntmen with delight may read
How to chuse dogs for scent or speed. Waller.
God hath made some things for as long a duration as they are capable of. Tillotson, Sermon 1.
For this, from Trivia's temple and her wood,
Are courtiers driv'n, who the their masters blood. Dryden.
Such examples should be set before them, as patterns for their daily imitation. Locke.
The next question usually is, what is it for? Locke.
Achilles is for revenging himself upon Agamemnon, by means of Hector. Pope's View of Epick Poem.
33. Becoming; belonging to.
It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my manhood, honesty, and wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts. Shakespeare's Othello.
Th' offers he doth make.
Were not for him to give, nor them to take. Daniel.
Jests for Dutchmen and English boys. Cowley.
Is it for you to ravage seas and land,
Unauthorized by my supreme command! Dryd. Virg. Æn.
His fire already signs him for the skies,
And marks the seat amidst the deities. Dryden's Æn.
It is a reasonable account for any man to give, why he does not live as the greatest part of the world do, that he has no mind to die as they do, and perish with them. Tillotson.
34. Notwithstanding.
This, for any thing we know to the contrary, might be the self-same form which Philo Judeus expresteth. Locke, b. v.
God's desertion shall, for ought he knows the next minute, supervene. De ay of Piety.
Probability supposes that a thing may, or may not be for,
for any thing that yet is certainly determined on either side.
South's Sermon.
For any thing that legally appears to the contrary, it may be a contrivance to fright us. Swift's Drapier's Letters.
If such vast masses of matter had been situated nearer to the sun, or to each other, as they might as easily have been, for any mechanical or fortuitous agent, they must necessarily have caused a considerable disorder in the whole system. Bentley.

FOR

35. For all. Notwithstanding.
Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish; since I assure you, for all my apparel, there is nothing I desire more than fully to prove myself a man in this enterprise. Sidney.
For all the carefulness of the Christians the English bulwark was undermined by the enemy, and upon the fourth of September part thereof was blown up. Kneller's History.
But as Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did show the footing found for all the flood. Daniel.
They resolute, for all this, do proceed Unto that judgment. Daniel.
For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition. South.
If we apprehend the greatest things in the world of the emperor of China or Japan, we are well enough contented, for all that, to let them govern at home. Stillingfleet.
I thought that very ingenious person has anticipated part of what I should say, yet you will, for all that, expect that I should give you a fuller account. Boyle on Colours.
She might have pass'd over all such petty business; but the raising of my rable is not to be mumbled up in silence, for all her pertness. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
36. To the use of; to be used in.
The oak for nothing ill,
The osier good for twigs, the poplar for the mill. Spenser.
In consequence of.
For love they force through thickets of the wood,
They climb the steep hills and stem the flood. Dryden.
37. In recompense of.
Now, for so many glorious actions done,
For peace at home, and for the publick wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl for Caesar's health;
Belides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators. Dryden's Pers.
First the wily wizard must be caught;
For unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for naught. Dryd. Virg.
39. In proportion to.
He is not very tall, yet for his years he's tall. Shakespeare.
Exalted Socrates! divinely brave!
Injur'd he fell, and dying he forgave;
Too noble for revenge. Dryden's Juven. Sat. 13.
40. By means of; by interposition of.
Moral consideration can no way move the sensible appetite, were it not for the will. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
Of some calamity we can have no relief but from God alone; and what would men do in such a case, if it were not for God? Tillotson's Sermons.
41. In regard of; in preservation of. I cannot for my life, is, I cannot if my life might be saved by it.
I bid the rascal knock upon your gate;
But could not get him for my heart. Shakespeare.
I cannot for my heart leave a room, before I have thoroughly examined the papers pass'd upon the walls. Addison's Spect.
42. For so. In the language used two centuries ago, for was commonly used before to the sign of the infinitive mood, to note the final cause. As, I come for to see you, for I love to see you: in the same sense with the French pour. Thus it is used in the translation of the Bible. But this distinction was by the best writers sometimes forgotten; and for, by wrong use, appearing superfluous, is now always omitted.
Who shall let me now
On this vile body for to wreak my wrong? Fairy Queen.
A large posterity
Up to your happy palaces may mount,
Of blessed saints for to increase the count. Spenser.
These things may serve for to represent how just cause of fear this kingdom may have towards Spain. Bacon.
- FOR, conj.
1. The word by which the reason is given of something advanced before.
Heav'n doth with us as we with torches deal,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Shakef. Measure for Measure.
Old husbandmen I at Sabatum know,
Who for another year dig, plough, and sow;
For never any man was yet to old,
But hop'd his life one Winter more would hold. Denham.
Tell me what kind of thing is wit?
For the first matter loves variety less. Cowley.
Thus does he who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in so doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living hand. Tillotson.
2. Because; on this account that.
I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would with them chosen by discretion of wise men. Spenser on Ireland.
Jealous souls will not be answer'd so:
They are not ever jealous for a cause,
But jealous for they're jealous. Shakespeare's Othello.
Heaven defend your good souls, that you think

FOR

- I will your serious and great business scant;
For she is with me. Shakespeare's Othello.
Nor swell'd his breast with uncouth pride,
That heav'n on him above his charge had laid;
But, for his great Creator would the same,
His will increas'd; so fire augmenteth flame. Fairfax.
Many excrescences of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance. Bacon's Natural History.
3. For as much. In regard that; in consideration of.
For as much as in publick prayer we are not only to consider what is needful, in respect of God; but there is also in men that which we must regard: we somewhat incline to length, lest overquick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of. Hooker, b. v.
For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spaw water. Arbutnot on Diet.
4. For why. Because; for this reason that.
Solyman had three hundred fieldpieces, that a camel might well carry one of them, being taken from the carriage; for why, Solyman purposing to draw the emperor unto battle, had brought no greater pieces of battery with him. Kalles.
TO FORAGE. v. n. [from foris, abroad, Latin.]
1. To wander far; to rove at a distance.
Forage, and run
To meet displeasure farther from the doors,
And grapple with him, ere he come to nigh. Shak. K. John.
2. To wander in search of spoil, generally of provisions.
As in a stormy night,
Wolves, urged by their raging appetite,
Forage for prey. Denham.
There was a brood of young larks in the corn, and the dam went abroad forage for them. L'Estrange's Fables.
Nor dare they stray
When rain is promis'd, or a stormy day;
But near the city walls their wat'ring take,
Nor forage far, but short excursions make. Dryden's Virgil.
3. To ravage; to feed on spoil.
His most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp Forage in blood of French nobility. Shakespeare's Henry V.
TO FORAGE. v. a. To plunder; to strip; to spoil.
They will both strengthen all the country round, and also be as continual holds for her majesty, if the people should revolt; for without such it is easy for forage and over-run the whole land. Spenser on Ireland.
- FORAGE, n. f. [from forage, German and French, from foris, Latin.]
1. Search of provisions; the act of feeding abroad.
One way a band select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground; or fleecy flock,
Ewes, and their bleating lambs, o'er the plains
Their booty. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
2. Provisions sought abroad.
Some o'er the publick magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryden's Georg.
3. Provisions in general.
Provided forage, our spent arms renew'd. Dryd. Fables.
- FORAMINOUS. adj. [from foramen, Latin.] Full of holes; perforated in many places; porous.
Soft and foraminous bodies, in the first creation of the found, will deaden it; but in the passage of the found they will admit it better than harder bodies. Bacon's Nat. History.
- TO FORBEAR. v. n. pret. I forbore, anciently forbare; part.
forborn. [from forbear, Saxon. for has in composition the power of privation; as, forbear; or depravation; as forswear, and other powers not easily explained.]
1. To cease from any thing; to intermit.
The wolf, the lion, and the bear,
When they their prey in pieces tear,
To quarrel with themselves forbear. Denham.
2. To pause; to delay.
I pray you, tarry: pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in chusing wrongs,
I lose your company; therefore forbear a while. Shakef.
3. To omit voluntarily; not to do; to abstain.
He forbare to go forth. 1 Sa. xxiii. 13.
At this he started, and forbare to swear;
Not out of conscience of the sin, but fear. Dryden's Juv.
Who can forbear to admire and adore him who weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance. Cheyne.
4. To refrain forbearing is a prince persuaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone. Prov. xxv. 15.
- TO FORBEAR. v. a.
1. To decline; to omit voluntarily.
Forbear his presence, until time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure. Shakespeare's King Lear.
So angry bulls the combat do forbear,
When from the wood a lion does appear. Waller.
2. To abstain from; to shun to do.

FOR

If it passed only by the house of peers, it should be looked upon as invalid and void, and execution should be thereupon forborn or suspended. Clarendon, b. viii.
There is not any one action whatsoever which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the Scripture will give him a clear precept or prohibition for it. South's Sermons.
3. To spare; to treat with clemency.
With all lowliness and meekness, with long sufferings, forbearing one another in love. Eph. iv. 2.
4. To withhold.
Forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me; that he destroy thee not. 2 Chron. xxxv. 21.

FORBEARANCE. n. f. [from forbear.]
1. The care of avoiding or shunning any thing; negation of practice.
True nobleness would Learn him forbearance from to foul a wrong. Shakesp. R. III.
This may convince us how vastly greater a pleasure is consequent upon the forbearance of sin, than can possibly accompany the commission of it. South's Sermons.
Liberty is the power a man has to do, or to forbear doing, any particular action, according as its doing or forbearance has the actual preference in the mind. Locke.

2. Intermission of something.
3. Command of temper.
Have a continent forbearance, 'till the speed of his rage goes slower. Shakesp. Lear.
4. Lenty; delay of punishment; mildness.
Nor do I take notice of this instance of severity in our own country to justify such a proceeding, but only to display the mildness and forbearance made use of under the reign of his present majesty. Addison's Freeholder, No. 52.
He applies to our gratitude by obligations of kindness and beneficence, of long suffering and forbearance. Rogers.

FORBEARER. n. f. [from forbear.] An intermitter; inter-ceptor of any thing.
The West as a father all goodness doth bring,
The East a forbearer, no manner of thing. Tass. Hafbandry.
To FORBID. v. a. pret. I forbade; part. forbidding or forbidd. [conbeoban, Saxon; verboten, Dutch.]
1. To prohibit; to interdict any thing.
A witch, a queen, an old crazing queen; have I not forbid her my house? Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they fought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.
The voice of reason, in all the dictates of natural morality, ought carefully to be attended to, by a strict observance of what it commands, but especially of what it forbids. South.
All hatred of persons, by very many Christian principles, we are most solemnly and indispensably forbid. Spratt's Sermon.
The chaste and holy race
Are all forbidden this polluted place. Dryden's Æn. l. vi.

2. To command to forbear any thing.
She with so sweet a rigour forbad him, that he durst not rebel. Sidney, b. ii.
It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand,
The practice and the purpose of the king,
From whose obedience I forbid may fowl. Shakesp. Lear.
They have determined to consume all those things that God hath forbidden them to eat by his laws. Judith xi. 12.
3. To oppose; to hinder.
The moisture being forbidden to come up in the plant, stayeth longer in the root, and so dilates it. Bacon's Nat. History.
The plaister alone would pen the humour, and so exasperate it as well as forbid new humour. Bacon's Natural History.
Thy throne is darkness in th' abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the light!
O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,
And fear no farther than thyself reveal'd. Dryden.

4. To accuse; to blast. Now obsolete. To bid is in old language to pray; to forbid therefore is to curse.
Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his penthouse lid;
He shall live a man forbid. Shakesp. Macbeth.
To FORBID. v. n. To utter a prohibition.
Now the good gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome
Should now eat up her own! Shakesp. Coriolanus.

FORBIDDANCE. n. f. [from forbid.] Prohibition; edict against any thing.
How hast thou yielded to transgress
The strict forbiddance! how to violate
The sacred fruit forbidden! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

FORBIDDENLY. adv. [from forbid.] In an unlawful manner.
With all confidence he forbids, as he had seen't,
That you have touch'd his queen forbiddenly. Shakesp. Lear.
FORBIDDER. n. f. [from forbid.] One that prohibits; one that enacts a prohibition.
This was a bold accusation of God, making the fountain of good the contriver of evil, and the forbidder of the crime an abettor of the fact prohibited. Brown's Vul. Err.
Other care, perhaps,

FOR

May have diverted from continual watch
Our great forbidder! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
FORBIDDING. participial adj. [from forbid.] Railing abhorrence; repelling approach; causing aversion.
Tragedy was made forbidding and horrible. A. Hill.
FORCE. n. f. [force, French; fortis, Latin.]
1. Strength; vigour; might; active power.
He never could maintain his part but in the force of his will. Shakesp. Much Ado about Nothing.
A ship, which hath struck fail, doth run
By force of that force which before it won. Dante.

2. Violence.
Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown,
Which now they hold by force, and not by right. Sh. H. VI.
The shepherd Paris bore the Spartan bride
By force away, and then by force enjoy'd it. Dryden.

3. Virtue; efficacy.
Manifest it is, that the very majesty and holiness of the place where God is worshipped, hath, in regard of us, great virtue, force and efficacy; for that it serveth as a sensible help to stir up devotion. Hooker, b. v. f. 16.
No definitions, no suppositions of any fact, are of force enough to destroy constant experience. Locke.

4. Validness; power of law.
A testament is of force after men are dead. Heb. ix. 17.
Not long in force this charter stood;
Wanting that seal, it must be seal'd in blood. Denham.
5. Armament; warlike preparation. Often forces in the plural.
O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye. Shakesp. Richard III.
The secret of the power of Spain consisteth in a veteran army, compounded of miscellany forces of all nations. Bacon.
A greater force than that which here we find,
Ne'er press'd the ocean, nor employ'd the wind. Waller.
Those victorious forces of the rebels were not able to sustain your arms. Dryden.

6. Destiny; necessity; fatal compulsion.
To FORCE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To compel; to constrain.
Dangers are light, if they once seem light; and more dangers have deceived men than forced them. Bacon.
I have been forced to use the cant words of Whig and Tory. Swift's Examiner.
The actions and operations did force them upon dividing the single idea. Pope's View of Epic Poem.

2. To overpower by strength.
O that fortune
Had brought me to the field where thou art fam'd
To have wrought such wonders with an ass's jaw,
I should have forc'd thee foon with other arms. Milton.
With fates averse, the rout in arms resort,
To force their monarch and insult the court. Dryden's Æn.
3. To impel; to press.
Thou shalt not destroy the trees by forcing an ax against them. Deutr. 20. 19.
4. To draw or pull by main strength.
Stooping, the spear descended on his chine,
Just where the bone distinguish'd either loin:
It stuck so fast, so deeply bur'd lay,
That scarce the victor forc'd the steel away. Dryden's Æn.

5. To enforce; to urge.
Three blustering nights, born by the southern blast,
I floated, and discover'd land at last:
High on a mounting wave my head I bore,
Forcing my strength, and gath'ring to the shore. Dryden's Æn.
6. To drive by violence or power.
This way of flattering their willing benefactors out of party, contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Dewey of Piety.
To free the ports, and ope the Punique land
To Trojan guests; left, ignorant of fate,
The queen might force them from her town and state. Dryden.

7. To gain by violence or power.
My heart was your's; but, oh! you left it here
Abandon'd to those tyrants hope and fear:
If they forc'd from me one kind look or word,
Could you not take that, nor that small part afford? Dryden.
8. To form; to take or enter by violence.
Troy wall'd so high,
Atreides might as well have forc'd the sky.
Heav'n from all ages wisely did provide
This wealth, and for the bravest nation hide;
Who with four hundred foot, and forty horse,
Dare boldly go a new-found world to force. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

9. To ravish; to violate by force.
Force her,—I like it not. Dryden.
10. To constrain; to distort; not to obtain naturally or with ease.
Our general taste in England is for epigram, turns of wit, and forced conceits. Addison's Spectator, No. 409.

11. To man; to strengthen by soldiers; to garrison. Here

May let them lye,
'Till famine and the ague eat them up:
Were they not forc'd with those that should be our's,
We might have met them dæful, beard to beard. Shakesp.
If you find that any great number of soldiers be newly sent into Oronoque, and that the passages be already forced, then be well advised how you land. Raleigh's Apology.

To FORCE. v. n. To lay stress upon. This word I have only found in the following passage.
That morning that he was to join battle with Harold, his armor put on his backpiece before, and his breastplate behind; the which being espied by some that stood by, was taken among them for an ill token, and therefore advised him not to fight that day; to whom the duke answered, I force not of such fooleries; but if I have any skill in footfaying, as in foot I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change copy from a duke to a king. Cand. n's Remains.

To FORCEFULLY. adv. [from force.] Violently; constrainedly; unaturally.
This foundation of the earth upon the waters doth most aptly agree to that structure of the abyss and antediluvian earth; but very improperly and forcidly to the present form of the earth and the waters. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To FORCEFUL. adj. [force and full.] Violent; strong; driven with great might; impetuous.
Why, what need we
Commune with you of this, but rather follow
Our forceful indignation? Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
Against the steel he threw
His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden's Æn.
Were it by chance, or forceful destiny,
Which forms in causes first what'er shall be,
Assisted by a friend, one moon's night,
This Palamon from prison took his flight.
He pois'd in air, the javlin sent,
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went. Pope.

To FORCEFULLY. adv. [from forceful.] Violently; impetuously.
His forceless spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden's Æn.
Were it by chance, or forceful destiny,
Which forms in causes first what'er shall be,
Assisted by a friend, one moon's night,
This Palamon from prison took his flight.
He pois'd in air, the javlin sent,
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went. Pope.

To FORCELESS. adj. [from force.] Without force; weak; feeble; impotent.
To FORCEPS. n. f. [Latin.]
Forceps properly signifies a pair of tongs; but is used for an instrument in chirurgery, to extract any thing out of wounds, and the like occasions. Quincy.

To FORCER. n. f. [from force.]
1. That which forces, drives, or constrains.
2. The embolus of a pump working by pulsion, in contradistinction to a sucker, which acts by attraction.
The usual means for the ascent of water is either by suckers or forcers. Wilkins's Dædalus.

To FORCIBLE. adj. [from force.]
1. Strong; mighty; opposed to weak.
That punishment, which hath been sometimes forcible to bridle sin, may grow afterwards too weak and feeble. Hooker.
2. Violent; impetuous.
3. Efficacious; active; powerful.
Sweet smells are most forcible in dry substances, when broken; and so likewise in oranges, the ripping of their rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon's Natural History.
4. Prevalent; of great influence.
God hath assured us, that there is no inclination or temptation so forcible which our humble prayers and desires may not frustrate and break asunder. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Jersey, below'd by all; for all must feel
The influence of a form and mind,
Where comely grace and constant virtue dwell,
Like mingl'd streams, more forcible when join'd:
Jersey shall at thy altars stand,
Shall there receive the azure band. Prior.

5. Done by force.
The abdication of king James, the advocates on that side look upon to have been forcible and unjust, and consequently void. Swift.
6. Valid; binding; obligatory.
To FORCELESSNESS. n. f. [from forcible.] Force; violence.
To FORCEBLY. adv. [from forcible.]
1. Strongly; powerfully.
The Gospel offers such considerations as are fit to work very forcibly upon two of the most swaying and governing passions in the mind, our hopes and our fears. Tillotson.
2. Impetuously.
3. By violence; by force.
He himself with greedy great desire
Into the cattle enter'd forcibly. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 8.

FOR

The taking and carrying away of women forcibly, and against their will, except female wards and bondwomen, was made capital. Bacon's Henry VII.
This doctrine brings us down to the level of horse and mule, whose mouths are forcibly holden with bit and bridle. Hamm.
FORCIPATED. adj. [from forceps.] Formed like a pair of pincers to open and inclose.
The locusts have antennæ, or long horns before, with a long falcation or forcipated tail behind. Brown's Vulgar Err.
When they have seized their prey, they will so tenaciously hold it with their forcipated mouth, that they will not part therewith, even when taken out of the waters. Derham.

FORD. n. f. [from forde, Saxon, from foran, to pass.]
1. A shallow part of a river when it may be passed without swimming.
Her men the paths rode through made by her sword;
They pass the stream, when she had found the ford. Fairfax.

2. It sometimes signifies the stream, the current, without any consideration of passage or shallowness.
Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards
The ford, and of itself the water flies
All taste of living wight. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
Rife, wretched widow! rife; nor undeplor'd
Permit my ghost to pass the Stygian ford:
But rife, prepar'd in black to mourn thy peris'd lord. Dry.

To FORD. v. a. [from the noun] To pass without swimming.
Adam's shin-bones must have contained a thousand fathom, and much more, if he had forded the ocean. Raleigh's Hist.
FORDABLE. adj. [from ford.] Passable without swimming.
Pliny placeth the Schenite upon the Euphrates, where the same beginneth to be fordable. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
A countryman founded a river up and down, to try where it was most fordable; and where the water ran too smooth, he found it deep; and, on the contrary, shallowest where it made most noise. L'Estrange.

FORE. adj. [from for, Saxon.] Anterior; that which comes first in a progressive motion.
Resistance in fluids arises from their greater pressing on the fore than hind part of the bodies moving in them. Cheyne.

FORE. adv.
1. Anteriorly; in the part which appears first to those that meet it.
Each of them will bear six demiculverins and four falcons, needing no other addition than a slight spar deck fore and aft, which is a slight deck throughout. Raleigh's Essays.

2. Fore is a word much used in composition to mark priority of time, of which some examples shall be given.
To FOREADVISE. v. n. [fore and advise.] To counsel early; to counsel before the time of action, or the event.
Thus to have said,
As you were foreadvise'd, had touch'd his spirit,
And tried his inclination. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

To FOREAPPOINT. [fore and appoint.] To order beforehand.
To FOREARM. v. a. [fore and arm.] To provide for attack or resistance before the time of need.
A man should fix and forearm his mind with this persuasion, that, during his passion, whatsoever is offered to his imagination tends only to deceive. South's Sermons.

He forearms his care
With rules to push his fortune, or to bear. Dryden's Æn.
To FOREBODE. v. n. [fore and bode.]
1. To prognosticate; to foretell.
An ancient augur, skill'd in future fate,
With these foreboding words restrains their hate. Dryden.

2. To foreknow; to be precient of; to feel a secret sense of something future.
Fate makes you deaf, while I in vain implore:
My heart forebodes I ne'er shall see you more. Dryden's In. Emp.
My soul foreboded I should find the bow'r
Of some fell monster, fierce with barb'rous pow'r. Pope.

FOREBODDER. n. f. [from forebode.]
1. A prognosticator; a soothsayer.
Your raven has a reputation in the world for a bird of omen, and a kind of small prophet; a crow that had observed the raven's manner and way of delivering his predictions, sets up for a foreboder. L'Estrange's Fables.

2. A foreknower.
FOREBY. prep. [fore and by.] Near; hard by; fast by.
Not far away he hence doth won
Foreby a fountain, where I late him left. Fairy Queen, b. i.

To FORECAST. v. a. [fore and cast.]
1. To scheme; to plan before execution.
He shall forecast his devices against the strong holds. Dan. xi.
2. To adjust; to contrive.
The feast was serv'd; the time so well forecast,
That just when the desert and fruits were plac'd,
The hend's alarm began. Dryden's Theod. and Honoria.

3. To foresee; to provide against.
It is wisdom to consider the end of things before we embark, and to forecast consequences. L'Estrange's Fables.

9 O

FOR

To FORECAST. v. n. To form schemes; to contrive beforehand.

And whatso heavens in their secret doom
Ordained have, how can frail fleshy wight
Forecast, but it must needs to issue come? Spenser.
When broad awake, the finds in troublous fit,
Forecasting how his foe he might annoy. Fairy Queen, b. i.
To FORECAST. n. f. [from the verb.] Contrivance beforehand; scheme; plan; antecedent policy.

Alas! that Warwick had no more forecast,
But while he thought to steal the fingle ten,
The king was silly finger'd from the deck! Shak. Hen. VI.
He makes this difference to arise from the forecast and pre-determination of the gods. Addison on ancient Medals.

The last, scarce ripen'd into perfect man,
Saw helpless him from whom their life began:
Mem'ry and forecast just returns engage;
That pointed back to youth, this on to age. Pope.

FORECASTER. n. f. [from forecast.] One who contrives beforehand.

FORECASTLE. n. f. [fore and castle.] In a ship, is that part where the foremast stands, and is divided from the rest of the floor by a bulk-head: that part of the forecastle which is aloft, and not in the hold, is called the prow. Harris.

The commodity of the new cook-room the merchants have found to be so great, as that in all their ships, the cook-rooms are built in their forecastles, contrary to that which had been anciently used. Raleigh's Essay.

FORECHOSEN. partic. [fore and chosen.] Pre-elected.

FORECYTED. part. [fore and cite.] Quoted before, or above.

Graves is of opinion, that the anterior mentioned in that forecited passage is continued. Arbutnot on Cains.

To FORECLOSE. v. a. [fore and close.]

1. To shut up; to preclude; to prevent.
The embargo with Spain foreclosed this trade. Carew.
2. To FORECLOSE a Mortgage, is to cut off the power of redemption.

FOREDECK. n. f. [fore and deck.] The anterior part of the ship.

I to the foredeck went, and thence did look
For rocky Scylla. Chapman's Odyssey, b. xii.
To FOREDESIGN. v. a. [fore and design.] To plan beforehand.

All the steps of the growth and vegetation both of animals and plants, have been foreseen and foredesigned by the wife Author of nature. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

To FOREDO. v. a. [from fore and do, not fore.]
1. To ruin; to destroy. A word obsolete. Opposed to making happy.

Befeeching him, if either falves or oils,
A foredone wight from door of death might raise,
He would at her request prolong her nephew's days. Fa. Qu.
That drew on men God's hatred and his wrath,
And many souls in dolours had foredone. Fairy Queen, b. i.

This doth betoken,
The corse they follow did with desperate hand
Foredo its own life. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

That either makes me, or foredoes me quite. Shakespeare.

2. To overdo; to weary; to harass.
Whilst the heavy plowman moans,
All with weary talk foredone. Shakespeare.

To FOREDOOM. v. a. [fore and doom.] To predestinate; to determine beforehand.

Through various hazards and events we move
To Latium, and the realms foredoom'd by Jove. Dryd. En.
The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with ease: if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state. Dryden.

Fate foredoom'd, and all things tend
By course of time to their appointed end. Dryden.
Here Britain's statemen oft the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.

FOREEND. n. f. [fore and end.] The anterior part.

I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid
More pious debts to heaven than in all
The fore-end of my time. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

In the fore-end of it, which was towards him, grew a small green branch of palm; and when the wife man had taken it into his boat, it opened of itself, and there were found in it a book and a letter. Bacon's New Atlantis.

FOREFATHER. n. f. [fore and father.] Ancestor; one who in any degree of ascending genealogy precedes another.

The custom of the people of God, and the decrees of our forefathers, are to be kept, touching those things whereof the Scripture hath neither one way or other given us charge. Hook.

If it be a generous desire in men to know from whence their own forefathers have come, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first ancestor. Raleigh's History.

Conceit is still deriv'd
From some forefather grief; mine is not so. Shak. Rich. II.

FOR

Shall I not be distraught,
And madly play with my forefathers joints? Sh. Ro. and Jul.

Our great forefathers
Had left him nought to conquer but his country. Addison.
When a man sees the prodigious pains our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles of architecture they would have left us, had they been instructed in the right way. Addison on Italy.

Blest peer! his great forefathers ev'ry grace
Reflecting, and reflected in his race. Pope, Epist. i.

To FOREFEIND. v. a. [fore and defend.]
1. To prohibit; to avert.
I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No, heav'n's forefend! I would not kill thy soul. Shaksp.

Perhaps a fever, which the gods forefend,
May bring your youth to some untimely end. Dryden.

2. To provide for; to secure.
Down with the nose,
Down with it flat: take the bridge quite away
Of him, that, his particular to forefend, Smells from the gen'ral weal. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.

FOREFINGER. n. f. [fore and finger.] The finger next to the thumb; the index.

An agate-fstone
On the forefinger of an alderman. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.

Polymnia shall be drawn, as it were, acting her speech with her forefinger. Peacocks on Drawing.

Some wear this on the middlefinger, as the ancient Gauls and Britons; and some upon the forefinger. Brown's Vul. Err.

FOREFOOT. n. f. plur. forefeet. [fore and foot.] The anterior foot of a quadruped: in contempt, a hand.

Give me thy fist, thy forefoot to me give. Shak. Hen. V.
He ran fiercely, and smote at Heliodorus with his forefeet. 2 Mac. iii. 25.

I continue my line from thence to the heel; then making the breast with the eminency thereof, bring out his near forefeet, which I finish. Peacocks on Drawing.

To FOREGO. v. a. [for and go.]
1. To quit; to give up; to resign.
Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be so cruel to an humbled foe?

If nature, then she may it mend with skill;
If will, then she at will may will forego. Spenser, Sen. 4. i.

Having all before absolutely in his power, it remaineth so fill, he having already neither foregiven nor foregone any thing thereby unto them, but having received something from them. Spenser's State of Ireland.

He is a great adventurer, said he,
That hath his sword through hard assay foregone;
And now hath vowed, 'till he avenged be
Of that despite, never to wear none. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Special reason oftentimes causeth the will to prefer one good thing before another; to leave one for another's sake, to forego meaner for the attainment of higher degrees. Hooker, b. v.

Must I then leave you? Must I needs fore-
So good, so noble, and so true a matter? Shaksp. H. VIII.

Let us not fore-
That for a trifle which was bought with blood. Shakespeare.

How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,
To live again in these wild woods forlorn! Milt. Pa. Lest.

This argument might prevail with you to forego a little of your repose for the publick benefit. Dryd. Jew. Dedic.

What they have enjoyed with great pleasure at one time, has proved insipid or nauseous at another; and therefore they see nothing in it, for which they should forego a present enjoyment. Locke.

2. To go before; to be past. [from fore and go.]
By our remembrances of days foregone,
Such were our faults: O! then we thought them not. Shak.

It is to be understood of Cain, that many years foregone, and when his people were increased, he built the city of Enoch. Raleigh's History of the World.

Left what has been said of the differences between true and apparent colours be interpreted in too unlimited a sense, reflect upon the two foregoing objections. Boyle on Colours.

This foregoing remark gives the reason why imitation pleases. Dryden's Dunciad.

I was seated in my elbow-chair, where I had indulged the foregoing speculations, with my lamp burning by me as usual.
Addison's Spectator, N^o. 465.

In the foregoing part of this work I promised further proofs.
Woodward's Natural History.

3. To lose.
This is the very ecstasy of love,
Whose violent property forgoes itself,
And leads the will to desperate undertakings. Shak. Hamlet.

FOREGOER. n. f. [from forego.] Ancestor; progenitor.
Honours best thrive,
When rather from our acts we them derive
Than our foregoers. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

FOREGROUND.

FOR

FOREGROUND. n. f. [fore and ground.] The part of the field or expanse of a picture which seems to lie before the figures.

All agree that white can sublist on the foreground of the picture: the question therefore is to know, if it can equally be placed upon that which is backward, the light being universal, and the figures supposed in an open field. Dryden.

FOREHAND. n. f. [fore and hand.]
1. The part of a horse which is before the rider.
2. The chief part.

The great Achilles, whom opinion crowns
The finew and the forehead of our host. Shakespeare.

FOREHAND. adj. A thing done too soon.
You'll say the did embrace me as a husband,
And so extenuate the forehead sin. Shakespeare.

FOREHAND. n. f. [from fore and hand.]
1. Early; timely.
If by thus doing you have not secured your time by an early and forehanded care, yet be sure, by a timely diligence, to redeem the time. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

2. Formed in the foreparts.
Bauld, do you call him? He's a substantial true-bred beast, bravely forehanded: mark but the cleanness of his shapen too.
Dryden's Don Sebastian.

FOREHEAD. n. f. [fore and head.]
1. That part of the face which reaches from the eyes upward to the hair.

The breast of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead, when it spit forth blood
At Grecian swords contending. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Some angel copy'd, while I slept, each grace,
And moulded ev'ry feature from my face:
Such majesty does from her forehead rise,
Her cheeks such blushes cast, such rays her eyes. Dryden.

2. Impudence; confidence; assurance; audaciousness; audacity.

A man of confidence preleth forward upon every appearance of advantage, and thinks nothing above his management or his merit: where his force is too feeble, he prevails by dint of impudence: these men of forehead are magnificent in promises, and infallible in their prescriptions. Collier.

I would fain know to what branch of the legislature they can have the forehead to apply. Swift's Presbyterian Plea.

FOREHOLDING. n. f. [fore and hold.] Predictions; ominous accounts; superstitious prognostications.

How are superstitious men hagg'd out of their wits with the fancy of omens, forebodings, and old wives tales! L'Estr.

FOREIGN. adj. [foreign, French; forane, Spanish, from foris,
Latin.]

1. Not of this country; not domestic.
Your sons, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home. Shaksp. Rich. III.

The learned correspondence you hold in foreign parts. Milt.
The positions are so far from being new, that they are commonly to be met with in both ancient and modern, domes-tick and foreign writers. Atturbury's Sermon, Pref.

The parties and divisions among us may several ways bring destruction upon our country, at the same time that our united force would secure us against all the attempts of a foreign enemy. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 34.

2. Alien; remote; not allied; not belonging; without relation.
It is often used with to; but more properly with from.

I must dissemble,
And speak a language foreign to my heart. Addison's Cato.
Fame is a good so wholly foreign to our natures, that we have no faculty in the soul adapted to it, nor any organ in the body to relish it, placed out of the possibility of fruition. Addis.

This design is not foreign from some people's thoughts.
Swift on the Sacramental Test.

3. Excluded; not admitted; held at a distance.
They will not flick to say you envied him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still, which to griev'd him,
That he ran mad and died. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

4. [In law.] A foreign plea, placitum forisfactum; as being a plea out of the proper court of justice.

5. Extraneous; adventitious in general.
There are who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mold in their ill-natur'd land Induce. Phillips.

FOREIGNER. n. f. [from foreign.] A man that comes from another country; not a native; a stranger.

Joy is such a foreigner,
So mere a stranger to my thoughts, I know
Not how to entertain him. Denham's Sophy.

To this false foreigner you give your throne,
And wrong a friend, a kinsman, and a son:
Resume your ancient care. Dryd. En.

Water is the only native of England made use of in punch;
but the lemons, the brandy, the sugar, and the nutmegs, are all foreigners. Addison's Freeholder.

FOR

Nor could the majesty of the English crown appear in a greater lustre, either to foreigners or subjects. Swift.

FOREIGNNESS. n. f. [from foreign.] Remoteness; want of relation to something.

Let not the foreignness of the subject hinder you from endeavouring to let me right. Locke.

To FOREIMAGINE. v. a. [fore and imagine.] To conceive or fancy before proof.

We are within compals of a foreimagined possibility in that behalf. Camden's Remains.

To FOREJUDGE. v. a. [fore and judge.] To judge beforehand; to be prepossessioned.

To FOREKNOW. v. a. [fore and know.] To have precience of; to foresee.

We foreknow that the sun will rise and set, that all men born in the world shall die again; that after Winter the Spring shall come; after the Spring, Summer and harvest; yet is not our foreknowledge the cause of any of those. Raleigh.

He foreknew John should not suffer a violent death, but go into his grave in peace. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 10.
Calchas the sacred seer, who had in view
Things present and the past, and things to come foreknew.
Dryden's Iliad.

Who would the miseries of man foreknow?
Not knowing, we but share our part of woe. Dryden.

FOREKNOWABLE. adj. [from foreknow.] Possible to be known before they happen.

It is certainly foreknowable what they will do in such and such circumstances. Moré's Divine Dialogues.

FOREKNOWLEDGE. n. f. [fore and knowledge.] Precience; knowledge of that which has not yet happened.

Our being in Christ by eternal foreknowledge, faveth us not without our actual and real adoption into the fellowship of his saints in this present world. Hooker, b. v. f. 56.

I told him you was asleep: he seems to have a foreknowledge of that too, and therefore chafes to speak with you. Shaksp.

If I foreknew,
Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault,
Which had no less prov'd certain unforeknown. Milton.

I hope the foreknowledge you had of my esteem for you, is the reason that you do not dislike my letters. Pope.

FORELAND. n. f. [fore and land.] A promontory; headland;
high land jutting into the sea; a cape.

As when a ship, by skilful steerer wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sails. Milt. P. L.

To FORELAY. v. a. [fore and lay.] To lay wait for; to in-trap by ambush.

A serpent shoots his sting at unaware;
An ambush'd thief forelays a traveller:
The man lies murder'd, while the thief and snake,
One gains the thickets, and one thrids the brake. Dryden.

To FORELIFT. v. a. [fore and lift.] To raise aloft any anterior part.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast;
And often bounding on the bruised grafs,
As for great joy of his new comen guest. Fairy Queen, b. i.

FORELOCK. n. f. [fore and lock.] The hair that grows from the forehead of the head.

Tell her the joyous time will not be flaid,
Unless he do him by the forelock take. Spenser, Sonnet 70.

Round from his parted forelock manly hung,
Clust'ring, but not beneath his shoulders broad. Milton.

Zeal and duty are not slow,
But on occasion's forelock watchful wait. Milt. Parad. Reg.

Time is painted with a lock before, and bald behind, figu-fying thereby that we must take time by the forelock; for, when it is once past, there is no recalling it. Swift.

FOREMAN. n. f. [fore and man.] The first or chief person.
He is a very sensible man, shoots flying, and has been several times foreman of the petty jury. Addison's Spectator.

FOREMENTIONED. adj. [fore and mentioned.] Mentioned or recited before. It is observable that many participles are compounded with fore, whose verbs have no such composition.

Dacier, in the life of Aurelius, has not taken notice of the forementioned figure on the pillar. Addison on Italy.

FOREMOST. adj. [from fore.]
1. First in place.
Our women in the foremost ranks appear;
March to the fight, and meet your mistress there. Dryden.

I stand astonish'd! what, the bold Sempronius,
That still broke foremost through the crowd of patriots,
As with a hurricane of zeal transported,
And virtuous ev'n to madness! Addison's Cato.

2. First in dignity.
All three were set among the foremost ranks of fame, for great minds to attempt, and great force to perform what they did attempt. Sidney, b. ii.

These ride foremost in the field,
As they the foremost rank of honour held. Dryden.

FORENAMED.

FOR

FORENAMED. adj. [fore and name.] Nominated before.
 And such are fore ones.
 As Curius, and the foreman d' Lentulus. Ben. J. J. Catil.
FORENOON. n. f. [fore and noon.] The time of day reckoned from the middle point, between the dawn and the meridian, to the meridian: opposed to afternoon.
 The manner was, that the forenoon they should run at tilt, the afternoon in a broad field in manner of a battle, till either the strangers or the country knights won the field. Sidney.
 Curio, at the funeral of his father, built a temporary theatre, consisting of two parts turning on hinges, according to the position of the sun, for the convenience of forenoon's and afternoon's diversion. Arbutnot on Coins.
FORENOTICE. n. f. [fore and notice.] Information of an event before it happens.
 So strange a revolution never happens in poetry, but either heaven or earth gives some forenotice of it. Rymer's Tragedies.
FORENSICK. adj. [forensis, Latin.] Belonging to courts of judicature.
 Person is a forensick term, appropriating actions and their merit; and so belongs only to intelligent agents, capable of a law, and happiness and misery. This personality extends itself beyond present existence to what is past, only by consciousness.
 The forum was a publick place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before the proper judges in matters of property, or in criminal cases: thence all sorts of disputations in courts of justice, where several persons make their distinct speeches, may come under the name of forensick disputes. Hart's Improvement of the Mind.
FOREORDAIN. v. a. [fore and ordain.] To predetermine; to predetermine; to predetermine.
 The church can discharge, in manner convenient, a work of great importance, by foreordaining some short collect wherein briefly to mention thanks. Hosker, b. v.
FOREPART. n. f. [fore and part.] The anterior part.
 Had it been to raised, it would deprive us of the sun's light all the forepart of the day. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 The ribs have no cavity in them, and towards the forepart or breast are broad and thin, to bend and give way without danger of fracture. Ray on the Creation.
FOREPART. adj. [fore and part.] Past before a certain time.
 Now cease, ye dancels, your delights forepart;
 Enough it is that all the day is yours. Spenser's Epithalam.
 My forepart proofs, how'er the matter fall,
 Shall tax my fears of little vanity, Shakespeare.
 Having vainly fear'd too little.
 Such is the treaty which he negotiates with us, an offer and tender of a reconciliation, an act of oblivion, of all forepart fins, and of a new covenant. Hammond on Fundamentals.
FOREPOSSESS. adj. [fore and possession.] Preoccupied; prepossessed; pre-engaged.
 The testimony either of the ancient fathers, or of other classical divines, may be clearly and abundantly answered to the satisfaction of any rational man, not extremely forepossest with prejudice. Seneca's Judgment.
FOREPRANK. n. f. [fore and prank.] First rank; front.
 Yet leave our cousin Catharine here with us;
 She is our capital demand, compri'd
 Within the foreprank of our articles. Shakespeare, Henry V.
FORERECITED. adj. [fore and recite.] Mentioned or enumerated before.
 Bid him recount
 The forerected practices, whereof
 We cannot feel too little, hear too much. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
FORERUN. v. a. [fore and run.]
 1. To come before as an earnest of something following; to introduce as an harbinger.
 Against ill chances men are ever merry;
 But heav'n's foreruns the good event. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
 The sun
 Was set, and twilight from the East came on, Forerunning night. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
 She bids me hope: oh heav'n's, she pities me!
 And pity still foreruns approaching love,
 As lightning does the thunder. Dryden's Spanish Flyer.
 2. To precede; to have the start of.
 I heard it to be a maxim at Dublin to follow, if not foreruns, all that is or will be practised in London. Graunt.
FORERUNNER. n. f. [from forerun.]
 1. An harbinger; a messenger sent before to give notice of the approach of those that follow.
 The six strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave; and there is a forerunner come from a seventh, the prince of Morocco.
 A cock was sacrificed as the forerunner of day and the sun, thereby acknowledging the light of life to be derived from the divine bounty, the daughter of providence. Stillington.
 My elder brothers, my forerunners came,
 Rough draughts of nature, ill design'd, and lame:

FOR

Blown off, like blossoms, never made to bear;
 'Till I came finish'd, her last labour'd care. Dryden, Auranga.
 Already opera prepares the way,
 The sure forerunner of her gentle sway. Pope's Dunciad.
 2. A prognostick; a sign foretelling any thing.
 O Eve! some further change awaits us nigh,
 Which heav'n, by these mute signs in nature, shows Forerunners of his purpose. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
 Loss of sight is the misery of life, and usually the forerunner of death. South's Sermons.
 The keeping insensible perspiration up in due measure is the cause as well as sign of health, and the least deviation from that due quantity, the certain forerunner of a disease. Arbutnot.
TO FORESA. v. a. [fore and say.] To predict; to prophesy; to foretell.
 Let ordinance
 Come as the gods foresay it. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
TO FORESE. v. a. [fore and see.] To see beforehand; to see what has not yet happened; to have precedence; to foreknow.
 With Cupid she foresees and goes god Vulcan's pace. Sidney.
 The first of them could things to come foresee;
 The next, could of things present best advise;
 The third, things past could keep in memory. Fairy Queen.
 If there be any thing foreseen that is not usual, be armed for it by any hearty though a short prayer, and an earnest resolution beforehand, and then watch when it comes. Taylor.
 At h's foreseen approach, already quake
 The Caspian kingdoms and Meotian lake:
 Their seers behold the tempest from afar,
 And threatening oracles denounce the war. Dryden's Æn.
TO FORESHAME. v. a. [for and shame.] To shame; to bring reproach upon.
 Oh bill, foreshaming
 Those rich-left heirs, that let their fathers lie
 Without a monument. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
TO FORESHEW. v. a. [See FORESHOW.]
FORESHIP. n. f. [fore and ship.] The anterior part of the ship.
 The shipmen would have cast anchors out of the foreship. Acts xxvii. 30.
TO FORESHORTEN. v. a. [fore and shorten.] To shorten figures for the sake of shewing those behind.
 The greatest parts of the body ought to appear foremost; and he forbids the foreshortening, because they make the parts appear little. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
TO FORESHOW. v. a. [fore and show.]
 1. To discover before it happens; to predict; to prognosticate.
 Christ had called him to be a witness of his death, and resurrection from the dead, according to that which the prophets and Moses had foreshown. Hosker, b. iii. f. 8.
 Next, like Aurora, Spenser rose,
 Whose purple blush the day foreshow. Derham.
 You chose to withdraw yourself from publick business, when the face of heaven grew troubled, and the frequent shifting of the wind foreshow'd a storm. Dryden.
 2. To represent before it comes.
 What else is the law but the gospel foreshown? What other the gospel than the law fulfilled? Hosker, b. v.
FORESIGHT. n. f. [fore and sight.]
 1. Precedence; prognostication; foreknowledge. The accent anciently on the last syllable.
 Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
 Here sleep below; while thou to foresight wak'st;
 As once thou slept'st, whilst the to life was form'd. Milton.
 2. Provident care of futurity.
 He had a sharp foresight, and working wit,
 That never idle was, he once could rest a whit. Fairfax, b. ii.
 In matters of arms he was both skillful and industrious, and as well in foresight as resolution present and great. Hoyward.
 Difficulties and temptations will more easily be born or avoided, if with prudent foresight we arm ourselves against them. Rogers's Sermons.
FORESIGHTFUL. adj. [foresight and full.] Precise; provident.
 Death gave him no such pangs as the foresightful care he had of his silly successor. Sidney, b. ii.
TO FORESIGNIFY. v. a. [fore and signify.] To betoken beforehand; to foreshow; to typify.
 Discoveries of Christ already present, whose future coming the Psalms did but foresignify. Hosker, b. v.
 Yet as being past times noxious, where they light
 On man, beast, plant, wasteful and turbulent,
 They oft foresignify, and threaten ill. Milton's Par. Reg.
FORESKIN. n. f. [fore and skin.] The prepuce.
 Their own hand
 An hundred of the faithfuls foe shall slay,
 And for a dow'r thy hundred foreskins pay. Caule's Davidid.
 Be Michel thy reward.
FORESKIRT. n. f. [fore and skirt.] The pendulous or loose part of the coat before.
 A thousand

FOR

A thousand pounds a year for pure respect!
 No other obligation?
 That promises more thousands: honour's train
 Is longer than his foreskirt. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
TO FORESLACK. v. a. [fore and slack.] To neglect by idleness.
 It is a great pity that so good an opportunity was omitted, and so happy an occasion foreslack'd, that might have been the eternal good of the land. Stenfor's State of Ireland.
TO FORESLAW. v. a. [fore and law.]
 1. To delay; to hinder; to impede; to obstruct.
 No stream, no wood, no mountain could foreslaw
 Their happy pace. Fairfax, b. i.
 Now the illustrious triumph return'd again,
 Brings every grace triumphant in her train:
 The wond'ring Nereids, though they rais'd no storm,
Foreslaw'd her passage, to behold her form. Dryden.
 2. To neglect; to omit.
 When the rebels were on Blackheath, the king knowing well that it flood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness in foreslacking, but wisdom in chusing his time, reliev'd with speed to assail them. Bacon's Hen. VII.
 Chremes, how many filers do you know
 That rule their boats and use their nets aright,
 That neither wind, nor time, nor tide foreslaw?
 Some such have been: but, ah! by tempests spite
 Their boats are lost; and now these few are none. P. Fletcher.
TO FORESLAW. v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter.
 This may plant courage in their quailing breasts,
 For yet is hope of life and victory.
Foreslaw no longer, make we hence again. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
TO FORESLACK. v. n. [fore and slack.]
 1. To predict; to foresee; to foreshow; to foretell.
 Old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous foreslacking
 To lie in names. Camden's Remains.
 2. To forbid.
 Thou hast foreslacked my being in these wars,
 And say't it is not fit. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
FORESPEAK. adj. [fore and speak.]
 1. Waited; tired; spent.
 After him came spurring hard
 A gentleman, almost forespent with speed. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
 2. Forespoken; past.
 Is not enough thy evil life forespent? Fairy Queen, b. i.
 You shall find his vanities forespent,
 Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly. Shakespeare, Henry V.
 3. Bestowed before.
 We must receive him
 According to the honour of his fender;
 And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us,
 We must extend our notice. Shakespeare.
FORESPELLER. n. f. [fore and spell.] One that rides before.
 A day in April never came so sweet,
 To show how costly Summer was at hand,
 As this forespeller comes before his lord. Shakespeare.
FOREST. n. f. [forest, French; foresta, Italian.]
 1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground, with wood.
 By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because, in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot chuse but feed in continual danger of life. Hosker, b. v. f. 48.
 Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam-wood to Dunsinane's high hill Shall come against him.
 —That will never be.
 Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
 Unfix his earth-bound root?
 There he airs which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champaigns, but grazing, and not overgrown with heath; or else timber-shades, as in forests. Bacon's Natural History, N. 936.
 How the first forest rais'd its shady head. Recommon.
 2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king, for his pleasure; which territory of ground is bounded with irremovable marks, and replenished with beasts of venery or chase, and with great coverts of vert for their succour and abode: for the preservation of which place, vert, and venison, there are certain particular laws. The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, under the broad seal of England, directed to certain discreet persons, has a mind to afford: which returned into Chancery, proclaims, that none shall hunt or chase any wild beasts within that precinct, without the king's special licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these: a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts; the officers for preserving the vert and venison, as the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agillors, regarders, bailiffs, and headles. The chief property of a forest is the swainmote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pypowders to a fair. Cowel.

TO FORESTALL. v. a. [fore and stall, Saxon.]
 1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand.
 If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
 That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it,
 And give men turns of speech: do not forestall
 By lavishness thine own and others wit,
 As if thou mad'st thy will. Herbert.
 What need a man forestall his date of grief,
 And run to meet what he would most avoid. Milton.
 2. To hinder by preoccupation or prevention.
 And though good luck prolonged hath thy date,
 Yet death then would the like mishap forestall. Fairy Queen.
 What's in prayer, but this twofold force
 To be forestall'd ere we come to fall,
 Or pardon'd being down. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 May
 This night forestall him of the coming day. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
 But for my tears,
 I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
 Ere you with grief had spoke. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
 If thou covet death, as utmost end
 Of misery, so thinking to evade
 The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
 Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so
 To be forestall'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
 I will not forestall your judgment of the rest. Pope.
 3. To seize or gain possession of before another; to buy before another in order to raise the price.
 He bold spake, Sir knight, if knight thou be,
 Abandon this forestall'd place at erst,
 For fear of further harm, I counsel thee. Fairy Queen.
FORESTALLER. n. f. [from forestall.] One that anticipates the market; one that purchases before others to raise the price.
 Commodities, good or bad, the workman must take at his master's rate, or sit still and starve; whilst, by this means, this new sort of ingrossors or forestallers having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen, set the price upon the poor landholder. Locke.
FORESTBORN. adj. [forest and born.] Born in a wild.
 This boy is forestborn,
 And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments
 Of desperate studies. Shakespeare, As you like it.
FORESTER. n. f. [forester, French, from forest.]
 1. An officer of the forest.
 Forester, my friend, where is the bush,
 That we may stand and play the murderer in?
 —Here by, upon the edge of yonder copse. Shakespeare.
 2. An inhabitant of the wild country.
FORESWAT. adj. [from fore and sweat, from sweat.] Spent FORESWART. adj. [with heat.
 Miso and Mopia, like a couple of foreswats melters, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments. Sidney, b. ii.
TO FORETASTE. v. a. [fore and taste.]
 1. To have antepast of; to have precedence of.
 2. To taste before another.
 Perhaps the fact
 Is not so heinous now, foretasted fruit,
 Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first Made common, and unhallow'd, ere our taste. Milton, P. L.
FORETASTE. n. f. Anticipation of.
 A pleasure that a man may call as properly his own as his soul and his conscience, neither liable to accident, nor exposed to injury: it is the foretaste of heaven, and the earnest of eternity. South's Sermons.
TO FORETELL. v. a. [fore and tell.]
 1. To predict; to prophesy.
 What art thou, whose heavy looks foretell
 Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue? Shakespeare, H. VI.
 I found
 The new-created world, which fame in heaven
 Long had foretold. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
 Mercia's king,
 Warn'd in a dream, his murder did foretell,
 From point to point, as after it befell. Dryden.
 When great Ulysses fought the Phrygian shores,
 Deeds then undone my faithful tongue foretold;
 Heaven said my words, and you those deeds behold. Pope.
 2. To

FOR

2. To foretoken; to foreshow.
 To FORETELL. v. n. To utter prophecy.
 All the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after,
 have likewise foretold of these days. Acts iii. 24.
 FORETELLER. n. f. [from foretell.] Predicter; forethower.
 Others are proposed, not that the foretold events should be known; but that the accomplishment that expounds them may evince, that the foreteller of them was able to foresee thee. Boyle on Calvary.
 To FORETHINK. v. a. [fore and think.] To anticipate in the mind; to have precedence of.
 The soul of every man
 Prophetically does forethink thy fall. Shaksp. Henry IV.
 I do pray to thee,
 Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom Forethought by heav'n. Shaksp. King John.
 Adam could not be ignorant of the punishments due to neglect and disobedience; and felt, by the proof thereof, in himself another terror than he had forethought, or could imagine. Raleigh's History of the World.
 Friday, the fatal day! when next it came,
 Her foul forethought the fiend would change his game. Dryd.
 To FORETHINK. v. n. To contrive beforehand.
 With this you blot my name, and clear your own;
 And what's my frenzy will be call'd my crime:
 What then is thine? Thou cool deliberate villain!
 Thou wise, forethinking, weighing politician! Smith.
 FORETHOUGHT. n. f. [from forethink.]
 1. Precedence; anticipation.
 He that is undone, is equally undone, whether it be by spitefulness of forethought, or by the folly of oversight, or evil counsel. L'Estrange.
 2. Provident care.
 To FORETOKEN. v. a. [fore and token.] To foreshow; to prognosticate as a sign.
 The king from Ireland hastes; but did no good;
 Whilft strange prodigious signs foretoken blood. Daniel.
 FORETOKEN. n. f. [from the verb.] Preventive sign; prog-nostick.
 It may prove some ominous foretoken of misfortune. Sidney.
 They milked nothing more in king Edward the Confessor, than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in of foreign powers, which indeed happened. Camden's Remains.
 FORETOOTH. n. f. [fore and tooth.] The tooth in the anterior part of the mouth; the incisor.
 The foreteeth should be formed broad, and with a thin sharp edge like chizzles. Ray on the Creation.
 FORETOP. n. f. [fore and top.] That part of a woman's headdress that is forward, or the top of a periwig.
 So may your hats your foretops never prels,
 Untouch'd your ribbons, sacred be your drefs. Dryden.
 FOREVOUCHED. part. [fore and vouch.] Affirmed before;
 formerly told.
 Sure her offence
 Must be of such unnatural degree,
 That monsters it; or your forevouch'd affection
 Fall'n into taint. Shaksp. King Lear.
 They that marched in the forehead were all mighty men. 1 Mac. ix. 11.
 To FOREWARN. v. a. [fore and warn.]
 1. To admonish beforehand.
 I will forewarn you whom you shall fear: fear him which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell. Lu. xii. 5.
 2. To inform previously of any future event.
 Divine interpreter, by favour sent Down from the empyrean, to forewarn
 Us timely of what might else have been our loss Unknown. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
 3. To caution against any thing beforehand.
 Well I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd. Shaksp. H.V.
 Thy pride,
 And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,
 Rejected my forewarning, and disdain'd
 Not to be trusted. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
 Tho' Phœbus had forewarn'd him of finging wars, yet the search of nature was free. Dryd. Virg. Dedic. to Ld. Clifford.
 Young Chæreus, who by love was led
 To win renown and fair Cassandra's bed,
 Had lately brought his troops to Priam's aid;
 Forewarn'd in vain by the prophetic maid. Dryden's Æn.
 To FOREWASTE. v. a. [fore and waste.] To deloliate; to destroy. Out of use.
 Vespasian, with great spoil and rage,
 Forewasted all, until Gemissa gent
 Persuaded him to cease. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
 High time 'gan it wax for Una fair,
 To think of those her captive parents dear,
 And their forewasted kingdom to repair. Fairy Queen, b. i.

FOR

- To FOREWISSE. part. [fore and wissh.] To desire beforehand.
 The wiser sort ceased not to do what in them lay, to procure that the good commonly forewissh'd might in time come to effect. Knolly's History of the Turks.
 FOREWORN. part. [fore and worn, from wear.] Worn out;
 wasted by time or use.
 Neither the light was enough to read the words, and the ink was already foreworn, and in many places blotted. Sidney.
 FOREFEIT. n. f. [forfeits, French; fforfeid, Welch.]
 1. Something lost by the commission of a crime; something paid for expiation of a crime; a fine; a mulct.
 Thy handers I forgive, and therewithal
 Remit thy other forfeits. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.
 Th' execution leave to high dispatch,
 And let another hand, not thine, exact
 Thy penal forfeit from thyself. Milton's Agonistes, l. 506.
 Thy life, Melantius! I am come to take,
 Of which foul treason does a forfeit make. Wallor.
 2. A person obnoxious to punishment; one whose life is forfeited by his offence. Now obsolete.
 Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
 And you but waste your words. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.
 Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo, who hath sentenced him. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.
 To FORFEIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To lose by some breach of condition; to lose by some offence.
 If then a man, on light conditions, gain
 A great estate to him, and his, for ever;
 If wilfully he forfeit it again,
 Who doth deman his heir, or blame the giver? Daniel.
 Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness. Engl.
 A father cannot alien the power he has over his child: he may perhaps to some degrees forfeit it, but cannot transfer it. Locke.
 FORFEIT. participle adj. [from the verb.] Liable to penal seizure; alienated by a crime; lost either as to the right or possession, by breach of conditions.
 All the souls that are, were forfeit once;
 And he that might the 'vantage best have took,
 Found out the remedy. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.
 Beg that thou may'st have leave to hang thyself;
 And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,
 Thou hast not left the value of a cord. Shaksp. Ham.
 This now fenceless world,
 Forfeit to death. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 303.
 Straight all his hopes exhal'd in empty smoke,
 And his long toils were forfeit for a look. Dryd. Virg. Ger.
 Methought with wondrous ease he swallow'd down
 His forfeit honour, to betray the town. Dryd. Indian Emp.
 How the murder paid his forfeit breath;
 What lands so distant from that scene of death.
 But trembling heard the fame! Pope's Odyssey, b. iii.
 FORFEITABLE. adj. [from forfeit.] Possessed on conditions, by the breach of which any thing may be lost.
 FORFEITURE. n. f. [forfeiture, French, from forfeit.]
 1. The act of forfeiting; the punishment discharged by loss of something possessed.
 2. The thing forfeited; a mulct; a fine.
 The court is as well a Chancery to save and debate for- feitures, as a court of common law to decide rights; and there would be work enough in Germany and Italy, if Imperial forfeitures should go for good titles. Eaton's War with Spain.
 Ancient privileges and acts of grace indulged by former kings, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors; nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously. Taylor's Rule of Living holy.
 He fairly abdicates his throne,
 He has a forfeiture incur'd. Swift.
 To FORFEIND. v. a. To prevent; to forbid.
 To FORGIVE. The preterite of forgive.
 FORGE. n. f. [forge, French.]
 1. The place where iron is beaten into form. In common language we use forge for large works, and smithy for small; but in books the distinction is not kept.
 Now behold,
 In the quick forge and working-house of thought,
 How London doth pour out her citizens. Shaksp. Henry V.
 In other part stood one, who at the forge
 Labouring, two maffy clods of iron and brass
 Had melted. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
 Th' o'er-labour'd Cyclop from his task retires,
 Th' Æolian forge exhausted of its fires. Pope's Statius.
 2. Any place where any thing is made or shaped.
 From no other forge hath proceeded a strange conceit, that to serve God with any set form of common prayer is superstitious. Hobbes, b. vi. f. 26.
 To FORGE. v. a. [forger, old French.]
 1. To form by the hammer; to beat into shape.
 The queen of martials,
 And

FOR

- And Mars himself conducted them; both which being forg'd of gold,
 Must needs have golden furniture. Chapman's Iliad, b. xviii.
 Tiger with tiger, bear with bear you'll find
 In leagues offensive and defensive join'd;
 But lawless man the anvil dares profane,
 And forge that steel by which a man is slain,
 Which earth at first for plough-shares did afford,
 Nor yet the smith had learn'd to form a sword. Tate's Jew.
 2. To make by any means.
 He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
 'Till he had forg'd himself a name i' th' fire
 Of burning Rome. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 His heart's his mouth:
 What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent. Shaksp.
 Those few names that the schools forged, and put into the mouths of their scholars, could never yet get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of publick approbation. Locke.
 3. To counterfeit; to falsify.
 Were I king,
 I should cut off the nobles for their lands:
 My more having would be as sauce
 To make me hunger more, that I should forge
 Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
 Destroying them for wealth. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 FORGER. n. f. [from forge.]
 1. One who makes or forms.
 2. One who counterfeits any thing; a falsifier.
 As in stealing, if there were no receivers there would be no thieves; so in slander, if there were fewer spreaders there would be fewer forgers of libels. Government of the Tongue.
 No forger of lyes willingly and wittingly furnishes out the means of his own detection. West on the Reformation.
 FORGERY. n. f. [from forge.] The crime of falsification.
 Has your king married the lady Gray?
 And now, to sooth your forger and his,
 Sends me a paper to persuade me patience. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
 Nothing could have been easier than for the Jews, the enemies of Jesus Christ, to have disprov'd these facts, had they been false, to have shewn their falshood, and to have convicted them of forger. Stephens's Sermons.
 A forger, in setting a false name to a writing, which may prejudice another's fortune, the law punishes with the loss of ears; but has inflicted no adequate penalty for doing the same thing in print, though books sold under a false name are so many forgeries. Swift.
 2. Smith's work; fabrication; the act of the forge.
 He ran on embattl'd armies clad in iron,
 And weaponless himself,
 Made arms ridiculous, useless the forger
 Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,
 Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail
 Adamantine proof. Milton's Agonistes, l. 129.
 To FORGET. v. a. pret. forgot; part. forgotten, or forget.
 [forghyan, Saxon; vergeten, Dutch.]
 1. To lose memory of; to let go from the remembrance.
 That is not forgot
 Which ne'er I did remember; to my knowledge,
 I never in my life did look on him. Shaksp. Richard II.
 When I am forgotten, as I shall be,
 And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
 Of me must more be heard. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
 Oh, my oblivion is a very Anthony,
 And I am all forgotten. Shaksp. Anthony and Cleopatra.
 Forget not thy friend in thy mind, and be not unmindful of him in thy riches. Ecclus. xxxvii. 6.
 No sooner was our deliverance compleated, but we forgot our danger and our duty. Atterbury's Sermons.
 Alive, ridiculous; and dead, forgot. Pope.
 2. Not to attend; to neglect.
 Can a woman forget her sucking child? Yea, they may for- get; yet will not forget thee. Isa. xlix. 5.
 The mass of mean forgotten things.
 FORGETFUL. adj. [from forget.]
 1. Not retaining the memory of.
 2. Causing oblivion; oblivious.
 But when a thousand rolling years are past,
 So long their punishments and penance last,
 Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
 Compell'd to drink the deep Lethean flood,
 In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares
 Of their past labours, and their irksome years. Dryd. Æn.
 3. Inattentive; negligent; neglectful; careless.
 Be not forgetful to entertain strangers. Hebr. xiii. 2.
 In our long absence.
 Have you not love enough to bear with me,
 When that rash humour, which my mother gave me,
 Makes me forgetful? Shaksp. Julius Cæsar.

FOR

- I, in fact, a real interest have,
 Which to my own advantage I would save;
 And, with the usual courtier's trick, intend
 To serve myself, forgetful of my friend. Prior.
 FORGETFULNESS. n. f. [from forgetful.]
 1. Oblivion; cessation to remember; loss of memory.
 O gentle sleep!
 Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
 That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,
 And steep my senses in forgetfulness? Shaksp. Henry IV.
 All birds and beasts lie hush'd; sleep steals away
 The wild desires of men and tools of day;
 And brings, descending through the silent air,
 A sweet forgetfulness of human care. Pope's Statius.
 2. Negligence; neglect; inattention.
 The church of England is grievously charged with forgetful- ness of her duty. Hobbes, b. iv. f. 13.
 FORGETTER. n. f. [from forget.]
 1. One that forgets.
 2. A careless person.
 To FORGIVE. v. a. [forghyan, Saxon.]
 1. To pardon a person; not to punish.
 Then heaven forgive him too! Shaksp. Macbeth.
 I do beseech your grace for charity;
 If ever any malice in your heart
 Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.
 —Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you,
 As I would be forgiven: I forgive all. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
 Slowly provok'd, the easily forgives. Prior.
 2. To pardon a crime.
 The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity. Is. xxxiii. 24.
 3. To remit; not to exact debt or penalty.
 The lord of that servant was moved with compassion, loosed him, and forgave him the debt. Mat. xviii. 27.
 FORGIVENESS. n. f. [forghennysse, Saxon.]
 1. The act of forgiving.
 To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses. Dan.
 2. Pardon of an offender.
 Thou hast promised repentance and forgiveness to them that have sinned against thee. Prayer of Manasse.
 Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet;
 Mine and my father's death come not on thee,
 Nor thine on me. Shaksp. Hamlet.
Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong;
 But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong. Dryden.
 3. Pardon of an offence.
 God has certainly promised forgiveness of sin to every one who repents. Smith's Sermons.
 4. Tenderness; willingness to pardon.
 Here are introduced more heroic principles of meekness, forgiveness, bounty and magnanimity, than all the learning of the heathens could invent. Spratt's Sermons.
 Mercy above did hourly plead
 For her resemblance here below;
 And mild forgiveness intercede
 To stop the coming blow. Dryden.
 5. Remission of a fine or penalty.
 FORGIVER. n. f. [from forgive.] One who pardons.
 FORGOTTEN. part. pass. of forget. Not remembered.

The corn beginneth to fork. Mortimer's Husbandry.
FORKED, adj. [from fork.] Opening into two or more parts.
 When he was naked he was, for all the world, like a forked radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife.

Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
 Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish,
 A forked mountain, or blue promontory. Shakespeare.
 Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
 And yet it irks me the poor dappled fools
 Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,
 Have their round haunches goar'd. Shakespeare. As you like it.

He would have spoke;
 But his for his return'd, with forked tongue
 To forked tongue. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
 Ye dragons, whose contagious breath
 Peopled the dark retreats of death,
 Change your fierce hissing into joyful fong,
 And praise your maker with your forked tongue. Rowlandson.
FORKEDLY, adv. [from forked.] In a forked form.

FORKEDNESS, n. f. [from forked.] The quality of opening into two parts.
FORKHEAD, n. f. [from fork and head.] Point of an arrow.
 It seizing, no way enter might;
 But back rebounding, left the forkhead keen,
 Etfoons it fled away, and might no where be seen. Fa. Qu.

FORKY, adj. [from fork.] Forked; furcated; opening into two parts.
 The smiling infant in his hand shall take
 The crested basilisk and speckled snake;
 Pleas'd the green lustre of the scales survey,
 And with their forky tongue and pointlets sting shall play.

Pope's Messiah.
FORLORE, [The praterite and participle of the Saxon forleornan, in Dutch verloren.] Deserted; forlook; forsaken.

Such as Diana by the fandy shore
 Of swift Eurotas, or on Cynthus' green,
 Where all the nymphs have her forlore. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
 That wretched world he 'gan for to abhor,
 And mortal life 'gan loath, as thing forlore. Fairy Queen.
 Thus fell the trees, with noise the deserts roar;
 The heads their caves, the birds their nests forlore. Fairy.

FORLOREN, adj. [from forlore, from forleornan, Saxon; verloren, Dutch.]
 1. Deserted; destitute; forsaken; wretched; helpless; solitary.

Make them seek for that they want to scorn;
 Of fortune and of hope at once forloren. Hubbard's Tale.
 Tell me, good Hobinot, what gars thee greet?
 What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs yorn?
 Or is thy baggage broke, that sounds so sweet?
 Or art thou of thy loved lass forloren? Spenser's Pastoral.
 In every place was heard the lamentation of women and children; every thing shewed the heaviness of the time, and seemed as altogether lost and forloren. Kneller's History.
 How can I live without thee! how forego
 Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,
 To live again in these wild woods forloren! Milt. Par. Lost.

Their way
 Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear wood;
 The nodding horror of whose shady brows,
 Threats the forloren and wand'ring passenger. Milton.
 My only strength and stay! forloren of thee,
 Whither shall I betake me, where subsist! Milt. Par. Lost.
 Like a declining statesman, left forloren
 To his friends pity and pursuers scorn. Denham.
 The good old man, forloren of human aid,
 For vengeance to his heav'nly patron pray'd. Dryd. Iliad.

to happiness; even whilst they completed the forlorenness of their condition by the lethargy of not being sensible of it. Boyle.
FORLYE, v. n. [from for and lye.] To lye across.

Knit with a golden baldric, which forlye
 Athwart her snowy breast, and did divide
 Her dainty paps, which, like young fruit in May,
 Now little 'gan to swell; and being ty'd,
 Through her thin weed, their places only signify'd. Fa. Qu.
FORM, n. f. [from forma, Latin; forme, French.]
 1. The external appearance of any thing; representation; shape.

Nay, women are frail too.
 —Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,
 Which are as easy broke as they make forms. Shakespeare.
 It stood still; but I could not discern the form thereof. Job.
 Gold will endure a vehement fire, without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts; yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its form. Grew's Cosmol. Sac. b. i.

Matter, as wife logicians say,
 Cannot without a form subsist;
 And form, say I as well as they,
 Mult fail, if matter brings no gift. Swift.

2. Being, as modified by a particular shape.
 When noble benefits shall prove
 Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
 They turn to vicious forms; ten times more ugly
 Than ever they were fair. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Here toils and death, and death's half-brother, sleep,
 Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep;
 With anxious pleasures of a guilty mind,
 Deep frauds before, and open force behind. Dryden's En.

3. Particular model or modification.
 He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there perhaps as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism, nor can reduce any one argument to those forms. Locke.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words that are uttered in the ordinary method of religious worship. Adams.

4. Beauty; elegance of appearance.
 He hath no form nor comeliness. Isa. liii. 2.

5. Regularity; method; order.
 What he spoke, though it lack'd form a little,
 Was not like madness. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

6. External appearance without the essential qualities; empty show.
 Then those whom form of laws
 Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.
 They were young heirs sent only for form from schools, where they were not suffered to stay three months in the year. Swift's Essay on Modern Education.

7. Ceremony; external rites.
 Though well we may not pass upon his life,
 Without the form of justice; yet our pow'r
 Shall do a court'ry to our wrath, which men
 May blame, but not controul. Shakespeare's King Lear.

A long table, and a square table, or seat about the walls, seem things of form, but are things of substance; for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, sway all the business; but in the other form, there is more use of the council's opinions than that of lower. Bacon's Essay 2. i.

That the parliaments of Ireland might want no decent or honourable form used in England, he caused a particular act to pass that the lords of Ireland should appear in parliament robes. Davies in Ireland.

Their general use, in all dispatches made by himself, to observe all decency in their form. Clarendon, b. viii.

How am I to interpret, sir, this visit?
 Is it a compliment of form, or love? A. Phil. Dis. Mat.

8. Stated method; established practice.
 He who affirmeth speech to be necessary amongst all men, throughout the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even so the necessity of polity and regimen in all churches may be held, without holding any one certain form to be necessary in them all. Hapker, b. iii. f. 2.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flatter and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

Nor seek to know
 Their process, or the forms of law below. Dryden's En.

9. A long seat.
 If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back; and a form is a seat for several persons, without a back. Watts's Logic.

I was seen with her in the manorhouse, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park. Shakespeare.
 10. A class; a rank of students.
 It will be necessary to see and examine those works which have

FOR

have given so great a reputation to the masters of the first form. Dryden's Dufrenoy.

11. The seat or bed of a hare.
 Now for a clod-like hare in form they peer;
 Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move;
 Now the ambitious lark, with mirror clear,
 They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love. Siden.
 Have you observ'd a fitting hare,
 Lift'ning, and fearful of the storm
 Of horns and hounds, clap back her ear,
 Afraid to keep or leave her form. Prior.

12. Form is the essential, specific, or distinguishing modification of the matter of which any thing is composed, so as thereby to give it such a peculiar manner of existence. Harris.
 In definitions, whether they be framed larger to augment, or stricter to abridge the number of sacraments, we find grace expressly mentioned as their true essential form, and elements as the matter whereunto that form doth adjoin itself. Hooker.

They inferred, if the world were a living creature, it had a soul and spirit, by which they did not intend God, for they did admit of a deity besides, but only the soul or essential form of the universe. Bacon's Natural History.

13. A formal cause; that which gives essence.
 To FORM v. a. [from forma, Latin.]
 1. To make out of materials. Gen. ii. 7.
 God form'd man of the dust of the ground. Pope.
 She form'd the phantom of well-bodied air.

2. To model to a particular shape.
 3. To modify; to scheme; to plan.
 Lucretius taught him not to form his heroes, to give him piety or valour for his manners. Dryden's En. Dedica.

4. To arrange; to combine in any particular manner: as, he form'd his troops.
 5. To adjust; to settle.
 Our differences with the Romanists are thus form'd into an interest, and become the design not of single persons, but of corporations and successions. Decay of Piety.

6. To contrive; to coin.
 The defeat of the design is the routing of opinions form'd for promoting it. Decay of Piety.

He dies too soon;
 And fate, if possible, must be delay'd:
 The thought that labours in my forming brain,
 Yet crude and immature, demands more time. Rowe.

7. To model by education or institution.
 Let him to this with easy pains be brought,
 And seem to labour when he labours not:
 Thus form'd for speed, he challenges the wind,
 And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind. Dryd. Virg. Gen.

FORMAL, adj. [from forma, French; formalis, Latin.]
 1. Ceremonious; solemn; precise; exact to affectation:
 The justice,
 In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
 With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
 Full of wise saws and modern instances,
 And so he plays his part. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Formal in apparel,
 In gait and countenance surely like a father. Shakespeare.
 Ceremonies especially be not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures; but the exalting them above the mean is not only tedious, but doth diminish the credit of him that speaks. Bacon's Essay 53.

2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden; not extemporaneous.
 There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in customs it cometh to pass, but the same may be taken away, if occasion serve. Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.

As there are formal and written leagues, respective to certain enemies; so there is a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men against the common enemy of human society, so as there needs no intimation or denunciation of the war; but all these formalities the law of nature supplies, as in the case of pyrates. Bacon's Holy War.

3. Regular; methodical.
 The formal stars do travel so,
 As we their names and courses know;
 And he that on their changes looks,
 Would think them govern'd by our books. Waller.

4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.
 Of formal duty, make no more thy boast;
 Thou disobey'st where it concerns me most. Dryd. Aureng.

5. Depending upon establishment or custom.
 Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
 Or bound in formal or in real chains. Pope.

6. Having the power of making any thing what it is; constitutive; essential.
 Of letters the material part is breath and voice: the formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is discriminated. Holder's Elements of Speech.

FOR

Bellarmino agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superior; but withal he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it: whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only estimation. Stillington.

The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God. Bentl.

7. Retaining its proper and essential characteristick.
 Thou shouldest come like a fury cover'd with snakes,
 Not like a formal man. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
 I will not let him stir,
 'Till I have us'd th' approved means I have;
 With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
 To make of him a formal man again. Shakespeare. Com. of Err.

FORMALIST, n. f. [from formaliste, French, from forma.] One who practises external ceremony; one who prizes appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not.

It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satyr to persons of judgement, to see what shifts formalists have, and what prospectives to make superficies to seem a body that hath depth and bulk. Bacon's Essay 27.

A grave, stanch, skilfully managed face, set upon a grasping aspiring mind, having got many a fly formalist the reputation of a primitive and severe piety. South's Sermons.

FORMALITY, n. f. [from formalite, French, from forma.]
 1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.
 The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as for comeliness sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary. Hooker, b. v. f. 29.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate designs. King Charles.
 Many a worthy man sacrifices his peace to formalities of compliment and good manners. L'Estrange, Table 184.

Nor was his attendance on divine offices a matter of formality and custom; but of conscience. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. Solemn order, habit, or dress.
 If men forewent the deeds and bonds they draw,
 Though sign'd with all formality of law;
 And though the signing and the seal proclaim
 The barefaced perjury, and fix the shame. Dryden's Juven.

The pretender would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all fat down in their formalities, as the Gauls did the Roman senators. Swift.

3. Essence; the quality by which any thing is what it is.
 To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the imposture of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity. Glavin's Scpt. c. 13.

May not a man vow to A. and B. that he will give a hundred pound to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A. and B. But here A. and B. are only witnesses to the vow; but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God. Stillington's Def. of Diss. on Rom. Idol.

FORMALIZE, v. a. [from formalizer, French, from formal.]
 1. To model; to modify. A word not now in use.
 The same spirit which anointed the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, doth so formalize, unite, and actuate his whole race, as if both he and they were so many limbs compacted into one body. Hooker, b. v. f. 56.

2. To affect formality; to be fond of ceremony.
FORMALLY, adv. [from formal.]
 1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies or rites.

Formally, according to our law, Shakespeare's Richard II.
 Depose him.
 2. Ceremoniously; stily; precisely.
 To be stiff and formally reserved, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of homage. Collier on Eride.

3. In open appearance; with visible and apparent show.
 You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorized guides of the church, and the rest of the people. Hooker.

4. Essentially; characteristically.
 This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the image of God, but only a part of it. South's Sermons.
 The Heathens and the Christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a Christian grace, is the spring from which it flows. Smalbridge's Sermons.

FORMATION, n. f. [from formation, French, from forma, Latin.]
 1. The act of forming or generating.
 The matter discharged forth of vulcano's, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of meteors. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a fetus. Arbutn.
 Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, give not the same confusion, as if they were all offered to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. The manner in which a thing is formed.
 The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth tear asunder. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FOR

FORMATIVE. adj. [from forma, Latin.] Having the power of giving form; plastic.

As we have established our assertion of the femal production of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the meanest plant cannot be raised without seed, by any formative power residing in the soil. Bentley's Sermons.

FORMER. n. f. [from form.] He that forms; maker; contriver; planter.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the formation of several parts for several uses. Ray on the Creation.

FORMER. adj. [from forma, Saxon, first; whence former, and formest now commonly written foremost, as if derived from before. Formest is generally applied to place, rank, or degree, and former only to time; for when we say, the last rank of the procession is like the former, we respect time rather than place, and mean that which we saw before, rather than that which had precedence in place.]

1. Before another in time.
Thy air,
Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first:
—A third is like the former. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Mentioned before another.
A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic: a man may be the former merely through the misfortune of an ill judgment; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper. Pope.

3. Past: as, this was the custom in former times.

FORMERLY. adv. [from former.] In times past.
The places mentioned were all of them formerly the cool retreats of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their Summer. Addison on Italy.

As an animal degenerates by diseases, the animal falls, formerly benign, approach towards an alkaline nature. Artusmet.

FORMIDABLE. adj. [from formidabilis, Latin; formidabile, Fr.] Terrible; dreadful; tremendous; terrific; to be feared.

I swell my preface into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see so many pages behind. Dryden's An. Dedicat.

They seem'd to fear the formidable sight,
And roll'd their billows on, to speed his flight. Dryden.

FORMIDABLENESS. n. f. [from formidable.]

1. The quality of exciting terror or dread.

2. The thing causing dread.

They rather chuse to be shew'd the formidableness of their danger, than, by a blind embracing it, to perish in it. Decay of Piety.

FORMIDABLY. adv. [from formidable.] In a terrible manner.

Behold! e'en to remoter shores,
A conquering navy proudly spread;
The British cannon formidably roars. Dryden.

FORMLESS. adj. [from form.] Shapeless; without regularity of form.

All form is formless, order orderless.

Save what is opposite to England's love. Shakespeare, K. John.

FORMULARY. n. f. [from formulaire, French, from formula.] A book containing fixed and prescribed models or set forms.

FORMULE. n. f. [from formula, French; formula, Latin.] A set or prescribed model.

TO FORNICATION. v. a. [from fornix, Latin.] To commit lewdness.

It is a new way to fornicate at a distance. Brown's Vul. Err.

FORNICATION. n. f. [from fornication, French; fornicatio, Latin.]

1. Concubinage or commerce with an unmarried woman.

Bless me! what a fry of fornication is at the door. Shakespeare.

The law ought to be strict against fornications and adulteries; for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind would be but like that of foxes at best. Graunt.

2. In Scripture, sometimes idolatry.

Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot, because of thy renown, and pouredst out thy fornications, on every one that passed by. Ezek. xvi. 15.

FORNICATOR. n. f. [from fornicateur, French, from fornix, Latin.] One that has commerce with unmarried women.

A fornicator or adulterer steals the soul as well as dishonours the body of his neighbour. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

FORNICATRESS. n. f. [from fornicator.] A woman who without marriage cohabits with a man.

See you the fornicatress be remov'd?

Let her have needful but not slavish means. Shakespeare.

TO FORSAKE. v. a. preter. forsook; part. pass. forsoke, or forsoaken. [from forsaken, Dutch.]

1. To leave in resentment, neglect, or dislike.

I was now the time when first Saul God forsook, God Saul; the room in's heart wild passions took. Cowley.

Orestes comes in time

To save your honour: Pyrrhus cools apace;
Prevent his falsehood, and forsoke him first:

I know you hate him. A. Phillips's Discreet Mother.

Daughter of Jove! whose arms in thunder wield
Th' avenging bolts, and shake the dreadful shield,

FOR

Forsook by thee, in vain I sought thy aid. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To leave; to go away from; to depart from.

Unwilling I forsook my friendly state,
Commanded by the gods, and forc'd by fate. Dryden's Æn.

3. To desert; to fail.

Truth, modesty, and shame the world forsook;
Fraud, avarice, and force their places took. Dryden's Æn.

When ev'n the flying sails were seen no more,

Their purple majesty,
And all those outward shows which we call greatness,
Languish and droop, seem empty and forsoaken,
And draw the wond'ring gazers eyes no more. Rever.

FORSAKER. n. f. [from forsoke.] Delinquent; one that forsakes.

Thou didst deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies,
Most hateful forsoakers of God. Apostrophe.

FORSOOT. adv. [from forsook, Saxon.]

1. In truth; certainly; very well. It is used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore doth Lyfander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, forsooth, affection? Shakespeare.

A fit man, forsooth, to govern a realm, who had so goodly government in his own estate. Hayward.

Unlearned persons use such letters as justify express the power or found of their speech; yet forsooth, we say, write not true English, or true French. Holder's Elem. of Speech.

In the East Indies a widow, who has any regard to her character, throws herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew, forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord. Addison's Freeholder.

She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck a pin wrong in her gown. Arcturion. Hist. of J. Bull.

Some question the genuineness of his books, because, forsooth, they cannot discover in them that franken orationis that Cicero speaks of. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

2. It is supposed to have been once a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an inferior, being called, shew'd his attention by answering in the word yes, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamatory interjection, was supposed a compellation. It appears in Shakespeare to have been used likewise to men.

Our old English word forsooth has been changed for the French madam. Guardian.

TO FORSWEAR. v. a. pret. forsovere; part. forsover. [from forswajan, Saxon.]

1. To renounce upon oath.

I firmly vow
Never to wooe her more; but do forsovere her,
As one unworthy all the former favours,
That I have fondly flatter'd her withal. Shakespeare.

2. To deny upon oath.

And that self chain about his neck,
Which he forsovere most mistrustfully to have. Shakespeare.

Observe the wretch who hath his faith forsook,
How clear his voice, and how assur'd his look!
Like innocence, and as serenely bold
As truth, how loudly he forsovere thy gold! Dryden's Juven.

3. With the reciprocal pronoun: as, to forsovere himself; to be perjured; to swear falsely.

To leave my Julia, shall I be forsover?
To love fair Silvia, shall I be forsover?
To wrong my friend, shall I be much forsover?
And ev'n that power which gave me first my oath,
Provokes me to this threefold perjury. Shakespeare.

One says, he never should endure the sight
Of that forsover, that wrongs both land and laws. Daniel.

I too have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn,
Eternal love and endless faith to Thebes;
And yet am false, forsover: the hollow'd shrine,
That heard me swear, is witness to my falsehood. Smith.

TO FORSWEAR. v. n. To swear falsely; to commit perjury.

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.
—And that same vengeance doth hurl on thee,
For false forsoverings, and for murder too. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

FORSWEARER. n. f. [from forsovere.] One who is perjured.

FORT. n. f. [from fort, French.] A fortified house; a castle.

They erected a fort, which they called the fort de l'or; and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest. Bacon.

Now to their fort they are about to send
For the loud engines which their life defend. Waller.

He that views a fort to take it,
Plants his artillery 'gainst the weakest part. Denham's Sephyr.

My fury does, like jealous forts, pursue
With death, ev'n strangers who but come to view. Dryden.

FORTE. adj. [from fort.] Furnished or guarded by forts.

Not used now.

Your

FOR

Your desert speaks loud, and I should wrong
To lock it in the wards of covert bosom,
When it deserves with characters of brass
A forted residence, 'gainst the tooth of time
And rature of oblivion. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

FORTH. adv. [from for, Saxon; whence further and furthest.]

1. Forward; onward in time.

From that day forth I lov'd that face divine;
From that day forth I cast in careful mind
To seek her out. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 9.

2. Forward in place or order.

Look at the second admonition, and so forth, where they speak in most unchristian manner. Whitgift.

Mad Pandarus steps forth, with vengeance vow'd
For Bitas' death. Dryden's Æn.

Uncle, I must come forth. Shakespeare's Othello.

I have no mind of feasting forth to-night. Shakespeare.

Attend you here the door of our stern daughter?
Will she not forth? Shakespeare.

When Winter past, and Summer scarce begun,
Invites them forth to labour in the sun. Dryden's Virg. Æn.

4. Out away; beyond the boundary of any place.

They will privily relieve their friends that are forth; they will send the enemy secret advertisements; and they will not also flick to draw the enemy privily upon them. Spenser.

Even that sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,
That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France. Shakespeare.

5. Out into publick state; publick view.

You may let forth the fame with farmhouses. Peacham.

But when your troubled country call'd you forth,
Your flaming courage, and your matchless worth,
To fierce contention gave a propitious end. Waller.

6. Thoroughly; from beginning to end.

You, cousin,
Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do with your injuries as seems you best. Shakespeare.

7. To a certain degree.

Hence we learn, how far forth we may expect justification and salvation from the sufferings of Christ; no further than we are wrought on by his renewing grace. Hannand.

8. On to the end.

I repeated the Ave Maria: the inquisitor had me say forth;
I said I was taught no more. Memoir in S. rype.

FORTH. prep. Out of.

And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret. Shakespeare.

Some forth their cabbins peep,
And trembling ask what news, and do hear so
As jealous husbands, what they would not know. Donne.

FORTHCOMING. adv. [from forth and coming.] Ready to appear; not absconding; not lost.

Carry this mad knave to jail: I charge you see that he be forthcoming. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

FORTHISSUING. adj. [from forth and issuing.] Coming out; coming forward from a covert.

Forthissuing thus, she gave him first to wield
A weighty axe, with truest temper steel'd,
And double edg'd. Pope's Odyssey, b. v.

FORTHRIGHT. adv. [from forth and right.] Strait forward; without flexions.

He ever going to just with the horse, either forthright or turning, that it seem'd as he borrowed the horse's body, so he lent the horse his mind. Sidney, b. ii.

The river not running forthright, but almost continually winding, as if the lower streams would return to their spring, or that the river had a delight to play with itself. Sidney, b. ii.

Arrived there, they pass'd in forthright;
For still to all the gate stood open wide. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Here's a maze trod, indeed,
Through forthrights and meanders. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Thither forthright he rode to rout the prey,
That shaded by the fern in harbour lay,
And thence dilodge'd. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

TO HURL UPON. adv. [from forth and with.] Immediately; without delay; at once; straight.

Forthwith he runs, with feigned faithful haste,
Unto his guest; who, after troublous fights
And dreams, 'gan now to take more found repast. Fa. Qu.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate. Hobbes, b. v. f. 42.

Neither did the martial men dally or prosecute the service faintly, but did forthwith quench that fire. Davies on Ireland.

Forthwith began these fury-moving sounds,
The notes of wrath, the music brought from hell,
The rattling drums. Daniel's Civil War.

The winged heralds, by command
Of sovereign power, throughout the host proclaim
A solemn council forthwith to be held At Pandemonium. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

FOR

In his passage thither one put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy, desiring him to read it forthwith, and to remember the giver of it as long as he lived. South's Sermons.

FORTHWITH. adv. [from forth.] The fourth tenth; next after the thirty-ninth.

What doth it avail
To be the fortieth man in an entail? Donne.

Burnet says, Scotland is not above a fortieth part in value to the rest of Britain; and, with respect to the profit that England gains from hence, not the forty thousandth part. Swift.

FORTIFIABLE. adj. [from fortify.] What may be fortified.

FORTIFICATION. n. f. [from fortification, French, from fortify.]

1. The science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art shewing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, moats, and other bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without; so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss. It is either regular or irregular; and, with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary. Harris.

The Phœcians, tho' an unwelcome nation, yet understood the art of fortification. Notes on the Odyssey.

2. A place built for strength.

Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortifications being then delivered to their memory, which, after stronger judgments, might dispense some advantage. Sidney, b. ii.

FORTIFIER. n. f. [from fortify.]

1. One who erects works for defence.

The fortifier of Pendennis made his advantage of the commodity afforded by the ground. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

2. One who supports or secures; one who upholds.

He was led forth by many armed men, who often had been the fortifiers of wickedness, to the place of execution. Sidney.

TO FORTIFY. v. a. [from fortify, French.]

1. To strengthen against attacks by walls or works.

Great Dunlunne he strongly fortifies. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

He fortified the city against besieging. Exclus. l. 4.

2. To confirm; to encourage.

It greatly fortified her desires, to see that her mother had the like desires. Sidney, b. ii.

3. To fix; to establish in resolution.

But in-born worth that fortune can controul,
New-strung and stiffer bent her softer soul:
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.

A young man, before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to secure his virtues. Locke.

FORTILAGE. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort; a blockhouse.

In all straits and narrow passages there should be some little fortilage, or wooden castle set, which should keep and command the freight. Spenser on Ireland.

FORTIN. n. f. [French.] A little fort raised to defend a camp, particularly in a siege. Hannar.

Thou hast talk'd
Of palisades, fortins, parapets. Shakespeare, Henry IV. p. i.

FORTITUDE. n. f. [from fortitudo, Latin.]

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The better fortitude
Unfused. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady to his duty, and fill up the character of a truly worthy man. Locke.

2. Strength; force. Not in use.

He wrongs his fame,
Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of hell! Shakespeare, H. VI.

FORTLET. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort.

FORTNIGHT. n. f. [contracted from fourteen nights, proper nouns, Saxon. It was the custom of the ancient northern nations to count time by nights: thus we say, this day seven-nights. So Tacitus, Non dierum numerum ut nos, sed noctium computant.] The space of two weeks.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney, b. ii.

Hanging in a deep well, somewhat above the water, for some fortnights space, is an excellent means of making drink fresh and quick. Bacon's Natural History.

About a fortnight before I had finished it, his majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience came abroad. Dryden.

FOR

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-ran all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses. Spenser on Ireland.
The trump of death sounds in their hearing thrill;
Their weapon, faith; their fortress was the grave. Fairfax.
God is our fortress, in whose conqu'ring name
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks. Shak. Hen. VI.
There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round about with legions of obscure and undefined words; which yet makes these retreats more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.

FORTUITOUS. adj. [fortuitus, French; fortuitus, Lat.] Accidental; casual; happening by chance.
A wonder then it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concurrence of atoms.
Ray on the Creation.

If casual concurrence did the world compose,
And things and acts fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring. Blackmore.
FORTUITOUSLY. adv. [from fortuitous.] Accidentally; casual-ly; by chance.

It is partly evaporated into air, and partly diluted into wa-ter, and fortuitously shared between all the elements. Rogers.
FORTUITOUSNESS. n. f. [from fortuitous.] Accident; chance; hit.

FORTUNATE. adj. [fortunatus, Latin.] Lucky; happy; successful; not subject to misfortune. Used of persons or actions.

I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you:
you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He sigh'd; and could not but their fate deplore,
So wretched now, so fortunate before. Dryd. Knight's Tale.

No, there is a necessity in fate
Why still the brave bold man is fortunate:
He keeps his object ever full in sight,
And that assurance holds him firm and right:

True, 'tis a narrow path that leads to bliss,
But right before there is no precipice;
Fear makes men look aside, and so their footing mis. Dry.

FORTUNATELY. adv. [from fortunate.] Happily; success-fully.

Bright Eliza rul'd Britannia's state,
And boldly wife, and fortunately great. Prior.
FORTUNATENESS. n. f. [from fortunate.] Happiness; good luck; success.

O me, said she, whose greatest fortunateness is more unfor-tunate than my sister's greatest unfortunateness. Sidney, b. ii.
FORTUNE. n. f. [fortuna, Latin; fortune, French.]

1. The power supposed to distribute the lots of life according to her own humour.

Fortune, that arrogant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to th' poor. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel. Shak. H. VI.

2. The good or ill that befalls man.

Rejoice, said he, to-day;
In you the fortune of Great Britain lies:
Whom heav'n has chose to fight for such a prize. Dryden.

The adequate meaning of chance, as distinguished from fortune, in that the latter is understood to befall only rational agents, but chance to be among inanimate bodies. Bentley.

3. The chance of life; means of living.

His father dying, he was driven to London to seek his fortune. Swift.

4. Event; success good or bad.

This terrestrial globe has been surrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators. Temple.

No, he shall eat, and die with me, or live;
Our equal crimes shall equal fortune give. Dryd. Innocence.

5. Estate; possessions.

If thou do'st
As this instructs thee, thou do'st make thy way
To noble fortunes. Shakespeare's King Lear.

That cyclops head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortune. Shakespeare's King Lear.

But tell me, Tytus, what heav'nly power
Preserv'd your fortune in that fatal hour? Dryd. Virg. Post.

The fate which governs poets, thought it fit
He should not raise his fortune by his wit. Dryden.

He was younger son to a gentleman of a good birth, but small fortune. Swift.

6. The portion of a man or woman: generally of a woman.

I am thought some heirs rich in lands,
Fled to escape a cruel guardian's hands;
Which may produce a story worth the telling,
Of the next sparks that go a fortune stealing. Prol. to Orphan.

The fortune hunters have already cast their eyes upon her,
and take care to plant themselves in her view. Speitator.

FOR

When mis' delights in her spinnet,
A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.

7. Futurity; future events.

You who mens fortunes in their faces read,
To find out mine, look not, alas, on me;
But mark her face, and all the features heed;
For only there is writ my destiny. Cosway's Mistress.

TO FORTUNE. v. n. [from the noun.] To befall; to fall out; to happen; to come casually to pass.

It fortun'd, as fair it then befall,
Behind his back, unweaving, where he stood,
Of ancient time there was a springing well,
From which fast trickled forth a silver flood. Fairy Queen.

It fortun'd the same night that a Christian, serving a Turk in the camp, secretly gave the watchmen warning that the Turks prepared the next day to give a general assault. Knotter.

I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortun'd.
Here fortun'd Curl to slide. Pope's Dunciad.

FORTUNED. adj. Supplied by fortune.

Not th' imperious show
Of the full fortun'd Caesar ever shall Be brook'd with me. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

FORTUNEBOOK. n. f. [fortune and book.] A book consult- ed to know fortune or future events.

Thou know'st a face, in whose each look Beauty lays ope love's fortunebook;
On whose fair revolutions wait
The obsequious motions of love's fate. Crawford.

FORTUNEHUNTER. n. f. [fortune and hunt.] A man whose employment is to enquire after women with great portions to enrich himself by marrying them.

We must, however, distinguish between fortunehunters and fortunechealers. Speitator, N° 312.

TO FORTUNESELL. v. n. [fortune and sell.]

1. To pretend to the power of revealing futurity.

We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling. Shakespeare.

I'll conjure you, I'll fortunetell you.
The gypsies were to divide the money got by stealing linnen, or by fortunetelling. Walton's Angler.

2. To reveal futurity.

Here, while his canting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortunetelling lines. Clarendon.

FORTUNETELLER. n. f. [fortune and teller.] One who cheats common people by pretending to the knowledge of futurity.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortuneteller. Shakespeare.

A Welchman being at a fections-house, and seeing the prisoners hold up hands at the bar, related to some of his acquaintance that the judges were good fortunetellers; for if they did but look upon their hand, they could certainly tell whether they should live or die. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Hast thou given credit to vain predictions of men, to dreams or fortunetellers, or gone about to know any secret things by lot? Duppa's Rules for Devotion.

There needs no more than impudence on one side, and a superstitious credulity on the other, to the setting up of a for-tuneteller. L'Estrange, Table 94.

Long ago a fortuneteller
Exactly said what now befall her. Swift.

FORTY. adj. [quadrages, Saxon.] Four times ten.

On fair ground I could beat forty of them. Shak. Coriol.

He that upon levity quits his station, in hopes to be better,
'tis forty to one loses. L'Estrange.

FORUM. n. f. [Latin.] Any public place.

The forum was a public place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before the proper judge in matters of property, or in criminal cases, to accuse or excuse, to complain or defend. Watt's Improvement of the Mind.

Close to the bay great Neptune's fane adjoins,
And near a forum flank'd with marble fountains,
Where the bold youth, the num'rous fleets to store,
Shape the broad sail, or smooth the taper oar. Pope.

TO FORWARD. v. a. [for and wander.] To wander wildly and wearily.

The better part now of the ling'ring day
They travelled had, when as they far esp'd
A weary wight forward'ring by the way. Fairy Queen, b. i.

FORWARD. adv. [forwards, Saxon.] Towards; to a part or place before; onward; progressively.

When fervent sorrow flaked was,
She up arose, resolving him to find
Alive or dead, and forward forth doth pass. Fairy Queen.

From smaller things the mind of the hearers may go forward to the knowledge of greater, and climb up from the lowest to the highest things. Hobbes, b. v. l. 20.

He that is used to go forward, and findeth a stop, falleth of his own favour, and is not the thing he was. Bacon's Essay.

FORWARD.

FOS

FORWARD. adj. [from the adverb.]

1. Warm; earnest.

They would that we should remember the poor, which I also was forward to do. Gal. ii. 10.

2. Ardent; eager; hot; violent.

You'll still be too forward. Shak. Two Gent. of Verona.
Unskill'd to dart the pointed spear,
Or lead the forward youth to noble war. Prior.

3. Ready; confident; presumptuous.

Old Bute's form he took, Anchises' sire,
Now left to rule Alcanis by his fire;
And thus salutes the boy, too forward for his years. Dryd.

4. Not reserved; not over modest.

'Tis a per'ous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shak. Rich. III.

5. Premature; early time.

Short Summer lightly has a forward Spring. Sb. R. III.

6. Quick; ready; hasty.

The mind makes not that benefit it should of the information it receives from civil or natural historians, in being too forward or too slow in making observations on the particular facts recorded in them. Locke.

Had they, who would persuade us that there are innate principles, considered separately the parts out of which these propositions are made, they would not perhaps have been so forward to believe they were innate. Locke.

7. Antecedent; anterior: opposed to posterior.

Let us take the infant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick't decrees
Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakespeare.

8. Not behindhand; not inferior.

My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding, as She is 't' th' rear o' our birth. Shak. Winter's Tale.

TO FORWARD. v. a. [from the adverb.]

1. To hasten; to quicken; to accelerate in growth or improvement.

As we house hot country plants, as lemons, to save them;
so we may house our own country plants to forward them, and make them come in the cold seasons. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Whenever I shine,
I forward the grafs and I ripen the vine. Swift.

2. To patronise; to advance.

FORWARDER. n. f. [from forward.] He who promotes any thing.

FORWARDLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Eagerly; hastily; quickly.

The sudden and surprizing turns we ourselves have felt, should not suffer us too forwardly to admit presumption. Liter.

FORWARDNESS. n. f. [from forward.]

1. Eagerness; ardour; readiness to act.

Absolutely we cannot commend, we cannot absolutely approve either willingness to live, or forwardness to die. Hobbes.

Is it to frame a matter to find a good thing furthered by ill men of a sinister intent and purpose, whose forwardness is not therefore a bribe to such as favour the same cause with a better and sincere meaning. Hobbes, b. iv. s. 9.

If the great ones were in forwardness, the people were in fury, entertaining this airy phantasm with incredible affection.
Bacon's Henry VII.

2. Quickness; readiness.

He had such a dextrous proclivity, as his teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness; to the end that his brothers, who were under the same trainings, might hold pace with him. Watson.

3. Earliness; early ripeness.

4. Confidence; assurance; want of modesty.

In France it is usual to bring their children into company, and to cherish in them, from their infancy, a kind of forwardness and assurance. Addison on Italy.

FORWARDS. adv. Straight before; progressively.

The Rhodian ship pass'd through the whole Roman fleet, backwards and forwards several times, carrying intelligence to Drepanum. Arbutnot on Coins.

FOSSE. n. f. [fossa, Latin; fis, Welch] A ditch; a moat; an intrenchment thrown up by the spade.

FOSSET. See FAUCET.

FOSSEWAY. n. f. [fosse and way.] One of the great Roman inroads through England, so called from the ditches on each side.

FOSSEL. adj. [fossilis, Latin; fossile, French.] That which is dug out of the earth.

The fossil shells are many of them of the same kinds with those that now appear upon the neighbouring shores; and the rest such as may be presumed to be at the bottom of the adjacent seas. Woodward's Natural History.

Fossil or rock salt, and sal gemm, differ not in nature from each other; nor from the common salt of salt springs, or that of the sea, when pure. Woodward's Natural History.

FOS

It is of a middle nature, between fossil and animal; being produced from animal excrements, intermixed with vegetable salts. Arbutnot on Aliments.

FOSFIL. n. f.

In this globe are many other bodies, which, because we discover them by digging into the bowels of the earth, are called by one common name fossil; under which are comprehended metals and minerals. Locke.

Many kinds of fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped.

By the word fossil, used as a denomination of one of three general divisions of natural productions, we understand bodies formed usually within the earth, sometimes on its surface, and sometimes in waters; of a plain and simple structure, in which there is no visible difference of parts, no distinction of vessels and their contents, but every portion of which is similar to and perfect as the whole. Hill's Mat. Med.

TO FOSTER. v. a. [forstman, Saxon.]

1. To nurse; to feed; to support; to train up.

Thy threat'ning colours now wind up,
And tame the savage spirit of wild war;
That, like a lion foster'd up at hand,
It may lie gently at the foot of peace. Shak. King John.

Some say that ravens foster forlorn children. Shakespeare.
Our kingdom's earth should not be foil'd
With that dear blood, which it hath foster'd. Shak. R. II.

That base wretch,
Bred on alms, and foster'd with cold dishes,
With scraps o' th' court. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood.
Davies on Ireland.

No more let Ireland brag her harmless nation
Fosters no venom, since that Scots plantation. Clarendon.

The son of Mulciber,
Found in the fire, and foster'd in the plains,
A shepherd and a king at once he reigns. Dryd. Æn. b. vii.

2. To pamper; to encourage.

A prince of great courage and beauty, but foster'd up in blood by his naughty father. Sidney, b. ii.

3. To cherish; to forward.

Ye fostering breezes, blow;
Ye softening dews, ye tender showers descend. Thomson.

FOSTERAGE. n. f. [from foster.] The charge of nursing; al-terage.

Some one adjoining to this lake had the charge and fostering of this child, who being, perchance, but some base and obscure creature, was cast from the top of her temple into the lake adjoining; and, as the poets have feigned, changed by Venus into a fish, all but her face. Raleigh's History.

FOSTERBROTHER. n. f. [forsten broder, Saxon.] One bred at the same pap; one fed by the same nurse.

FOSTERCHILD. n. f. [forsten cild, Saxon.] A child nursed by a woman not the mother, or bred by a man not the father.

The fosterchildren do love and are beloved of their foster-fathers. Davies on Ireland.

The goddess thus beguill'd,
With pleasant stories, her false fosterchild. Add. Ov. Met.

FOSTERDAM. n. f. [foster and dam.] A nurse; one that performs the office of a mother by giving food to a young child.

There, by the wolf, were laid the martial twins:
Intrepid on her swelling dugs they hung;
The fosterdam loll'd out her fawning tongue. Dryden's Æn.

FOSTEREARTH. n. f. [foster and earth.] Earth by which the plant is nourished, though it did not grow at first in it.

In vain, the nursing grove
Seems fair a while, cherish'd with fosterearth;
But when the alien compost is exhaul'd,
Its native poverty again prevails! Philips.

FOSTERER. n. f. [from foster.] A nurse; one who gives food in the place of a parent.

In Ireland they put their children to fosterers; the rich men selling, the meaner sort buying the alterage of their children:
in the opinion of the Irish fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood; and the fosterchildren do love, and are beloved of their fosterfathers and their sept, more than of their own natural parents and kindred. Davies on Ireland.

FOSTERFATHER. n. f. [forstenpater, Saxon.] One who gives food in the place of the father.

In Ireland fosterchildren do love and are beloved of their fosterfathers; and their sept, more than of their own natural parents and kindred. Davies on Ireland.

The duke of Bretagne having been an host and a kind of parent or fosterfather to the king, in his tenderness of age and weakness of fortune, did look for aid this time from king Henry. Bacon's Henry VII.

Tyrreus, the fosterfather of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryden's Æn.

FOSTERMOTHER. n. f. [foster and mother.] A nurse.

destroyed but purified by fire; and whereas the spots or foul-ness of other cloaths are washed out, in these they were usually burnt away. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
2. Pollution; impurity.
It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour. Shaksp.
There is not so chaste a nation as this, nor so free from all pollution or foulness: it is the virgin of the world. Bacon.
3. Hatelulness; atrociousness.
He by an affection sprung up from excessive beauty, should not delight in horrible foulness. Sidney.
Conful, you are too mild:
The foulness of some facts takes thence all mercy:
Report it to the senate. Ben. Jonson's Catiline.
It is the wickedness of a whole life, discharging all its filth and foulness into this one quality, as into a great sink or common shore. South's Sermons.
4. Ugliness; deformity.
He's fallen in love with your foulness, and she'll fall in love with my anger. Shakespeare's As you like it.
The fury laid aside
Her looks and limbs, and with new methods tried
The foulness of th' infernal form to hide. Dryden's Æn.
5. Dishonesty; want of candour.
Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity, and all falseness or foulness of intentions; especially to that personated devotion, under which any kind of impiety is wont to be disguised. Liammond's Fundamentals.
FOUND. The preterite and participle passive of find.

by melting and pouring into moulds; to cast.
FOUNDATION. n. f. [fundation, French.]
1. The basis or lower parts of an edifice.
The stateliness of houses, the goodliness of trees, when we behold them, delighteth the eye; but that foundation which beareth up the one, that root which minisheth unto the other nourishment and life, is in the bosom of the earth concealed. Hooker, b. i. f. 1.
That is the way to make the city flat,
To bring the roof to the foundation. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
To bury all.
O Jove, I think,
Foundations fly the wretched; such, I mean,
Where they should be reliev'd. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
I draw a line along the shore;
I lay the deep foundations of a wall,
And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call. Dryden's Æn.
2. The act of fixing the basis.
Ne'er to these chambers where the mighty rest,
Since their foundation, came a nobler guest. Tickel.
3. The principles or ground on which any notion is raised.
If we give way to our passions, we do but gratify ourselves for the present, in order to our future disquiet; but if we resist and conquer them, we lay the foundation of perpetual peace in our minds. Tillotson, Sermon 6.
That the should be subject to her husband, the laws of mankind and customs of nations have ordered it so; and there is a foundation in nature for it. Locke.
4. Original; rise.
Throughout the world, even from the first foundation thereof, all men have either been taken as lords or lawful kings in their own houses. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.

charity.
He had an opportunity of going to school on a foundation. Swift.
6. Establishment; settlement.
FOUNDER. n. f. [from found.]
1. A builder; one who raises an edifice; one who presides at the erection of a city.
Of famous cities we the founders know;
But rivers, old as seas to which they go,
Are nature's bounty: 'tis of more renown
To make a river than to build a town. Waller.
Nor was Prænestine's founder wanting there,
Whom fame reports the son of Mulciber;
Found in the fire, and foster'd in the plains;
A shepherd and a king at once he reigns. Dryden's Æn.
2. One who establishes a revenue for any purpose.
The wanting orphans saw with wat'ry eyes
Their founder's charity in the dust laid low. Dryden.

The dead inspir'd with vital breath again,
Struck to the center with his flaming dart
Th' unhappy founder of the godlike art. Dryden's Æn.
King James I. the founder of the Stuart race, had he not confined all his views to the peace of his own reign, his son had not been involved in such fatal troubles. Addison's Freehold.
Nor can the faithful herald trace
The founder of thy ancient race. Swift.
4. [Fondeur, French.] A caster; one who forms figures by casting melted matter into moulds.
Founders add a little antimony to their bell-metal, to make it more sonorous; and so pewterers to their pewter, to make it found more clear like silver. Grew's Museum.
To FOUNDER. v. a. [foundre, French.] To cause such a fore-ness and tenderness in a horse's foot, that he is unable to set it to the ground.
Phœbus' steeds are founder'd,
Or night kept chain'd below. Shakespeare's Tempest.

FOU

- I have *founder*d nine score and odd posts; and here, travellanted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valours; taken Sir John Coleville of the Dale, a most furious knight;
but what of that? he saw me and yielded. Shaksp. Henry IV.
Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other Pegasus can fly;
So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift-finn'd racers of the flood. Dorset.
Brutes find out where their talents lie:
A bear will not attempt to fly;
A founder'd horse will oft debate,
Before he tries a five-bar'd gate. Swift.
If you find a gentleman fond of your horse, persuade your master to sell him, because he is vicious, and *founder*d into the bargain. Swift's Directions to the Groom.
Men of discretion, whom people in power may with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, drive them through the hardest and deepest roads, without danger of foundering or breaking their backs, and will be sure to find them neither resty nor vicious. Swift.
To FOUNDER. v. n. [from fond, French; the bottom.]

figures are formed of melted metal; a castinghouse.
FOUNDLING. n. f. [from found of find.] A child exposed to chance; a child found without any parent or owner.
We, like bastards, are laid abroad, even as foundlings, to be trained up by grief and sorrow. Sidney.
I pass the foundling by, a race unknown,
At doors expos'd, whom matrons make their own,
And into noble families advance
A nameless issue; the blind work of chance. Dryd. Juven.
I shall mention a piece of charity which is practised by most of the nations about us: I mean a provision for foundlings, or for those children who, for want of such a provision, are exposed to the barbarity of cruel and unnatural parents. Addison.
The goddess long had mark'd the child's distress,
And long had fought his suit'nings to redress;
She prays the gods to take the foundling's part,
To teach his hands some beneficial art
Practis'd in streets. Gay's Trivia.
FOUNDERESS. n. f. [from founder.]
1. A woman that founds, builds, establishes, or begins any thing.
2. A woman that establishes any charitable revenue.
For of their order she was patroness,
Albe Charitla was their chiefest foundress. Fairy Queens, b. i.

A table of celestial food divine,
Ambrosial fruits, fetcht from the tree of life;
And from the fount of life ambrosial drink. Milt. Par. Reg.
2. A small basin of springing water.
Proofs as clear as founts in July, when
We see each grain of gravel. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Can a man drink better from the fountain when it is finely paved with marble, than when it swells over the green turf?
Taylor's Rule of living holy.
Narcissus on the grassy verdure lies;
But whilst within the crystal fount he tries
To quench his heat, he feels new heat arise. Addison.
3. A jet; a spout of water.
Fountains I intend to be of two natures: the one that sprinkles or spouts water; the other a fair receipt of water, without fish, or lime, or mud. Bacon, Essay 47.
4. The head or first spring of a river.
All actions of your grace are of a piece, as waters keep the tenor of their fountains: your compassion is general, and has the same effect as well on enemies as friends. Dryden.
5. Original; first principle; first cause.
Almighty God, the fountain of all goodness. Comm. Prayer.
You may reduce many thousand bodies to these few general figures, as unto their principal heads and fountains. Peacocks.

1. A wild animal of the canine kind, with sharp ears and a bully tail, remarkable for his cunning, living in holes, and preying upon fowls or small animals.
The fox barks not when he would steal the lamb. Shaksp.
He that trusts to you,
Where he should find you lions, finds you hares;
Where foxes, geefe. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
These retreats are more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.
2. By way of reproach, applied to a knave or cunning fellow.
FOXGLOVE, n. f. [fox and glove.] A fox's skin.
One had better be laughed at for taking a foxglove for a fox, than be destroyed by taking a live fox for a cat. L'Estrange.
FOXCHASE, n. f. [fox and chase.] The pursuit of the fox with hounds.
See the same man, in vigour, in the gout;
Alone, in company; in place or out;
Early at business, late at hazard late;
Mad at a foxglove, wife at a debate. Pope, Epistle i.
FOXEVIL, n. f. [fox and evil.] A kind of disease in which the hair sheds.
FOXGLOVES, n. f. A plant.
The leaves are produced alternately on the branches: the cup of the flower consists of one leaf, which is divided into six ample long segments: the flower consists of one leaf, is tubulose and compressed, and a little reflexed at the brim:
these flowers are disposed in a long spike, and always grow upon one side of the stalk: the ovary of the flower becomes a roundish fruit, which ends in a point, and opens in the middle:
it has two cells, in which many small seeds are contained. Miller.
FOXHUNTER, n. f. [fox and hunter.] A man whose chief ambition is to shew his bravery in hunting foxes. A term of reproach used of country gentlemen.

Has smit my credit. Shakespeare's Timon.
FRACTION, n. f. [fraction, Fr. fractio, Latin.]
1. The act of breaking; the state of being broken.
It hath been observed by several, that the surface of the earth hath been broke, and the parts of it dislocated; but more particularly several parcels of nature retain still the evident marks of fraction and ruin. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. A broken part of an integral.
Neither the motion of the moon, whereby months are computed, nor the sun, whereby years are accounted, con-sisteth of whole numbers, but admits of fractions and broken parts. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 13.
Pliny put a round number near the truth, rather than a fraction. Arbutnot on Coins.
FRACTIONAL, adj. [from fraction.] Belonging to a broken number.
We make a cypher the medium between increasing and decreasing numbers, commonly called absolute or whole numbers, and negative or fractional numbers. Cocker's Arithmetick.
FRACTURE, n. f. [fractura, Latin.]
1. Breach; separation of continuous parts.
That may do it without any great fracture of the more stable and fixed parts of nature, or the infringement of the laws thereof. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
2. The separation of the continuity of a bone in living bodies.
But thou wilt sin and grief destroy,
That to the broken bones may joy,
And tune together in a well-set song,
Full of his praises,
Who dead men raises;
Fractures well cur'd, make us more strong. Herbert.
Fractures

FRA

Fractures of the skull are dangerous, not in consequence of the injury done to the cranium itself, but as the brain becomes affected. Sharp's Surgery.
TO FRACTURE, v. a. [from the noun.] To break a bone.
The leg was dressed, and the fractured bones united together. Wifeman's Surgery.
FRAGILE, adj. [fragile, French; fragilis, Latin.]
1. Brittle; easily snapped or broken.
To ease them of their griefs,
Their pangs of love, and other incident throes,
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage. Shakespeare's Timon.
The stalk of ivy is tough, and not fragile. Bacon's N. Hist.
When subtle wits have spun their threads too fine,
'Tis weak and fragile, like Arachne's line. Denham.
A dry stick will be easily broken, when a green one will maintain a strong resistance; and yet in the moist substance there is less rest than in what is drier and more fragile. Glanv.
2. Weak; uncertain; easily destroyed.
Much ostentation, vain of fleshly arms,
And fragile arms, much instrument of war,
Long in preparing, soon to nothing brought,
Before mine eyes thou'rt set. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
FRAGILITY, n. f. [from fragile.]
1. Brittleness; easiness to be broken.
To make an induration with toughness, and less fragility, decoct bodies in water for two or three days. Bacon's N. Hist.
2. Weakness; uncertainty; easiness to be destroyed.
Fearing the uncertainty of man's fragility, the common chance of war, the violence of fortune. Kneller's History.
3. Frailty; lability to fault.
All could not be right, in such a state, in this lower age of fragility. Watson.
FRAGMENT, n. f. [fragmentum, Latin.] A part broken from the whole; an imperfect piece.
He who late a sceptre did command,
Now grasps a floating fragment in his hand. Dryden.
Cowley, in his unfinished fragment of the Davides, has shewn us this way to improvement. Watts's Improvement.
If a thinned or plated body, which, being of an even thickness, appears all over of one uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour. Newton's Opt.
FRA'GMENTARY, adj. [from fragment.] Composed of fragments. A word not elegant, nor in use.
She, the is gone; she's gone: when thou know'st this,
What fragmentary rubbish this world is,
Thou know'st, and that it is not worth a thought;
He knows it too too much that thinks it nought. Donne.
FRAGOR, n. f. [Latin.] A noise; a crack; a crash.
Purs'd by hideous fragors, as before
The flames descend, they in their breaches roar. Sandy.
FRA'GRANCE, n. f. [fragrantia, Lat.] Sweetness of smell;
FRA'GRANCY, n. f. [from fragrance.] Pleasant odour.
Eve separate he spies,
Veil'd in a cloud of fragrance, where the flood Half-ty'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
I am more pleas'd to survey my rows of coleworts and cabbages springing up in their full fragrancy and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heats. Addison's Spectator, No. 47.
Not lovelier seem'd Narcissus to the eyes;
Nor, when a flower, could boast more fragrancy. Garth.
Such was the wine; to quench whose fervent steam Scarce twenty measures from the living stream
To cool one cup suffic'd: the goblet crown'd,
Breath'd aromatic fragrances around. Pope's Odyssey, b. ix.
FRA'GRANT, adj. [fragrans, Latin.] Odorous; sweet of smell.
The nymph vouchsaf'd to place
Upon her head the various wreath:
The flow'rs, less blooming than her face;
Their scents, less fragrant than her breath. Prior.
FRA'GRANTLY, adv. [from fragrant.] With sweet scent.
As the hops begin to change colour, and smell fragrantly, you may conclude them ripe. Mortimer's Husbandry.
FRAIL, n. f.
1. A basket made of rushes.
2. A rush for weaving baskets.
FRAIL, adj. [fragilis, Latin.]
1. Weak; easily decaying; subject to casualties; easily destroyed.
I know my body's of to frail a kind,
As force without, fevers within can kill. Davies.
When with care we have raised this imaginary treasure of happiness, we find, at last, that the materials of the structure are frail and perishing, and the foundation itself is laid in the sand. Rogers, Sermon 5.
2. Weak of resolution; liable to error or seduction.
The truly virtuous do not easily credit evil that is told them of their neighbours; for if others may do amiss, then may I.

FRA

these also speak amiss: man is frail, and prone to evil, and therefore may soon fall in words. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
FRA'ILNESS, n. f. [from frail.] Weakness; instability.
There is nothing among all the frailnesses and uncertainties of this sublunary world so tottering and unstable as the virtue of a coward. Norris.
FRA'ILTY, n. f. [from frail.]
1. Weakness of resolution; instability of mind; infirmity.
Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily. Shak.
Nor should'st thou have trusted that to woman's frailty:
Ere I to thee, thou to thyself wast cruel. Milton's Agonistes.
God knows our frailty, pities our weakness, and requires of us no more than we are able to do. Locke.
2. Fault proceeding from weakness; sins of infirmity.
Love did his reason blind,
And love's the noblest frailty of the mind. Dryd. Ind. Emp.
Kind wits will those light faults excuse;
Those are the common frailties of the muse. Dryden.
Death, only death, can break the lasting chain;
And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain;
Here all its frailties, all its flames resign,
And wait, 'till 'tis no sin to mix with thine. Pope.
FRAISCHUR, n. f. [French.] Freshness; coolness. A word foolishly innovated by Dryden.
Hither in Summer-ev'nings you repair,
To taste the frâichur of the purer air. Dryden.
FRAISE, n. f. [French, the caul of an animal.] A pancake with bacon in it.
TO FRAME, v. a.
1. To form or fabricate by orderly construction and union of various parts.
The double gates he findeth locked fast;
The one fair fram'd of burnish'd ivory,
The other all with silver overcast. Spenser.
2. To fit one to another.
They rather cut down their timber to frame it, and to do other such necessities to their convenient use, than to fight.
Abbot's Description of the World.
Hew the timber, saw it out, frame it, and set it together.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
3. To make; to compose.
Then chusing out few words most horrible,
Thereof did verses frame. Spenser.
Fight valiantly to-day;
And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it;
For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour. Shaksp.
4. To regulate; to adjust.
Let us not deceive ourselves by pretending to this excellent knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, if we do not frame our lives according to it. Tillotson.
5. To form to any rule or method by study or precept.
Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way; but thou wilt frame
Thyself forthwith hereafter theirs. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
I have been a truant to the law;
I never yet could frame my will to it,
And therefore frame the law unto my will. Shaksp. H. VI.
6. To form and digest by thought.
The most abstruse ideas are only such as the understanding frames to itself, by joining together ideas that it had either from objects of sense, or from its own operations about them. Locke.
Full of that flame his tender scenes he warms,
And frames his goddess by your matchless charms. Grave.
Urge him with truth to frame his sure replies;
And sure he will; for wisdom never lies. Pope's Odyssey.
How many excellent reasonings are framed in the mind of a man of wisdom and study in a length of years? Watts.
7. To contrive; to plan.
Unpardonable the presumption and insolence in contriving and framing this letter was. Clarendon, b. viii.
8. To settle; to scheme out.
Though I cannot make true wars,
I'll frame convenient peace. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
9. To invent; to fabricate, in a bad sense: as, to frame a story or lie.
Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricks and epicycles. Bacon.
FRAME, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A fabric; any thing constructed of various parts or members.
If the frame of the heavenly arch should dissolve itself, if celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker, b. i. l. 3.
Cattles made of trees upon frames of timber, with turrets and arches, were anciently matters of magnificence. Bacon.
These are thy glorious works, parent of good!
Almighty! thine this universal frame. Milt. Parad. Lost.
Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame. Dryden.

FRA

- The gate was adamant; eternal frame,
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
The labour of a god; and all along Tough iron plates were clench'd to make it strong. Dryd.
We see this vast frame of the world, and an innumerable multitude of creatures in it; all which we, who believe a God, attribute to him as the author. Tillotson, Sermon 1.
2. Any thing made so as to inclose or admit something else.
Put both the tube and the vessel it leaned on into a convenient wooden frame, to keep them from mischances. Boyle.
His picture scarcely would deserve a frame. Dryden's Juvenal.
A globe of glass, about eight or ten inches in diameter, being put into a frame where it may be swiftly turned round its axis, will, in turning, shew, where it rubs against the palm of one's hand. Newton's Opt.
3. Order; regularity; adjusted series or disposition.
A woman, that is like a German clock,
Still a repairing, ever out of frame,
And never going aright. Shakespeare.
Your steady soul preserves her frame;
In good and evil times the same. Swift.
4. Scheme; order.
Another party did resolve to change the whole frame of the government in state as well as church. Clarendon.
5. Contrivance; projection.
John the Bastard,
Whose spirits toil in frame of villanies. Shakespeare.
Still a repairing, ever out of frame,
And never going aright. Shakespeare.
Your steady soul preserves her frame;
In good and evil times the same. Swift.
6. Mechanical construction.
7. Shape; form; proportion.
A bear's a savage beast,
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame. Hudibras.
- FRAMER, n. f. [from frame; framman, Saxon.] Maker;
former; contriver; schemer.
The forger of his own fate, the framer of his fortune, should be improper, if all his actions were predetermined.
Hammond's Fundamentals.
There was want of accurateness in experiments in the first original framer of those medals. Arbutnot on Coins.
- FRAMPOLD, n. f. [This word is written by Dr. Hackett frampul. I know not its original.] Peevish; boisterous; rugged; crossgrained.
Her husband! Alas, the sweet woman leads an ill life with him: she leads a very frampold life with him. Shakespeare.
The frampul man could not be pacified. Hackett's Life of William.
- FRANCHISE, n. f. [from franchise, French.]
1. Exemption from any onerous duty.
2. Privilege; immunity; right granted.
They granted them markets, and other franchises, and erected corporate towns among them. Davies on Ireland.
His gracious edict the same franchise yields
To all the wild increase of woods and fields. Dryden.
3. District; extent of jurisdiction.
There are other privileges granted unto most of the corporations, that they shall not be travelled forth of their own franchises. Spenser's State of Ireland.
- TO FRANCHISE, v. a. [from the noun.] To enfranchise; to make free; to keep free.
I lose no honour
In seeking to augment it; but still keep My bosom franchis'd, and allegiance clear. Shak. Macbeth.
- FRANGIBLE, adj. [from frangere, Latin.] Fragile; brittle; easily broken.
Though it seem the solidest wood, if wrought before it be well seasoned, it will shew itself very frangible. Boyle.
- FRANION, n. f. [Of this word I know not the derivation.] A paramour; a boon companion.
First, by her side did sit the bold Sandloay,
Fit mate for such a mincing minion,
Who in her looseness took exceeding joy,
Might not be found a franker franion. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
- FRANK, adj. [from franc, French.]
1. Liberal; generous; not niggardly.
The moister sorts of trees yield little moss, which is for the reason of the frank putting up of the sap into the boughs.
Bacon's Natural History.
They were left destitute, either by narrow provision, or by their frank hearts and their open hands, and their charity towards others. Spratt's Sermon.
'Tis the ordinary practice of the world to be frank of civilities that cost them nothing. L'Estrange.
2. Open; ingenuous; sincere; not reserved.
3. Without conditions; without payment.
Thou hast it won; for it is of frank gift,
And he will care for all the rest to shift. Hubbard's Tale.
4. Not restrained; licentious.
Might not be found a franker franion. Spenser.
- FRANK, n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. A place to feed hogs in; a sty; so called from liberality of food.

FRA

- Where sups here? Doth the old boar feed in the old frank? Shakespeare's Henry IV.
2. A letter which pays no postage.
You'll have immediately, by several franks, my epistle to lord Cobham. Pope to Swift.
3. A French coin.
To FRANK, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To shut up in a frank or sty. Hammer.
Tell Richmond this from me,
That in the sty of this most bloody boar,
My son George Stanley is frank'd up in hold:
If I revolt, off goes young George's head. Shak. Rich. III.
To feed high; to fat; to cram. Junius and Ainsworth.
2. [From the adjective.] To exempt letters from postage.
My lord Orrery writes to you to-morrow; and you see I send this under his cover, or at least frank'd by him. Swift.
Gazettes sent gratis down, and frank'd,
For which thy patron's weekly thank'd. Pope.
- FRANKALMOIGNE, n. f. The same which we in Latin call libera elemosyna, or free alms in English; whence that tenure is commonly known among our English lawyers by the name of a tenure in frank almoigne, which, according to Britten, is a tenure by divine service. Ayliffe's Parerg.
- FRANKINCENSE, n. f. [from frank and incense, so called perhaps from its liberal distribution of odour.]
Frankincense is a dry resinous substance in pieces or drops, of a pale yellowish white colour; a strong smell, but not disagreeable, and a bitter, acrid, and resinous taste. It is very inflammable. The earliest histories inform us, that frankincense was used among the sacred rites and sacrifices, as it still continues to be in many different parts of the world. As well however as the world has at all times been acquainted with the drug itself, we are still uncertain as to the place whence frankincense is brought, and much more so as to the tree which produces it. It is commended against disorders in the head and breast, and against diarrhoea and dysenteries. Hill.
Take unto thee sweet spices, with pure frankincense. Exod.
I find in Dioscorides record of frankincense gotten in India. Brerewood on Languages.
Black ebony only will in India grow,
And od'rous frankincense on the Sabeian bough. Dryd. Virg.
Cedar and frankincense, an od'rous pile,
Flam'd on the hearth, and wide perfum'd the isle. Pope.
- FRANKLIN, n. f. [from frank.] A steward; a bailiff of land.
It signifies originally a little gentleman, and is not improperly English'd a gentleman servant.
A spacious court they see,
Both plain and pleasant to be walk'd in,
Where them does meet a franklin fair and free. Pai. Queen.
- FRANKLY, adv. [from frank.]
1. Liberally; freely; kindly; readily.
Oh, were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance,
As frankly as a pin. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly. Sh. H. VIII.
When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Lu. vii. 42.
By the toughness of the earth the sap cannot get up to spread so frankly as it should do. Bacon's Natural History.
I value my garden more for being full of blackbirds than cherries, and very frankly give them fruit for their songs. Spett.
2. Without constraint; without reserve.
The lords mounted their servants upon their own horses;
and they, with the volunteers, who frankly lifted themselves, amounted to a body of two hundred and fifty horse. Clarend.
He entered very frankly into those new designs, which were contrived at court. Clarendon, b. vii.
- FRANKNESS, n. f. [from frank.]
1. Plainness of speech; openness; ingenuofness.
When the conde duke had some éclaircissement with the duke, in which he made all the protestations with all contempt, and declared, with a very unnecessary frankness, that he would have no friendship with him. Clarendon.
Tom made love to a woman of sense, and always treated her as such during the whole time of courtship: his natural temper and good breeding hindered him from doing any thing disagreeable, as his sincerity and frankness of behaviour made him converse with her before marriage in the same manner he intended to do afterwards. Addison's Guardian.
2. Liberality; bountyofness.
3. Freedom from reserve.
Upon occasion of the pictures present, he delivered with the frankness of a friend's tongue, as near as he could, word by word, what Kalander had told him touching the strange story. Sidney.
The ablest men that ever were, have had all an openness and frankness of dealing, and a name of certainty and veracity. Bacon, Essay 6.
- FRANKPLEDGE,

FRA

- FRANKPLEDGE, n. f. [from francplegium, Latin, of franc, i. e.
liber & pledge, i. e. foi & infir.] A pledge or surety for freedom. For the ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the public peace, was that every freeborn man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison: whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person, thus mutually bound, was called decennier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriffs, in every county, did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they combined in one dozen or other: whereupon this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visum frankplagi, view of frankpledge. Crowl.
- FRANTICK, adj. [corrupted from phrenetic, phreneticus, Latin; Phrenitis.]
1. Mad; deprived of understanding by violent madnes; outrageously and turbulently mad.
Far off, he wonders what makes them so glad;
Of Bacchus merry fruit they did invent,
Or Cereb's frantick rites have made them mad. Fairy Queen.
2. Transported by violence of passion; outrageous; turbulent.
Ereemings in the frantick error of their minds, the greatest madnes in the world to be wisdom, and the highest wisdom foolishness. Hooker, b. iii. f. 8.
- The lover, frantick,
Sees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt. Shakespeare.
To such height their frantick passion grows,
That what both love, both hazard to destroy. Dryden.
She tears her hair, and frantick in her griefs, Calls out Lucia. Addison's Cato.
- FRANTICKLY, adv. [from frantick.] Madly; outrageously.
Fie, fie, how frantickly I square my talk! Shakespeare.
- FRANTICKNESS, n. f. [from frantick.] Madnes; fury of passion.
- FRATERNAL, adj. [from fraternal, French; fraternus, Latin.]
Brotherly; pertaining to brothers; becoming brothers.
One shall rise
Of proud ambitious heart; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
The admonitions, fraternal or paternal, of his fellow Christians, or of the governors of the church, then more publick reprehensions; and upon their unsuccessfulness, the censures of the church, until he reform and return. Hammond's Fandam.
- Plead it to her,
With all the strength and heats of eloquence Fraternal love and friendship can inspire. Addison's Cato.
- FRATERNALLY, adv. [from fraternal.] In a brotherly manner.
- FRATERNITY, n. f. [from fraternal, French; fraternitas, Latin.]
1. The state or quality of a brother.
2. Body of men united; coporation; society; association; brotherhood.
'Tis a necessary rule in alliances, societies, and fraternities, and all manner of civil contracts, to have a strict regard to the humour of those we have to do withal. L'Estrange's Fables.
3. Men of the same class or character.
With what terms of respect knaves and fops will speak of their own fraternity. South's Sermon.
- FRATRICIDE, n. f. [from fratricide, French; fratricidium, Latin.]
The murder of a brother.
- FRAUD, n. f. [from fraus, Latin; fraude, Fr.] Deceit; cheat; trick; artifice; subtilty; stratagem.
None need the frauds of fly Ulysses fear. Dryden's Æn.
If success a lover's toil attends,
Who asks if force or fraud obtain'd his ends. Pope.
- FRAUDFUL, adj. [from fraud and full.] Treacherous; artful; trickish; deceitful; subtle.
The welfare of us all Hangs on the cunning fiend that fraudful man. Shak. H. VI.
He, full of fraudful arts,
This well-invented tale for truth imparts. Dryden's Æn.
- FRAUDFULLY, adv. [from fraudful.] Deceitfully; artfully; subtly; treacherously; by stratagem.
- FRAUDULENCE, n. f. [from fraudulentia, Latin.] Deceitfulness; FRAUDULENCY, n. f. [from fraudulentia, Latin.] Deceitfulness; trickiness; proneness to artifice.
We admire the providence of God in the continuance of Scripture, notwithstanding the endeavours of infidels to abolish, and the fraudulence of heretics always to deprave the same. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.
- FRAUDULENT, adj. [from fraudulentus, Fr. fraudulentus, Latin.]
1. Full of artifice; trickish; subtle; deceitful.
He with serpent tongue
His fraudulent temptation thus began. Milton.
She mix'd the potion, fraudulent of soul;
The potion mantled in the golden bowl. Pope's Odyssey.

FRE

2. Performed by artifice; deceitful; treacherous.
Now thou hast aveng'd
Supplanted Adam,
And frustrated the conquest fraudulent. Milt. Parad. Reg.
- FRAUDULENTLY, adv. [from fraudulent.] By fraud; by deceit; by artifice; deceitfully.
He that by fact, word, or sign, either fraudulently or violently, does hurt to his neighbour, is bound to make restitution. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
- FRAUGHT, particip. pass. [from frangere, now written frangit.]
1. Laden; charged.
In the narrow seas that part
The French and English, there miscarried
A vessel of our country, richly fraught. Shakespeare.
With joy
And tidings fraught, to tell he now return'd. Milt. P. Lost.
And now approach'd their fleet from India, fraught
With all the riches of the rising sun,
And precious sand from southern climates brought. Dryden.
2. Filled; stored; thronged.
The Scripture is fraught even with laws of nature. Hooker.
By this sad Una, fraught with anguish fore,
Arriv'd, where they in earth their fruitless blood had spilt.
Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 6.
I am so fraught with curious busines, that I leave out ceremony. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Whoever hath his mind fraught with many thoughts, his wits and understanding do clarify and break up in the communicating and discoursing with another. Bacon, Essay 28.
Hell, their fit habitation, fraught with fire Unquenchable, the house of woe and pain. Milt. Par. Lost.
Abdallah and Balfora were so fraught with all kinds of knowledge, and possessed with so constant a passion for each other, that their solitude never lay heavy on them. Guardian.
- FRAUGHT, n. f. [from the participle.] A freight; a cargo.
Yield up, oh love, thy crown and parted throne
To tyrannous hate! swell, bosom, with thy fraught;
For 'tis of aspicks tongues. Shakespeare's Othello.
The bark that all our blessings brought,
Charg'd with thyself and Jame, a doubly royal fraught. Dry.
- TO FRAUGHT, v. a. [for frangere, by corruption.] To load;
to crowd.
Hence from my sight:
If after this command thou fraught the court
With thy unworthiness, thou dy'st. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
- FRAUGHTAGE, n. f. [from frangere.] Lading; cargo. A bad word.
Out fraughtage, fir,
I have convey'd aboard. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.
- FRAY, n. f. [from frayer, to fright, French.]
1. A broil; a battle; a fight.
Time tells, that on that ever blessed day,
When Christian swords with Persian blood were dy'd,
The furious prince Tancredie from that fray
His coward foes chased through forests wide. Fairfax.
I'll speak between the change of man and boy
With a reed voice, and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride; and speak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth. Shak. Merchant of Venice.
After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought. Shak. H. VI.
He left them to the fates in bloody fray,
To toil and struggle through the well-fought day. Pope.
2. A duel; a combat.
Since, if we fall before th' appointed days,
Nature and death continue long their fray. Denham.
The boaster Paris oft desir'd the day
With Sparta's king to meet in single fray. Pope's Iliad.
- TO FRAY, v. a. [from frayer, French.] To fright; to terrify.
The panther, knowing that his spotted hide
Doth please all beasts, but that his looks them frays,
Within a bush his dreadful head doth hide,
To let them gaze, whilst he on them may prey. Spenser.
So diversely themselves in vain they fray,
Whilst some more bold to measure him stand nigh. Po. 2^{da}.
Fishes are thought to be frayed with the motion caused by noise upon the water. Bacon's Natural History.
Their vultures prey only on carcases, on such stupid minds as have not life and vigour enough to fray them away.
Government of the Tongue.
2. [from frayer, French.] To rub.
FREAK, n. f. [from frach, German, saucy, petulant; frace, Saxon, fugitive.]
1. A sudden and causeless change of place.
2. A sudden fancy; a humour; a whim; a capricious prank.
O! but I fear the fickle freaks, quoth she,
Of fortune, and the odds of arms in field. Fairy Queen.
When that freak has taken possession of a fantastical head, the distemper is incurable. L'Estrange, Fable 100.
She is so restless and peevish that the quarrels with all about her, and sometimes in a freak will instantly change her habitation. Spectator, N^o. 427.

FRE

- To vex the more, he took a freak.
To slit my tongue, and make me speak. Swift.
To FREAK. v. a. [A word, I suppose, Scotch, brought into England by Thomson.] To variegate; to chequer.
There furry nations harbour:
Sables of glossy black, and dark brown'd,
Or beauteous, freak'd with many a mingled hue. Thomson.
FREAKISH. adj. [from freak.] Capricious; humourful.
It may be a question, whether the wife or the woman was the more freakish of the two; for she was still the same uneasy fop. L'Estrange, Fable 173.
FREAKISHLY. adv. [from freakish.] Capriciously; humoursomerly.
FREAKISHNESS. n. f. [from freakish.] Capriciousness; hu-mourfulness; whimsicalness.
TO FREAM. v. n. [from fremere, Lat. fremere, French.] To growl or grunt as a boar. Bailey.
FRECKLE. n. f. [from fleck, a spot, German; whence fleckle, freckle.]
1. A spot raised in the skin by the sun.
Ruddy his lips, and fresh and fair his hue;
Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
Whose dusk set off the whiteness of the skin. Dryden.
2. Any small spot or discolouration.
The cowslips tall her pensioners be;
In their gold coats spots you see:
Those be rubies fairy favours;
In those freckles live their favours. Sh. Mid. Night's Dream.
The farwel frosts and easterly winds now spot your tulips;
therefore cover such with mats, to prevent freckles. Evelyn.
FRECKLED. adj. [from freckle.] Spotted; maculated; discoloured with small spots.
Sometimes we'll angle at the brook,
The freckled trout to take
With silken worms. Drayton's Cynthia.
The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowslip,
Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Now thy face charms ev'ry shepherd,
Spotted over like a leopard;
And, thy freckled neck display'd,
Envy breeds in ev'ry maid. Swift.
FRECKLY. adj. [from freckle.] Full of freckles.
FRED. The same with peace; upon which our forefathers called their sanctuaries fredstoles, i. e. the seats of peace. So Frederic is powerful, or wealthy in peace; Winfred, victorious peace; Reinfred, sincere peace. Gibson's Camden.
FREE. adj. [from frēah, Saxon; or frē, Dutch.]
1. At liberty; not a vassal; not enslaved; not a prisoner; not dependent.
Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,
All which we pine for now. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
A free nation is that which has never been conquered, or thereby entered into any conditions of subjection. Temple.
Free, what, and fetter'd with so many chains? Dryden.
How can we think any one freer than to have the power to do what he will? Locke.
This wretched body trembles at your pow'r:
Thus far could fortune; but she can no more:
Free to herself my potent mind remains,
Nor fears the victor's rage, nor feels his chains. Prior.
Set an unhappy prisoner free,
Who ne'er intended harm to thee. Prior.
2. Uncompelled; unrestrained.
Their use of meats was not like unto our ceremonies, that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did; but this is a public constitution for the ordering of the church. Hooker.
It was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not so indifferent. South.
3. Not bound by fate; not necessitated.
Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell:
Not free, what proof could they have giv'n sincere
Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
Where only what they needs must do, appear'd;
Not what they would? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.
4. Permitted; allowed.
Why, fir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me as for you? Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
Defaming as impure what God declares
Pure; and commands to sone, leaves free to all. Milton.
5. Licentious; unrestrained.
O conspiracy!
Sham't thou to shew thy dang'rous brow by night,
When evils are most free? Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
Physicians are too free upon the subjects, in the conversation of their friends. Felton.
The crickets have been very free in their censures.
I know there are to whole presumptuous thoughts
Those free beauties, ev'n in them, seem faults. Pope.

6. Open; ingenuous.

- 'Tis not to make me jealous;
To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well,
Where virtue is, these make more virtuous. Shak. Othello.
Castello, I have doubts within my heart;
Will you be free and candid to your friend? Orway's Oryth.
7. Acquainted; conversing without reserve.
Being one day very free at a great feast, he suddenly broke forth into a great slaughter. Hakewill on Providence.
Free and familiar with misfortune grow,
Be us'd to sorrow, and inur'd to woe. Prior.
8. Liberal; not parsimonious.
Gilder too, a foe to citizens,
O'ercharging your free purses with large fines,
That seeks to overthrow religion. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
No flautie in his favour says,
How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
I, who at sometimes spend as others spare. Pope's Horace.
Alexandrian verses, of twelve syllables, should never be allowed but when some remarkable beauty or propriety in them atones for the liberty: Mr. Dryden has been too free of these in his latter works. Pope.
9. Frank; not gained by importunity; not purchased.
We wanted words to express our thanks: his noble free offers left us nothing to ask. Bacon's New Atlantis.
10. Clear from distress.
Who alone suffers, suffers most i' th' mind,
Leaving free things and happy shows behind. Shak. K. Lear.
11. Guileless; innocent.
Make mad the guilty, and appall the free,
Confound the ignorant. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
My hands are guilty, but my heart is free. Dryden.
12. Exempt.
Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Who fears not to do ill, yet fears the name;
And free from confidence, is a slave to fame. Denham.
Let envy, then, those crimes within you see,
From which the happy never must be free. Dryden.
Their ities around,
Free from the harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.
The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions. Locke.
13. Invested with franchises; possessing any thing without valsalage; admitted to the privileges of any body.
He therefore makes all birds of every sect
Free of his farm, with promise to respect
Their several kinds alike, and equally protect. Dryden.
Friend!
What do'st thou make a shipboard? To what end
Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free?
Stark-flaring mad, that thou shoul'dst tempt the sea? Dryd.
14. Without expence; by charity, as a free-school.
TO FREE. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To set at liberty; to rescue from slavery or captivity; to manumit; to loose.
The child was prisoner to the womb, and is
By law and process of great nature thence Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party to The anger of the king, nor guilty of
If any be, the trespass of the queen. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
He recovered the temple, free'd the city, and upheld the laws which were going down. 2 Mac. ii. 22.
Can't thou not other matter understand,
Than him that free'd thee by the pretor's wand? Dryden.
Should thy coward tongue
Spread its cold poison through the martial throng,
My jav'lin shall revenge so base a part,
And free the soul that quivers in thy heart. Pope.
2. To rid from; to clear from any thing ill.
It is no marvel, that he could think of no better way to be free'd of these inconveniences the passions of those meetings gave him, than to dissolve them. Clarendon.
Hercules
Free'd Erymanthus from the foaming boar.
Our land is from the rage of tygers free'd. Dryden's Virg.
3. To clear from impediments or obstructions.
The chaste Sibylla shall your steps convey,
And blood of offer'd victims free the way. Dryden.
Fierce was the fight; but ha'n'ning to his prey,
By force the furious lover free'd his way. Dryden.
4. To banish; to send away; to rid.
We may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives. Shakespeare.
5. To exempt.
For he that is dead is free'd from sin. Rom. vi. 7.
6. To unlock; to open.
This master-key
Frees every lock, and leads us to his person. Dryden.
FREEBOOTER.

FRE

- FREEBOOTER. n. f. [from free and booty.] A robber; a plunderer;
a pillager.
The Kentishmen, perceiving that Perkin was not followed by any English of name, and that his forces consisted mostly of base people and freebooters, fitter to spoil a coast than to recover a kingdom, professed their loyalty to the king. Bacon.
The earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Irish frigates, or such freebooters as sailed under their commission, taken all the seamen who became prisoners to them of that nation, and bound them back to back, and thrown them overboard into the sea. Clarendon, b. viii.
FREEBOOTING. n. f. Robbery; plunder; the act of pillaging.
Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handomely in his way; and when he goeth abroad in the night on freebooting, it is his best and surest friend. Spenser.
FREEBORN. n. f. [from free and born.] Not a slave; inheriting liberty.
O baseness, to support a tyrant's throne,
And crush your freedom brethren of the world! Dryden.
I shall speak my thoughts like a freedom subject, such things perhaps as no Dutch commentator could, and I am sure no Frenchman durst. Dryden's Sen. Dedication.
Shall freedom men, in humble awe,
Submit to servile shame;
Who from content and custom draw
The flame right to be rul'd by law,
Which kings pretend to reign? Dryden.
FRECH'APPEL. n. f. [from free and chappel.] Such chapels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. The king may also license a subject to found such a chapel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's visitation. Cowel.
FREECOST. n. f. [from free and cost.] Without expence; free from charges.
We must not vouch any man for an exact master in the rules of our modern policy, but such a one as has brought himself so far to hate and despise the absurdity of being kind upon freecost, as not so much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing. South's Sermons.
FREEMAN. n. f. [from free and man.] A slave manumitted.
Libertus.
The freeman justices, and will be prefer'd;
First come, first serv'd, he cries. Dryden's Juu. Sat. 1.
FREEDOM. n. f. [from free.]
1. Liberty; exemption from servitude; independence.
The laws themselves they do specially rage at, as most repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom. Spenser on Ireland.
O freedom! first delight of human kind!
Not that which bondmen from their masters find,
The privilege of doles; nor yet t' inscribe
Their names in this or t' other Roman tribe;
That false enfranchisement with ease is found;
Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryden's Pers.
2. Privileges; franchises; immunities.
By our holy Sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shakespeare.
3. Power of enjoying franchises.
This prince first gave freedom to servants, so as to become citizens of equal privileges with the rest, which very much increased the power of the people. Swift.
4. Exemption from fate, necessity, or predetermination.
I else must change
Their nature, and revoke the high decree
Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd
Their freedom; they themselves ordain'd their fall. Milton.
In every sin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by so much is the act the more sinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is so much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act. South's Sermons.
5. Unrestraint.
I will that all the feasts and sabbaths shall be all days of immunity and freedom for the Jews in my realm. 1 Mac. x.
6. The state of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.
7. Ease or facility in doing or showing any thing.
FREEFOTED. adj. [from free and foot.] Not restrained in the march.
We will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too freefooted. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
FREHEARTED. adj. [from free and heart.] Liberal; unrestrained.
Love must frehearted be, and voluntary;
And not enchanted, or by fate constrain'd. Davies.
FREHOLD. n. f. [from free and hold.] That land or tenement which a man holdeth in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life.
Freehold in deed is the real possession of lands or tenements in

FRE

- fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to such land or tenements before his entry or seizure.
Freehold is sometimes taken in opposition to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bockland, that is, holden by book or writing, or soleland, that is, holden without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better sort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen, being such as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the possession of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord. Cowel.
No alienation of lands holden in chief should be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it were made by matter of record, to be found in some of her majesty's treasuries. Bacon's Office of Alienation.
There is an unspokeable pleasure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Addison's Freeholders, N. 1.
My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold, from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.
I should be glad to possess a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give my own consent.
Swift to Lord Middleton.
FREEHOLDER. n. f. [from freehold.] One who has a freehold.
As extortion did banish the old English freeholder, who could not live but under the law; so the law did banish the Irish lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.
FREELY. adv. [from free.]
1. At liberty; without vassalage; without slavery; without dependence.
2. Without restraint; lavishly.
If my son were my husband, I would freely rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would shew most love. Shakespeare's Coriolan.
I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains
I have bestow'd to breed this present peace,
You would drink freely. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
3. Without scruple; without reserve.
Let such teach others who themselves excel,
And censure freely who have written well. Pope's Essay on Crit.
4. Without impediment.
To follow rather the Goths in rhyming than the Greeks in true verifying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may freely eat wheat-bread among men. Addison's Schoolmaster.
The path to peace is virtue: what I show,
Thyself may freely on thyself bestow:
Fortune was never worshipp'd by the wise;
But, set aloft by fools, usurps the skies. Dryden's Juu. Sat.
5. Without necessity; without predetermination.
Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell. Milton.
He leaves us to chafe with the liberty of reasonable beings:
they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do also freely reject it. Rogers's Sermons.
6. Frankly; liberally.
By nature all things have an equally common use: nature freely and indifferently opens the bosom of the universe to all mankind. South's Sermons.
7. Spontaneously; of its own accord.
FREEMAN. n. f. [from free and man.]
1. One not a slave; not a vassal.
Had you rather Caesar were living, and die all slaves, than that Caesar were dead, to live all freemen? Shakespeare's Jul. Caesar.
If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination and judgment which keeps us from chusing or doing the worse, be liberty, true liberty, mad men and fools are only the freemen. Locke.
2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.
Whom nature did like captives treat before. Dryden.
What this union was is expressed in the preceding verse, by their both having been made freemen on the same day. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
FREEMINDED. adj. [from free and mind.] Unconstrained; without load of care.
To be freeminded, and cheerfully disposed at hours of meat, sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting.
Bacon's Essay 31.
FREENESS. n. f. [from free.]
1. The state or quality of being free.
2. Openness; unreservedness; ingenuousness; candour.
The reader may pardon it, if he please, for the freeness of the confession. Dryden.
3. Generosity; liberality.
I hope it will never be said that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, shall in their corporations exceed the clergy itself, and their sons, in freeness of giving. Spence.
FREESCHOOL. n. f. [from free and school.] A school in which learning is given without pay.
To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the 9 T

time to come, provision was made by another law, that there should be one fresh-school at least erected in every diocess. Davies.
Two clergymen stood candidates for a small fresh-school in —shire, where a gentleman of interest in the country, who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar. Swift.

FRESHPOKEN, adj. [free and spoken.] Accustomed to speak without reserve.

Nerva one night supped privately with some six or seven; amongst whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like courtes as Marcellus and Regulus had done: the emperor fell into discourse of the injustice and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accusers; and said, what should we do with them, if we had them now? One of them that was at supper, and was a free-spoken senator, said, Marry, they should sup with us. Bacon.
FRESHSTONE, n. f. [free and stone.] Stone commonly used in building.

Free-stone is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction. Woodward.
I saw her hand: she has a leathern hand, a free-stone coloured hand. Shakespeare's As you like it.

The streets are generally paved with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat. Addison on Italy.

FREETHINKER, n. f. [free and think.] A libertine; a contemner of religion.

Atheist is an old-fashion'd word: I'm a freethinker, child. Addison's Drummer.

Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against Christianity? And therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependance on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabric must fall to the ground. Swift's Argument against abolishing Christianity.

FREEWILL, n. f. [free and will.]
1. The power of directing our own actions without constraint by necessity or fate.

We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire: this seems to me the source of all liberty; in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.

2. Voluntaryness; spontaneity.
I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee. Exr. vii. 13.

FREEWOMAN, n. f. [free and woman.] A woman not enslaved.

All her ornaments are taken away of a freewoman; she is become a bondslave. Mac. ii. 11.

TO FREEZE, v. n. preter. frose. [vroisen, Dutch.]

1. To be congealed with cold.
The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray on the Creation.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the sun. Locke.

2. To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.

Orpheus with his lute made trees
And mountain tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shaksf. Rich. III.

Heav'n froze above, the clouds congeal,
And thro' the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail. Dryd.

TO FREEZE, v. a. preter. froze; part. frozen or froze.

1. To congeal with cold.

2. To kill by cold.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how did he lap me.
Ev'n in his garments! Shakespeare's Richard III.

My master and mistress are almost frozen to death. Shaksf.

3. To chill by the loss of power or motion.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life. Sh. Rom. and Juliet.

Death came on a main,
And exercis'd below his iron reign;
Then upward to the seat of life he goes;
Sense fled before him, what he touch'd he froze. Dryden.

TO FREIGHT, v. a. preter. freighted; part. freighted; which being now used as an adjective, freighted is adopted. [fretter, French.]

1. To load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation.

The princes
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Fraught with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war. Shak. Troilus and Cressida, Prologue.

Not is, indeed, that man less mad than these,
Who freights a ship to venture on the seas;

FRE

With one frail interposing plank to save
From certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave. Dryden's Juv.

Freighted with iron, from my native land
I steer my voyage. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.

2. To load as the burthen; to be the thing with which a vessel is freighted.

I would Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere
It should the good ship to have swallow'd, and
The freighting souls within her. Shakespeare's Tempest.

FREIGHT, n. f.

1. Any thing with which a ship is loaded.

He clears the deck, receives the mighty freight;
The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight. Dryden's En.

2. The money due for transportation of goods.

FREIGHTER, n. f. [fretteur, French.] He who freights a vessel.

FREN, n. f. A worthless woman. An old word wholly forgotten.

But now from me his madding mind is start,
And woos the widow's daughter of the glen;
And now fair Rosalind hath bred his smart,
So now his friend is changed for a fren. Spenser's Poet.

FRENCH Chalk, n. f.

French chalk is an indurated clay, extremely dense, of a smooth glossy surface, and soft and unctuous to the touch; of a greyish white colour, variegated with a dusky green. Hill.

French chalk is unctuous to the touch, as leucites is, but harder, and nearer approaching the consistence of stone. Wood.

TO FRENCIFY, v. a. [from French.] To infect with the manner of France; to make a coxcomb.

They mislaid nothing more in king Edward the Confessor than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in foreign powers, which indeed happened. Camden's Remains.

Has he familiarly dislik'd
Your yellow starch, or said your doublet
Was not exactly Frenchified. Shakespeare's As you like it.

FRENETICK, adj. [frenetique, French; Φρενενικος; generally therefore written phrenetick.] Mad; distracted.

He himself impotent,
By means of his frenetick malady. Daniel's Civil War.

FRENZY, n. f. [Φρενις; phrenitis, Latin: whence phrenetick, phrenetick, phreny, or frenzy.] Madness; distraction of mind; alienation of understanding; any violent passion approaching to madness.

That knave, Ford, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him that ever governed frenzy. Shaksf. Mer. Wives of Windsor.

True fortune is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides;
All else is touring frenzy and distraction. Addison's Cato.

Why such a disposition of the body induceth sleep, another disturbs all the operations of the soul, and occasions a lethargy or frenzy; this knowledge exceeds our narrow faculties. Bent.

FREQUENCY, n. f. [frequent, Fr. frequentia, Latin.] Crowd; concourse; assembly.

The frequency of degree,
From high to low throughout. Shakespeare's Timon.

He, in full frequency bright
Of angels, thus to Gabriel smiling spake. Paradise Reg.

FREQUENCY, n. f. [frequentia, Latin.]

1. Common occurrence; the condition of being often seen or done.

Should a miracle be indulged to one, others would think themselves equally intitled to it; and if indulged to many, it would no longer have the effect of a miracle; its force and influence would be lost by the frequency of it. Atterb.

2. Concourse; full assembly.

Thou can't't e're while into this senate: who
Of such a frequency, so many friends
And kindred thou hast here, saluted thee? Ben. Johnson's Catil.

FREQUENT, adj. [frequent, French; frequens, Latin.]

1. Often done; often seen; often occurring.

An ancient and imperial city falls;
The streets are fill'd with frequent funerals. Dryden's En.

2. Used often to practice any thing.

Every man thinks he may pretend to any employment, provided he has been loud and frequent in declaring himself hearty for the government. Swift.

3. Full of concourse.

Frequent and full. Milton.

TO FREQUENT, v. a. [frequens, Latin; frequent, French.]

To visit often; to be much in any place; to resort often to.

Latter day,
Finding in it fit ports for fishers trade,
'Gan more the fame frequent, and further to invade. F. & Q.

There were synagogues for men to resort unto; our Saviour himself, and after him the apostles, frequented them. Hooker, b. v. f. 11.

This fellow here, this thy creature,
By night frequents my house. Shakespeare's Timon.

At

FRE

At that time this land was known and frequented by the ships and vessels. Bacon.

With tears
Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milt. P. L.

To serve my friends, the senate I frequent;
And there what I before digested, vent. Denham.

That he frequented the court of Augustus, and was well received in it, is most undoubted. Dryden's Ovid, Preface.

FREQUENTABLE, adj. [from frequent.] Convertible; accessible. A word not now used, but not inelegant.

While youth lafted in him, the exercises of that age and his humour, not yet fully discovered, made him somewhat the more frequentable and less dangerous. Sidney, b. ii.

FREQUENTATIVE, adj. [frequentatif, French; frequentativus, Latin.] A grammatical term applied to verbs signifying the frequent repetition of an action.

FREQUENTER, n. f. [from frequent.] One who often resorts to any place.

Persons under bad imputations are no great frequenters of churches. Swift.

FREQUENTLY, adv. [frequent, Latin.] Often; commonly; not rarely; not seldom; a considerable number of times; manifold times.

I could not, without much grief, observe how frequently both gentlemen and ladies are at a loss for questions and answers. Swift's Introduction to Gentel Conversation.

FRESCO, n. f. [Italian.]

1. Coolness; shade; duskiness, like that of the evening or morning.

Hellish sprites
Love more the fresco of the nights. Prior.

2. A picture not drawn in glaring light, but in dusk.

Here thy well-study'd marbles fix our eye;
A fading fresco here demands a sigh. Pope.

FRESH, adj. [freyc, Saxon; fraiche, French.]

1. Cool; not rapid with heat.

I'll cult the farthest mead for thy repast;
The choicest herbs I to thy board will bring,
And draw thy water from the freshest spring. Prior.

2. Not salt.

They keep themselves unmixed with the salt water; so that, a very great way within the sea, men may take up as fresh water as if they were near the land. Abbot's Desc. of the World.

3. New; not impaired by time.

This second source of men, while yet but few,
And while the dread of judgment past remain
Fresh in their minds, fearing the Deity,
With some regard to what's just and right,
Shall lead their lives. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

That love which first was set, will first decay;
Mine of a fresh date will longer stay. Dryd. Indian Emp.

4. In a state like that of recency.

We will revive those times, and in our memories
Preserve and still keep fresh, like flowers in water. Denham.

With such a care
As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still preserve them new,
And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.

Thou sun, said I, fair light!
And thou enlighten'd earth, so fresh and gay! Milt. P. L.

5. Recent; newly come.

Amidst the spirits Palinurus press'd;
Yet fresh from life, a new admitted guest. Dryden's En.

Fresh from the fact, as in the present case,
The criminals are seiz'd upon the place;
Stiff in denial, as the law appoints,
On engines they dissent their tortur'd joints. Dryden.

6. Repaired from any loss or diminution.

Nor lies the long; but, as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain;
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

7. Florid; vigorous; cheerful; undimmed; unimpaired.

This pope is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him: take order that when he is dead there be chosen a pope of fresh years, between fifty and threescore. Bacon's holy War.

Two swains,
Fresh as the morn, and as the season fair. Pope.

8. Healthy in countenance; ruddy.

Tell me,
Hast thou beheld a fresh gentlewoman,
Such war of white and red within her cheeks? Shakespeare.

It is no rare observation in England to see a fresh coloured lusty young man yoked to a consumptive female, and him soon after attending her to the grave. Harvey on Consumptions.

They represent to themselves a thousand poor, tall, innocent, fresh coloured young gentlemen. Addison's Spectator.

9. Britk; strong; vigorous.

As a fresh gale of wind fills the sails of a ship. Holder.

10. Fastidious; opposed to eating or drinking. A low word.

11. Sweet: opposed to stale or stinking.

FRE

FRESH, n. f. Water not salt.

He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not shew him
Where the quick freshes are. Shakespeare's Tempest.

TO FRESHEN, v. a. [from fresh.] To make fresh.

Prelusive drops let all their moisture flow
In large effusion o'er the freshen'd world. Thomson's Spring.

TO FRESHEN, v. n. To grow fresh.

A freshening breeze the magic power supply'd,
While the wing'd vessel flew along the tide. Pope's Odyssey.

FRESHET, n. f. [from fresh.] A pool of fresh water.

All fish from sea or shore,
Freshet or purling brook, or shell or fin. Milt. Parad. Lost.

FRESHLY, adv. [from fresh.]

1. Coolly.

2. Newly; in the former state renewed.

The weeds of heresy being grown unto such ripeness as that was, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth; but afterwards freshly spring up again, no less pernicious than at the first. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.

Then shall our names,
Familiar in their mouth as household words,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shak. Hen. V.

They are now freshly in difference with them. Bacon.

3. With a healthy look; ruddily.

Looks he as freshly as he did the day he wrestled? Shaksf.

FRESHNESS, n. f. [from fresh.]

1. Newness; vigour; spirit; the contrary to vapidity.

Most odours smell best broken or crushed; but flowers preffed or beaten, do lose the freshness and sweetness of their odour. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Freedom from diminution by time; not italeness.

For the constant freshness of it, it is such a pleasure as can never cloy or overwork the mind; for surely no man was ever weary of thinking that he had done well or virtuously. Saunders.

3. Freedom from fatigue; newness of strength.

The Scots had the advantage both for number and freshness of men. Hayward.

4. Coolness.

There are some rooms in Italy and Spain for freshness, and gathering the winds and air in the heats of Summer; but they be but pennings of the winds, and enlarging them again, and making them reverberate in circles. Bacon.

Say, if she please, she hither may repair,
And breathe the freshness of the open air. Dryden's Aureng.

She laid her down to rest,
And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,
To take the freshness of the morning air. Addison on Italy.

5. Ruddiness; colour of health.

The secret venom, circling in her veins,
Works through her skin, and bursts in bloating stains;
Her cheeks their freshness lose and wonted grace,
And an unusual paleness spreads her face. Granville.

6. Freedom from faltness.

FRESHWATER, [A compound word of fresh and water, used as an adjective.] Raw; unskilled; unacquainted. A low term borrowed from the sailors, who stigmatise those who come first to sea as freshwater men or novices.

The nobility, as freshwater soldiers which had never seen but some light skirmishes, in their vain bravery made light account of the Turks. Knolles's History of the Turks.

FRET, n. f. [Of this word the etymology is very doubtful: some derive it from fretan, to eat; others from frettan, to adorn; some from fretto, Skinner more probably from fretto, or the French fretiller: perhaps it comes immediately from the Latin fretum.]

1. A frith, or strait of the sea, where the water by confinement is always rough.

Euripus generally signifieth any strait, fret, or channel of the sea, running between two shores. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

2. Any agitation of liquors by fermentation, confinement, or other cause.

The channel of this river is white with rocks, and the surface covered with froth and bubbles; for it runs along upon the fret, and is still breaking against the stones that oppose its passage. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

The blood in a fever, if well governed, like wine upon the fret, discharge itself of all heterogeneous mixtures. Derham's Physico-Theology.

3. That stop of the musical instrument which causes or regulates the vibrations of the string.

It requirith good winding of a string before it will make any note; and in the tops of lutes, &c. the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon's Nat. History.

The harp
Had work, and rested not: the solemn pipe
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop,
All founds on fret by string or golden wire,
Temper'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice Choral or union. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

They are fitted to answer the most variable harmony: two or

FRE

or three pipes to all those of a church-organ, or to all the strings and frets of a lute. Grew's Cosmog. Sac. b. i.

4. Work rising in protuberances.

The frets of houses, and all equal figures, please; whereas unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon's Natural History.

We take delight in a prospect well laid out, and diversified with fields and meadows, woods and rivers, in the curious fret works of rocks and grottos. Spectator, N° 414.

5. Agitation of the mind; commotion of the temper; passion.

Calmness is great advantage: he that lets

Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,

Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets, Horbert.

As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire.

The incredulous Pheac, having yet

Drank but one round, reply'd in tober f. et. Tate's Juven.

You, too weak the slightest loss to bear,

Are on the fret of passion, boil and rage. Cresch's Juven.

Yet then did Dennis rave in furious fret;

I never answer'd, I was not in debt. Pope, Epistle ii.

To FRET, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rub against any thing; to agitate violently.

Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea. Shaksp. K. Lear.

To wag their high tops, and to make a noise

When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shaksp. As You Like It.

2. To wear away by rubbing.

Drop them still upon one place,

'Till they have fretted us a pair of graves

Within the earth. Shaksp. Richard II.

In the banks of rivers, with the waining of the water, there were divers times fretted out big pieces of gold. Albat.

Before I ground the object metal on the pitch, I always ground the putty on it with the concave copper, 'till it had done making a noise; because, if the particles of the putty were not made to flick fast in the pitch, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fret the object metal, and fill it full of little holes. Newton's Opt.

3. To hurt by attrition.

The better part with Mary and with Ruth

Chosen thou hast; and they that over-ween,

And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,

No anger find in thee, but pity and ruth. Milton.

4. To corrode; to eat away.

It is fret inward, whether it be bare within or without. Lev. xiii. 55.

The painful husband, plowing up his ground,

Shall find all fret with rust, both pikes and shields,

And empty helms under his harrow found. Hakewill.

5. To form into raised work.

Nor did there want

Cornice or freeze, with bossy sculptures grav'n;

The roof was fretted gold. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

6. To variegate; to diversify.

Yon grey lines,

That fret the clouds, are messengers of day. Shak. Jul. Cæs.

7. To make angry; to vex.

Antony

Is valiant and dejected; and, by starts,

His fretted fortunes give him hope and fear

Of what he has and has not. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Because thou hast fretted me in all these things, behold I will recompense thy way upon thine head. Ezek. xvi. 43.

Such an expectation, cries one, will never come to pass:

therefore I'll even give it up, and go and fret myself. Collier.

Injuries from friends fret and gall more, and the memory of them is not so easily obliterated. Arbutnot on Dith.

To FRET, v. n.

1. To be in commotion; to be agitated.

No benefits whatsoever shall ever alter or alloy that diabolical rancour, that frets and ferments in some hellish breasts, but that upon all occasions it will foam out at its foul mouth in slander and invective. South's Sermons.

Th' adjoining brook, that purls along

The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock,

Now scarcely moving through a reedy pool. Thomf. Summ.

2. To be worn away; to be corroded.

Take a piece of gloves leather that is very thin, and put your gold therein, binding it close, and then hang it up: the sal armoniack will fret away, and the gold remain behind.

Pencham on Drawing.

3. To make way by attrition.

These do but indeed scrape off the extuberances, or fret into the wood, and therefore they are very seldom used to soft wood. Mason's Mech. Exerc.

It inflamed and swelled very much; many wheals arose, and fretted one into another with great excoiation. Wisenan.

4. To be angry; to be peevish; to vex himself.

They trouble themselves with fretting at the ignorance of such as withstand them in their opinion. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

We are in a fretting mind at the church of Rome, and with angry disposition enter into cogitation. Hooker.

Helpless, what may it boot

FRI

To fret for anger, or for grief to moan. Fairy Queen.

Their wounded steeds

Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage

Yerk out their armed heels at their dead matters. Sh. H. V.

Be lion-mettled, proud, and take no care

Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are. Sh. Macb.

His heart frets against the Lord. Prov. xix. 3.

Hudibras fretting

Conquest should be so long a getting.

Drew up his force. Hudibras, b. i. cant. 2.

He swells with wrath, he makes outrageous moan,

He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground. Dryd.

How should I fret to mangle ev'ry line,

In reverence to the fins of thirty-nine. Pope.

FRETFUL, adj. [from fret.] Angry; peevish; in a state of vexation.

Thy knotty and combined locks to part,

And each particular hair to stand on end,

Like quills upon the fretful porcupine. Shaksp. Hamlet.

Where's the king?

—Contending with the fretful elements;

Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea. Shaksp. K. Lear.

They are extremely fretful and peevish, never well at rest;

but always calling for this or that, or changing their posture of lying or sitting. Harvey on Consumption.

Are you positive and fretful?

Headless, ignorant, forgetful? Swift.

FRETFULLY, adv. [from fretful.] Peevishly.

FRETFULNESS, n. f. [from fretful.] Passion; peevishness.

FRETTRY, adj. [from fret.] Adorned with raised work.

FRIABILITY, n. f. [from friable.] Capacity of being reduced to powder.

Hardness, friability, and power to draw iron, are qualities to be found in a loadstone. Lavie.

FRIABLE, adj. [friable, French; friabilis, Latin.] Easily crumbled; easily reduced to powder.

A spongy excrecence growth upon the roots of the laser tree, and sometimes on cedar, very white, light, and friable, which we call agarick. Bacon's Natural History.

The liver, of all the viscera, is the most friable, and easily crumbled or dissolved. Arbutnot on Dith.

FRIAR, n. f. [A corruption of frater, French.] A religious;

a brother of some regular order.

Holy Franciscan friar! brother! ho! Sh. Rom. and Jul.

All the priests and friars in my realm,

Shall in procession sing her endless praise. Shaksp. H. VI.

He says he's but a friar, but he's big enough to be a pope.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Many jesuits and friars went about, in the disguise of Presbyterian and Independent ministers, to preach up rebellion. Swift.

A friar would needs shew his talent in Latin. Swift.

FRIARLIKE, adj. [from friar.] Monastic; unskilled in the world.

Their friarlike general would the next day make one holy-day in the Christian calendars, in remembrance of thirty thousand Hungarian martyrs slain of the Turks. Kneller's History.

FRIARLY, adv. [friar and like.] Like a friar, or man untaught in life.

Seek not proud riches, but such as thou may'st get justly, use soberly, distribute cheerfully, and leave contentedly; yet have no abstract nor friarlike contempt of them. Bacon's Essays.

FRIARSCOWL, n. f. [friar and cowl.] A plant.

It agrees with the dragon and arum, from both which it differs only in having a flower resembling a cowl.

FRIARY, n. f. [from friar.] A monastery or convent of friars.

FRIARY, adj. Like a friar.

Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow when he had sweetly invented to signify his name, St. Francis, with a friary cowl in a cornfield. Camden's Remains.

To FRIEBLE, v. n. To trifle.

Though cheats, yet more intelligible

Than those that with the stars do fribble. Hudibras, p. ii.

FRIEBLER, n. f. [from the verb.] A trifier.

A fribler is one who professes rapture for the woman, and dreads her consent. Spectator, N° 288.

FRICASSEE, n. f. [French.] A dish made by cutting chickens or other small things in pieces, and dressing them with strong sauce.

Oh, how would Homer praise their dancing dogs,

Their stinking cheese, and fricacy of frogs!

He'd raise no tables, sing no fragrant lyes,

Of boys with cuttard choak'd at Newberry. King.

FRICTION, n. f. [fricatio, Latin.] The act of rubbing one thing against another.

Gentle friction draweth forth the nourishment, by making the parts a little hungry, and heating them: this friction I wish to be done in the morning. Bacon's Natural History.

Refinuous or uncious bodies, and such as will flame, attract vigorously, and most thereof without friction, as good hard wax,

FRI

wax, which will convert the needle almost as actively as the loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 4.

FRICTION, n. f. [frictio, Fr. frictio, from frico, Latin.]

1. The act of rubbing two bodies together.

Do not all bodies which abound with terrestrial parts, and especially with sulphureous ones, emit light as often as those parts are sufficiently agitated, whether the agitation be made by heat, friction, percussion, putrefaction, or by any vital motion? Newton's Opt.

2. The resistance in machines caused by the motion of one body upon another.

Medical rubbing with the fleshbrush or cloaths.

Frictions make the parts more fleshy and full, as we see both in men and in the currying of horses; for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits to the parts. Bacon.

FRI'DAY, n. f. [frige dæg, Saxon.] The sixth day of the week, so named of Freya, a Saxon deity.

An' she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday. Shaksp. As You Like It.

For Venus, like her day, will change her cheer,

And seldom shall we see a Friday clear. Dryden.

FRIEND, n. f. [friend, Dutch; friend, Saxon.] This word, with its derivatives, is pronounced friend, friendly: the f is totally neglected.

1. One joined to another in mutual benevolence and intimacy: opposed to foe or enemy.

Friends of my soul, you twain

Rule in this realm, and the god's state sustain. Shaksp.

Some man is a friend for his own occasion, and will not abide in the day of thy trouble. Eccly. vi. 8.

God's benison go with you, and with those

That would make good of bad, and friends of foes. Shaksp.

Wonder not to see this foul extend

The bounds, and seek some other self, a friend. Dryden.

2. One without hostile intentions.

Who comes to fast in silence of the night?

—A friend. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

—What friend? your name? Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

3. One reconciled to another: this is put by the custom of the language somewhat irregularly in the plural number.

He's friends with Caesar.

In state of health thou say'st, and thou say'st free.

My son came then into my mind; and yet my mind

Was then scarce friends with him. Shak. King Lear.

4. An attendant, or companion.

The king ordains their entrance, and ascends

His regal seat, surrounded by his friends. Dryden's En.

5. Favourer; one propitious.

Aurora riding upon Pegafus, sheweth her swiftness, and how she is a friend to poetry and all ingenious inventions. Peacham.

6. A familiar compellation.

Friend, how comest thou in hither?

What supports me, do'st thou ask?

The confidence, friend, I have lost mine eyes o'erly'd

In liberty's defence. Milton.

To FRIEND, v. a. [from the noun.] To favour; to befriend;

to countenance; to support.

I know that we shall have him well to friend. Shaksp.

When vice makes mercy, mercy's to extended,

That for the fault's love, is th' offender friended. Shaksp.

FRIENDLESS, adj. [from friend.]

1. Wanting friends; wanting support; without countenance;

destitute

FRI

- The mind fright itself with any thing reflected on in gross, and at a distance: things thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty. Locke.
- Whence glaring oft with many a broaden'd orb,
He *fright*s the nations. Thomson's Autumn.
- FRIGHT, n. f. [from the verb.] A sudden terror.
You, if your goodness does not plead my cause,
May think I broke all hospitable laws,
To bear you from your palace-yard by might,
And put your noble person in a fright. Dryden.
- To FRIGHTEN, v. a. To terrify; to shock with dread.
The rugged bear's, or spotted lynx's brood,
Frighten the valleys and infest the wood. Prior.
- FRIGHTFUL, adj. [from fright.]
1. Terrible; dreadful; full of terror.
Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy,
Thy schooldays frightful, deep rate, wild, and furious. Shak.
Without aid you durst not undertake
This frightful passage o'er the Stygian lake. Dryden's En.
- FRIGHTFULLY, adv. [from frightful.]
1. Dreadfully, horribly.
This will make a prodigious mass of water, and looks fright- fully to the imagination; 'tis huge and great. Burnet.
2. Disagreeably; not beautifully. A woman's word.
Then to her glass; and Betty, pray,
Don't I look frightfully to-day? Swift.
- FRIGHTFULNESS, n. f. [from frightful.] The power of impressing terror.
- FRIGID, adj. [from frigidus, Latin.]
1. Cold; without warmth. In this sense it is seldom used but in science.
In the torrid zone the heat would have been intolerable, and in the frigid zones the cold would have destroyed both animals and vegetables. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
2. Without warmth of affection.
3. Impotent; without warmth of body.
4. Dull; without fire of fancy.
If justice Phillip's covise head
Some frigid rhymes disburles,
They shall like Persian tales be read,
And glad both babes and nurses. Swift.
- FRIGIDITY, n. f. [from frigiditas, Latin.]
1. Coldness; want of warmth.
2. Dullness; want of intellectual fire.
Driving at these as at the highest elegancies, which are but the frigidities of wit. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 9.
Of the two extremes, one would sooner pardon phrenzy than fridity. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.
3. Want of corporeal warmth.
The boiling blood of youth agitating the fluid air, hinders that serenity which is necessary to so severe an intentness; and the fridity of decrepit age is as much its enemy, by reason of its dulling moisture. Glanville's Scipio, c. 14.
- FRIGIDLY, adv. [from frigid.] Coldly; dully; without affection.
- FRIGIDNESS, n. f. [from frigid.] Coldness; dullness; want of affection.
- FRIGORIFICK, adj. [from frigorificus, frigus and facio, Lat.] Causing cold. A word used in science.
Frigorific atoms or particles mean those nitrous salts which float in the air in cold weather, and occasion freezing. Quincy.
- To FRILL, v. a. [from frillare, French.] To quake or shiver with cold. Used of a hawk; as, the hawk frills. Dict.
- FRINGE, n. f. [from fringe, Italian; frange, French.] Ornamental appendages added to drests or furniture.
Those offices and dignities were but the facings or fringes of his greatness. Watson.
- The golden fringe ev'n set the ground on flame,
And drew a precious trail. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.
- The shadows of all bodies, in this light, were bordered with three parallel fringes, or bands of coloured light, whereof that which was contiguous to the shadow was broadest and most luminous; and that which was remotest from it was narrowest, and so faint as not easily to be visible. Newton's Opt.
- To FRINGE, v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with fringes;
to decorate with ornamental appendages.
Either side of the bank, fringed with most beautiful trees, refilled the sun's darts. Sidney, b. ii.
- Of silver wings he took a shining pair,
Fringed with gold. Fairfax, Stan. 14.
- Here, by the sacred bramble ting'd,
My petticoat is doubly fring'd. Swift.
- FRIPPERER, n. f. [from frippier, French.] One who deals in old things vamped up.
- FRIPPERY, n. f. [from frippier, French; frippieria, Italian.]
1. The place where old cloaths are sold.
Oh, oh, monster, we know what belongs to a frippery.
Shakespeare's Tempest.
- Lurana is a frippery of bankrupts, who fly thither from Drum to play their after-game. Houel's Vocal Portress.

FRI

2. Old cloaths; cast dresses; tattered rags.
Poor poet ape, that would be thought our chief,
Whose works are e'en the frippery of wit;
From brocade is become so bold a thief,
As we, the robb'd, leave rage, and pity it. Ben. Johnson.
- The fighting-place now searments rags supply,
And all the tackling is a frippery. Danne.
- Ragfair is a place near the Tower of London, where old cloaths and frippery are sold. Notes to Pope's Dunciad.
- To FRISK, v. n. [from frizzare, Italian.]
1. To leap; to skip.
Put water into a glass, and wet your finger, and draw it round about the lip of the glass, pressing it somewhat hard; and after drawing it some few times about, it will make the water frisk and sprinkle up in a fine dew. Leaon's Nat. Hist.
- The fish sell a frisking in the net. Leaon's Nat. Hist.
- Whether every one hath experimented this troublesome intrusion of some frisking ideas, which thus importune the understanding, and hinder it from being better employed, I know not. Locke.
2. To dance in frolic or gaiety.
We are as twin'd lamb, that did frisk 't' th' sun,
And bleat the one at the other: what we chang'd,
Was innocence for innocence; we knew not
The doctrine of ill-doing. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
- About them frisking play'd
All beasts of th' earth. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.
- A wanton heifer frisk'd up and down in a meadow, at ease and pleasure. Leaon's Nat. Hist.
- Watch the quick motions of the frisking tail,
Then serve their fury with the ruffling mane. Dryd. Virgil.
- So Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,
And beafts in gambols frisk'd before their honest god. Dryd.
- Oft to the mountains airy tops advanc'd,
The frisking satyrs on the summits danc'd. Addison.
- Those merry blades,
That frisk it under Pindus' shades. Prior.
- Peg faints at the found of an organ, and yet will dance and frisk at the noise of a bagpipe. Arbutnot. Hist. of John Bull.
- Sly hunters thus, in Borneo's ile,
To catch a monkey by a wile,
The mimic animal amuse;
They place before him gloves and shoes;
Which when the brute puts aukward on,
All his agility is gone:
In vain to frisk or climb he tries;
The huntmen seize the grinning prize. Swift.
- FRISK, n. f. [from the verb.] A frolic; a fit of wanton gaiety.
- FRISKER, n. f. [from frisk.] A wanton; one not constant or settled.
- Now I will wear this, and now I will wear that;
Now I will wear I cannot tell what:
All new fashions be pleasant to me:
Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;
What should I do but bet cock on the hoop? Camden.
- FRISKINESS, n. f. [from frisk.] Gaiety; liveliness. A low word.
- FRISKY, adj. [from frisque, French, from frisk.] Gay; airy. A

- FRITH, n. f. [from frithum, Latin.]
1. A strait of the sea where the water being confined is rough.
What desperate madman then would venture o'er
The frith, or haul his cables from the shore? Dryd. Virg.
- Batavian flets
Defraud us of the glittering funny swarms
That heave our friths, and crowd upon our shores. Thomson.
2. A kind of net. I know not whether this sense be now retained.
The Wear is a frith, reaching through the Ofte, from the land to low water mark, and having in it a bunt or cod with an eye-hook; where the fish entering, upon their coming back with the ebb, are stopp'd from issuing out again. Cureau.
- FRITILLARY, n. f. [from frutillare, French.] A plant.
The flower consists of six leaves, and is of the bell-shaped lily flowers, pendulous, naked, and, for the most part, chequered: the style of the flower becomes an oblong fruit, divided into three cells, and filled with flat seeds, lying in a double row: the root consists of two fleshy knobs, for the most part semi-globular, betwixt which arises the flower-stalk. Miller.
- FRITINANCY, n. f. [from frutimnis, Latin.] The scream of an insect, as the cricket or cicada.

- FROLICK, adj. [from vrolijk, Dutch.] Gay; full of levity; full of pranks.
We fairies, that do run
By the triple Hecate's team,
From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are frolick. Shakespeare's Midsum. Night's Dream.
- Whether, as some fages sing,
The frolick wind that breathes the Spring,
Zephyr with Aurora playing,
As he met her once a Maying;
There on beds of violets blue,
And fresh-blown roses walk'd in dew,
Fill'd her with thee a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonnaire. Milton.
- Who ripe, and frolick of his full-grow'n age,
Roving the Celtic and Iberian fields,
At last betakes him to this ominous wood. Milton.
- The gay, the frolick, and the loud. Waller.
- FROLICK, n. f. [from the adjective.] A wild prank; a flight of whim and levity.
He would be at his frolick once again;
And his pretensions to divinity. Roscommon.

out by discourse, and drawn from out of the very bowels of heaven and earth. Hooker, b. i. f. 8.
41. From under.
He, though blind of sight,
Despis'd, and thought extinguish'd quite,
With inward eyes illuminated,
His fiery virtue rous'd
From under ashes into sudden flame. Milton's Agonistes.
42. From within.
From within
The broken bowels, and the bloated skin,
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms. Dryd. Virg. Ger.
From within, [ppam and jeape, Saxon.] Away from;
the contrary to the word towards.
As cheerfully going towards as Pyrocles went froward fromward his death. Sidney.
The common horizontal needle is continually varying towards East and West; and so the dipping or inclining needle is varying up and down, towards or fromward the zenith.

And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser's Pastoral.
- FROST. n. f. [froste, Saxon.]
1. The last effect of cold; the power or act of congelation.
This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
When the frost seizes upon wine, only the more waterish parts are congealed: there is a mighty spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression. Saunders's Sermons.
2. The appearance of plants and trees sparkling with congelation of dew.
Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost. Pope's Winter.

of the hoar frost upon plants.
The rich broadcated silk unfold,
Where rising flow'rs grow stiff with frost'd gold. Gay.
- FROSTILY. adv. [from frostily.]
1. With frost; with excessive cold.
2. Without warmth of affection.
Counting, I rather thou should'st utterly Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily. Ben. Johnson.
- FROSTINESS. n. f. [from frostily.] Cold; freezing cold.
- FROSTNAIL. n. f. [frost and nail.] A nail with a prominent head driven into the horse's shoes, that it may pierce the ice.
The claws are frait only to take hold, for better progression; as a horse that is shod with frostnails. Grew's Cermal.
- FROSTWORK. n. f. [frost and work.] Work in which the substance is laid on with inequalities, like the dew congealed upon shrubs.
By nature shap'd to various figures, those
The fruitful rain, and these the hail compose;
The snowy fleece and curious frostwork these,
Produce the dew, and those the gentle breeze. Blackmore.
- FROSTY. adj. [from frost.]
1. Having the power of congelation; excessive cold.
For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd,
Be pitiful to my condemned sons. Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus.
The air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely; as fire scorseth in frosty weather. Eacm.
A goat, half starved with cold and hunger, went out one frosty morning to a bee-hive. L'Estrange.
2. Chill in affection; without warmth of kindness or courage.
What a frosty spirited rogue is this! Shakespeare, Henry IV.
3. Hoary; gray-haired; resembling frost.
Where is loyalty?
If it be banish'd from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth? Shak. H. VI.
- FROTH. n. f. [free, Danish and Scottish.]
1. Spume; foam; the bubbles caused in liquors by agitation.
His hideous tail then hurled he about,
And therewith all enwrapt the nimble thighs
Of his froth foamy fleed. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 11.
When wind expieth from under the sea, as it causeth some refounding of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of froth. Bacon's Nat. History.
Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to thunders dash'd, th' assault renew;
Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton's Pa. Reg.
The useless froth swims on the surface, but the pearl lies covered with a mass of waters. Glenn, Sept. c. 9.

The scatter'd ocean flies;
Black sands, discolour'd frath, and mingled mud arise. Dry.
They were the frath my raging folly mov'd
When it boil'd up; I knew not then I lov'd, Yet then lov'd most.
If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mingled, let water, a little thickened with soap, be agitated to raise a frath; and after that frath has stood a little, there will appear, to one that shall view it intently, various colours every where in the surfaces of the several bubbles; but to one that shall go to far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole frath will grow white, with a perfect whiteness.

A painter, having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the loose frath about his mouth and his bridle; and after many unsuccessful essays, despairing to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage threw a sponge at it, all besmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist.

2. Any empty or senseless show of wit or eloquence.
3. Any thing not hard, solid, or substantial.
Who catch his veal, pig and lamb being frath,
Shall twice in a week go to bed without broth. Tuss. Husb.
To FROTH. v. n. [from the noun.] To foam; to throw out spume; to generate spume.

He frets within, fraths treason at his mouth,
And churns it through his teeth. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

FROTHILY. adv. [from frathy.]
1. With foam; with spume.
2. In an empty trifling manner.

FROTHY. adj. [from frath.]
1. Full of foam, froth, or spume.
The sap of trees is of differing natures; some watery and clear, as vines, beeches, pears; some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some frothy, as elms.

Behold a frathy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies.

2. Soft; not solid; waiting.
Their bodies are so solid and hard as you need not fear that bathing should make them frathy. Bacon's Natural History.

3. Vain; empty; trifling.
What's a voluptuous dinner, and the frathy vanity of discourse that commonly attends these pompous entertainments?

What is it but a mortification, to a man of sense and virtue?

FRO'WARDNESS. n. f. [from forward.] Peevishness; perverseness.

How many forwardnesses of ours does he smother? how many indignities does he pass by? how many affronts does he put up at our hands?

The warmth of youth and forwardness of age. Addis. Cat.
Fro'ward. n. f. [I know not the etymology.] A cleaving tool.

A fraser of iron for cleaving of lath,
With roll for a sawpit, good husbandry hath. Tuss. Husb.
To FROWN. v. a. [from fruer, old French, to wrinkle, Skin- ner.] To express displeasure by contracting the face to wrinkles; to look stern.

Say, that the frowns; I'll say, the looks are clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shakespeare.
They clasp their magistrates;
And such a one as he, who puts his snail,
His popular snail, against a graver bench

Than ever frown'd.
How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet on? You are too much of late 'till frown.

Thou wait a pretty fellow, when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Heroes in animated marble frown. Pope.

The wood,
Whose shady horrors on a rising brow
Wav'd high, and fr-wild upon the stream below. Pope.

FROWN. n. f. [from the verb.] A wrinkled look; a look of displeasure.

Patiently endure that frown of fortune, and by some notable exploit win again her favour. Kneller's History of the Turk.
In his half-clos'd eyes

Stern vengeance yet and hostile terror stand;
His front yet threatens, and his frowns command. Prior.

FRO'WNINGLY. adv. [from frown.] Sternly; with a look of displeasure.

What, look'd he frowningly?
—A countenance more in sorrow than in anger. Shak. Ham.
Fro'w. adj. Muffy; mossy. This word is now not used;
but instead of it frowzy.

But if they with thy gates should yede,
They soon might be corrupted;
Or like not of the frowzy fide,
Or with the weeds be glutted. Spenser's Pastoral.

FROZEN. part. pass. of freeze.
Against whom was the fine frozen knight, frozen in despair;
but his armour so naturally representing ice, and all his furniture so lively answering thereto, as yet did I never see any thing that pleased me better.

How dire a tempest from Mycenæ pour'd;
Our plains, our temples, and our town devour'd:
What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms
Shook Asia's crown with European arms;
Ev'n such have heard, if any such there be,
Whole earth is bounded by the frozen sea. Dryden's El.

Fierce Boreas, with his offspring, issues forth
To invade the frozen waggons of the North. Dryden's Ovid.
A cheerful blaze arose, and by the fire
They warm'd their frozen feet, and dry'd their wet attire.

FRO'CTIFEROUS. adj. [from fructifer, Latin.] Bearing fruit. Ans.
To FRUCTIFY. v. a. [from fructifere, French.] To make fruitful; to fertilize.

The legal levies the sovereign raises, are as vapours which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet showers to fructify the earth. Howell's Vocal Pursuit.

Where e'er she looks, behold some sudden birth
Adorns the trees, and fructifies the earth. Granville.

To FRUCTIFY. v. n. To bear fruit.
It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify; maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; and serveth as a most approved remedy against all foolish and heavy accidents which befall men in this present life. Hobbs.

Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or under them, the sun being horizontal to the poles. Brown's Vulgar Error.
FRUCTIFICATION. n. f. [from fructify.] The act of causing or of bearing fruit; fecundation; fertility.

That the sap doth powerfully rise in the Spring, to put the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many gallons of water may be drawn from a birch-tree, hath slender reason to doubt. Brown's Vulgar Error.

FRUCTUOUS. adj. [from fructuosus, Fr. from fructify.] Fruitful; fertile; impregnating with fertility.

Here to the fight
Apples of price, and plenteous sheaves of corn
Oft interlac'd occur; and both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'erabound! Phillips.

FRUGAL. adj. [from frugal, Latin; frugal, Fr.] Thrifty; sparing; parsimonious; not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.
If through mists he shoots his tullen beams,
Frugal of lights, in loofe and straggling streams, Suspect a drilling day. Dryden's Virgil's Georgicks.

FRUGALLY. adv. [from frugal.] Parsimoniously; sparingly; thriftily.
Mean time young Pafimond his marriage press'd,
And frugally resolv'd, the charge to thum,
To join his brother's bridal with his own. Dryden.

FRUGALITY. n. f. [from frugal, French; frugalitas, Latin.]
Thrift; parsimony; good husbandry.
As for the general sort of men, frugality may be the cause of drinking water; for that is no small saving, to pay nothing for one's drink.

Frugality and bounty too,
Those diff'ring virtues, meet in you. Waller.
In this frugality of your praises, some things I cannot omit. Dryden's Fables, Dedicati.
The boundaries of virtues are indivisible lines: it is impossible to march up close to the frontiers of frugality, without entering the territories of parsimony. Arbutnot's Join Ind.

FRUGIFEROUS. adj. [from frugifer, Latin.] Bearing fruit. Ans.
FRUIT. n. f. [from fructus, Latin; frucht, Welsh; fruit, French.]
1. The product of a tree or plant in which the seeds are contained.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of hateful quality. Shakspeare. Henry V.

2. That part of a plant which is taken for food.
By tasting of that fruit forbids,
Where they fought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.
See how the rising fruits the gardens crown,
Imbibe the sun, and make his light their own. Blackmore.

3. Production.
The fruit of the spirit is in all goodness and righteousness, and truth. Ez. v. 9.

4. The offspring of the womb; the young of any animal.
Can't thou their reck'nings keep? the time compute,
When their swollen bellies shall enlarge their fruit. Sandys.

5. Advantage gained by any enterprise or conduct.
What is become of all the king of Sweden's victories?
Where are the fruits of them at this day? Or of what benefit will they be to posterity? Swift.

Another fruit, from considering things in themselves, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him. Locke.

6. The effect or consequence of any action.
She blushed when she considered the effect of granting; she was pale, when she remembered the fruits of denying. Sidney.
They shall eat of the fruit of their own way. Prov. i. 31.
If I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour. Phillips.

FRUITAGE. n. f. [from fruitage, French.] Fruit collectively; various fruits.

In heav'n the trees
Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines Yield nectar. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Greedy they pluck'd
The fruitage, fair to sight, like that which grew Near that bituminous lake where Sodom flam'd. Milton.
What is more ordinary with them than the taking in flowers and fruitage for the garnishing of their work? More.

FRUITBEARER. n. f. [from fruit and bearer.] That which produces fruit.

Trees, especially fruitbearers, are often infected with the measles. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FRUITBEARING. adj. [from fruit and bear.] Having the quality of producing fruit.

By this way graft trees of different kinds one on another, as fruitbearing trees on those that bear not. Mort. Husbandry.

FRUITERER. n. f. [from fruitier, French.] One who trades in fruit.

I did fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's inn. Shakspeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

Walnuts the fruiterer's hand in Autumn stain;
Blue plums and juicy pears augment his gain. Gay.

FRUITERY. n. f. [from fruiterie, French.]
1. Fruit collectively taken.
Oft, notwithstanding all thy care
To help thy plants, on the small fruitery
Exempt from ills, an oriental blast Disastrous thins. Phillips.

2. A fruit-loft; a repository for fruit.

FRUITFUL. adj. [from fruit and full.]
1. Fertile; abundantly productive; liberal of product.
If the continued cruel, he could no more sustain his life than the earth remain fruitful in the sun's continual absence. Sidney, b. ii.

2. Actually bearing fruit.
Adonis' gardens,
That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next. Shakspeare.

Lady, by yonder blessed moon I vow,
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops. Shakespeare.
They took strong cities, possessed houses full of all goods, wells digged, vineyards and oliveyards, and fruit-trees in abundance. Neb. ix. 25.
All with a border of rich fruit-trees crown'd,
Whole loaded branches hide the lofty mound. Wallr.
FRUMENTICIOUS. adj. [from frumentum, Latin.] Made of grain.
FRUMENTY. n. f. [from frumentum, corn, Latin.] Food made of wheat boiled in milk.
To FRUMP. v. a. To mock; to browbeat. Skinner. Answer.
To FRUSH. v. a. [from fruster, French.] To break, bruise, or crush. Hammer.
I like thy armour well;
I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all.
But I'll be master of it. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
FRUSH. n. f. [from the verb.] A sort of tender horn that grows in the middle of the sole, and at some distance from the toe: it divides into two branches, running towards the heel, in the form of a fork. Ferriar's Dict.
FRUSTRA'NEOUS. adj. [from frustra, Latin.] Vain; useless; unprofitable; without advantage.
Their attempts being so frustraneous, and the demonstrations to the contrary so peripetuous, it is a marvel that any man, virtuously and piously disposed, should be so partially and zealously affected in a cause that has neither truth nor any honest usefulness in it. More's Divine Dialogues.
He timely withdraws his frustraneous baffled kindnesse, and sees the folly of endeavouring to stroke a tyger into a lamb, or to court an Ethiopian out of his colour. Saut's Sermons.
To FRUSTRA'LE. v. a. [from frustrare, Latin; frustrer, Fr.]
1. To defeat; to disappoint; to balk.
It is an axiom of nature, that natural desire cannot utterly be frustrate. Hesker, b. i.
I survive,
To mock the expectations of the world;
To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out
Rotten opinion, which hath writ me down
After my seeming. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will;
Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill. Dryden.
Not more almighty to resist our might,
Than wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles. Milt. P. Lost.
2. To make null; to nullify.
The act of parliament which gave all his lands to the queen, did cut off and frustrate all such conveyances. Spenser.
Now thou hast aveng'd
Supplanted Adam; and by vanquishing
Temptation, hast regain'd lost paradise,
And frustrate'd the conquest fraudulent. Milton's Par. Reg.
The peculiar strength of the motive may of itself perhaps contribute to frustrate the efficacy of it, rendering it liable to be suspected by him to whom it is addressed. Atterbury's Sermon.
FRUSTRA'LE. participial adj. [from the verb.]
1. Vain; ineffectual; useless; unprofitable.
He is drown'd
Whom thus we fray to find, and the sea mocks
Our frustrate search on land. Shakespeare's Tempest.
The ruler of the province of Judea being by Julian buffed in the re-edifying of this temple, flaming balls of fire issuing near the foundation, and oft consuming the workmen, made the enterprise frustrate. Raleigh's History.
All at once employ their thronging darts;
But out of order thrown, in air they join,
And multitude makes frustrate the design. Dryden's Ovid.
2. Null; void.
Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that, the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate. Hesker, b. v. f. 42.
FRUSTRA'TION. n. f. [from frustrare, Latin, from frustrare,] Disappointment; defeat.
In states notoriously irreligious, a secret and irresistible power countermands their deepest projects, splits their counsels, and smites their most refined policies with frustration and a curse. Saut's Sermons.
FRUSTRA'TIVE. adj. [from frustrate.] Fallacious; disappointing. Ainsworth.
FRUSTRATORY. adj. [from frustrate.] That which makes any procedure void; that which vacates any former process.

FRY. n. f. [from frye, foam, Danish. Skinner.]
1. The swarm of little fishes just produced from the spawn.
They come to us, but us love draws;
He swallows us, and never draws;
By him, as by chain'd shot, whole ranks do die;
He is the tyrant pike, and we the fry. Donne.
Fortwith the founts and seas, each creek and bays,
With fry innumerable swarm, and shoals

FUE

Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave in sculls, that oft Bank the mid-sea. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
The angler had the hap to draw up a very little fish from among the fry. L'Estrange.
So close behind some promontory lie
The huge leviathans, attend their prey;
And give no chase, but swallow in the fry.
Which through their gaping jaws mistake the way. Dryd.
Any swarm of animals; or young people in contempt.
Out of the fry of these rakehell horreboys, growing up in knavery and villany, are their kern continually supplied and maintained. Spenser on Ireland.
I hem before the fry of children young.
Their wanton sports and childish mirth did play,
And to the maidens founding timbrels sung. Fairy Queen.
Draw me no confessions there,
Nor dog, nor goat, nor bull, nor bear;
Nor any of that monstrous fry
Of animals that stock the sky. Oldham.
The young fry must be held at a distance, and kept under the discipline of contempt. Calder on Pride.
FRY. n. f. A kind of sieve.
He dresteth the duff from malt, by running it through a fan or fry. Morimer's Husbandry.
To FRY. v. a. [from frigo, Lat. frige, Welsh; frijck, Erie.] To dress food by roasting it in a pan on the fire.
To FRY. v. n.
1. To be roasted in a pan on the fire.
2. To suffer the action of fire.
So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom rise;
Above the brims they force their fiery way,
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day. Dryd. En.
3. To melt with heat.
Spices and gums about them melting fry,
And, phenix like, in that rich nest they die. Waller.
4. To be agitated like liquor in the pan on the fire.
Oil of sweet almonds, newly drawn with sugar, and a little spice, spread upon bread toasted, is an excellent nourisher; but then, to keep the oil from frying in the stomach, drink mild beer after it. Bacon's Natural History.
Where no ford he finds, no water fries,
Nor billows with unequal murmurs roar,
But smoothly slide along, and swell the shoar,
That course he steer'd. Dryden's En.
FRY. n. f. [from the verb.] A dish of things fried.
FRYINGPAN. n. f. [from fry and pan.] The vessel in which meat is roasted on the fire.
If I pass by sea, I may chance to fall from the fryingpan into the fire.
We understand by out of the fryingpan into the fire, that things go from bad to worse. L'Estrange.
A freeman of London has the privilege of disturbing a whole street, for an hour together, with the twinkling of a brass kettle or a fryingpan. Addison's Spectator.
To FRY. v. a. To put off; to delay by false pretences; to cheat. It is generally written foe. See Foe.
A hundred mark is a long lone for a poor lone woman to bear; and I have borne, and borne, and borne, and have been fudd'd off and fudd'd off from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
FUB. n. f. A plump chubby boy.
FUCATED. adj. [from fucatus, Latin.]
1. Painted; disguised with paint.
2. Disguised by false show.
FUCUS. n. f. [Latin.] Paint for the face.
Women chat
Of fucus this, and fucus that. Pen. Johnson.
Those who paint for debauchery should have the fucus pulled off, and the coarseness underneath discovered. Calder.
To FUD'DLE. v. a. [Of unknown etymology.] To make drunk.
Earnest brimming bowls
Leave every foul the table floating round,
And pavement faithless to the fuddled feet. Thomf. Autumn.
To FUD'DLE. v. n. To drink to excess.
Men, we see, will be whoring and fuddling on still. L'Estr.
FUEL. n. f. [from feu, fire, French.] The matter or aliment of fire.
This shall be with burning and fuel of fire. If. ix. 5.
This spark will prove a raging fire,
If word and fuel be brought to feed it with. Shak. H. VI.
Mov'd by my charms, with them your love may cease;
And as the fuel sinks, the flame decays. Pri.
To FUEL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To feed fire with combustible matter.
And yet he cannot waste by this,
Nor long endure this torturing wrong;
For more corruption needful is,
To fuel such a fever long. Donne.
Never,

FUG

Never, alas! the dreadful name
That fuel the infernal flame. Cowley.
The fuel'd chimney blazes wide. Thomson's Autumn.
2. To store with fringe.
Some are plainly economical, as that the seat be well watered, and well fuel'd. Watson's Architecture.

Fugilemorte colour signifies the colour of withered leaves in Autumn. Locke.
FUG'IOUSNESS. n. f. [from fugax, Latin.] Volatility; the quality of flying away.
FUGA'CITY. n. f. [from fugax, Latin.]
1. Volatility; quality of flying away.
Spirits and salts, which, by their fugacity, colour, smell, taste, and divers experiments that I purposely made to examine them, were like the salt and spirit of urine and foot. Boyle.
2. Uncertainty; instability.
FUGH. interj. [perhaps from Phi.] An expression of abhorrence.
A very filthy fellow: how odiously he smells of his country guilick! fiest, how he stinks of Spain! Dryd. Don Sebastian.
FUG'ITIVE. adj. [from fugitivus, French; fugitivus, Latin.]
1. Not tenable; not to be held or detained.
Our idea of infinity is a growing and fugitive idea, still in a boundless progression, that can stop no where. Locke.
Happines, object of that waking dream,
Which we call life, mistaking: fugitive theme
Of my pursuing verse, ideal shade,
Notional good, by fancy only made. Prior.
2. Unsteady; unstable; not durable.
3. Volatile; apt to fly away.
The more tender and fugitive parts, the leaves, of many of the more sturdier vegetables, fall off for want of the supply from beneath: those only which are more tenacious, making a shift to subsist without such recruit. Woodward's Nat. History.
4. Flying; running from danger.
Whilst yet with Parthian blood thy sword is warm,
The fugitive Parthians follow. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
The Trojan chief
Thrice fugitive about Troy wall. Milton.
5. Flying from duty; falling off.
Can a fugitive daughter enjoy herself, while her parents are in tears? Clarissa.
6. Wandering; runagate; vagabond.
It was the most malicious surmise that had ever been brewed, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet of a fugitive physician. Watson.
FUG'ITIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. One who runs from his station or duty.
Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects; for they are light to run away, and almost all fugitives are of that condition. Bacon's Essay 8.
Back to thy punishment,
False fugitive! and to thy speed add wings,
Left with a whip of scorpions pursue Thy ling'ring. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
We understand by some fugitives that he hath commanded
The generals to return with victory, or expect A shameful death. Danham's Sophy.
2. One who takes shelter under another power from punishment.
There are also in this realm of England too many, which, being men of good inheritance, are fled beyond the seas, where they live under princes which are her majesty's professed enemies; and converse and are confederates with other traitors and fugitives, which are there abiding. Spenser on Ireland.
Your royal highness is too great and too just a monarch either to want or to receive the homage of rebellious fugitives. Dryden.
FUGITIVENESS. n. f. [from fugitive.]
1. Volatility; fugacity.
That divers falses, emerging upon the analysis of many concretes, are very volatile, is plain from the fugitiveness of salt and of hartshorn ascending in distillation. Boyle.
2. Instability; uncertainty.
FUGUE. n. f. [French, from fuga, Latin.] In musick, some point consisting of four, five, six, or any other number of notes begun by some one single part, and then seconded by a third, fourth, fifth and sixth part, if the composition consists of so many; repeating the same, or such like notes, so that the several parts follow, or come in one after another in the same manner, the leading parts still flying before those that follow. Harvis.
The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and traduction. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The skilful organist plies his grave and fancied descant in lofty fugues; or through the whole symphony artful and unimagined touches adorn and grace the well-studied chords of some choice composer. Milton on Education.
His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high,

FUL

Fled, and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milt. P. L.
Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire. Addison.
FULCIMENT. n. f. [from fulcimen, fulcimentum, Latin.] That on which a body rests, which acts or is acted upon at each end, as a balance or a lever.
The power that equiperates with any weight, must have the same proportion unto it as there is betwixt their several distances from the center or fulciment. Wilkins.
To FULFIL. v. a. [from ful and fill.]
1. To fill till there is no room for more. This sense is now not used.
Six gates it th' city, with massy staples,
And correlative and fulfilling bolts,
Sparre up the sons of Troy. Shak. Troil. and Cressida, Prol.
2. To answer any prophecy or promise by performance.
They knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him. Acts xiii. 27.
The fury bath'd them in each other's blood;
Then, having fix'd the fight, exulting flies,
And bears fulfill'd her promise to the skies. Dryden's En.
3. To answer any purpose or design.
Here nature seems fulfill'd in all her ends. Milt. P. Lost.
4. To answer any desire by compliance or gratification.
If on my wounded breast thou drop'st a tear,
Think for whole fave my breast that wound did bear;
And faithfully my last desires fulfill.
As I perform my cruel father's will. Dryden's Ovid.
5. To answer any law by obedience.
Love worketh no ill to his neighbour, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law. Ro. xiii. 10.
This I my glory account,
My exaltation, and my whole delight,
That thou in me well-pleas'd, declar'st it thy will Fulfill'd, which to fulfill is all my bliss. Addison's Par. Lost.
FULFRAUGHT. adj. [from ful and fraught.] Fully stored.
Thy fall hath left a kind of blot
To mark the fulf-raught man, the best endu'd,
With some suspicion. Shakespeare's Henry V.
FULG'ENCY. n. f. [from fulgens, Latin.] Splendour; glitter. DiD.
FULG'ENT. adj. [from fulgens, Latin.] Shining; dazzling; exquisitely bright.
As from a cloud, his fulgent head,
And shape star-bright, appear'd. Addison's Paradise Lost.
The illumination is not so bright and fulgent as to obscure or extinguish all perceptibility of reason. Adore's Divine Dial.
FULGID. adj. [from fulgidus, Latin.] Shining; glittering; dazzling.
FULGIDITY. n. f. [from fulgid.] Splendour; dazzling glitter. DiD.
FULGOUR. n. f. [from fulgor, Latin.]
1. Splendour; dazzling brightness like that of lightning.
Glow-worms alive project a lustre in the dark; which fulgour, notwithstanding, ceaseth after death. Brown.
When I set my eyes on this side of things, there shines from them such an intellectual fulgour, that methinks the very glory of the Deity becomes visible through them. More.
FULGURATION. n. f. [from fulguratio, Latin.] The act of lightning.
FULHAM. n. f. A cant word for false dice. Hammer.
Let vultures gripe thy guts, for gourd and Fulham's hold,
And high and low beguile the rich and poor. Shakespeare.
FULGINOUS. adj. [from fuliginosus, Fr. fuliginosus, Lat.] Sooty; smoky.
The leaf of burrage hath an excellent spirit to repress the fuliginous vapours of dufky melancholy, and so cure madness. Bacon's Natural History.
Whereas history should be the torch of truth, he makes her in divers places a fuliginous link of lies. Howel.
FULMART. n. f. [This word, of which Skinner observes that he found it only in this passage, seems to mean the same with faat.] A kind of flinking ferret.
The fiesbat, the fulmart, and the ferret, live upon the face, and within the bowels of the earth. Watson's Angler.
FULL. adj. [from fulle, Saxon; vol, Dutch.]
1. Replete; without vacuity; without any space void.
Better is an handful with quietness than both the hands full with travel and vexation of spirit. Ecc. iv. 6.
2. Abounding in any quality good or bad.
With pretence from Strephon her to guard,
He met her full, but full of warefulness. Sidney.
You should tread a course
Pretty and full of view. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, are full of inconvenience; for they taint business through want of secrecy, and they export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon's Essay 49.
In that sweet season, as in bed I lay,
9 Y
I turn'd

FUL

- I turn'd my weary side, but still in vain,
Though full of youthful health and void of pain. Dryden.
He is full of wants which he cannot supply, and compass'd about with infirmities which he cannot remove. Tillotson, Sermon.
From yon bright heaven our author fetch'd his fire,
And paints the passions that your eyes inspire;
Full of that flame, his tender scenes he warms,
And frames his goddesses by your matchless charms. Granville.
3. Stored with any thing; well supplied with any thing.
Full of days was he; Tickell.
Two ages past, he liv'd the third to see.
4. Plump; faginated; fat.
A gentleman of a full body having broken his skin by a fall, the wound inflamed. Wifeman's Surgery.
5. Saturated; fated.
I am full of the burnt offerings of rams. Isa. i. 11.
The alteration of scenes feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object. Bacon.
6. Crowded in the imagination or memory.
Every one is full of the miracles done by cold baths on de-cayed and weak constitutions. Lacke.
7. That which fills or makes full; large; great in effect.
Water diggeth a full meal sooner than any other liquor.
8. Complete; such as that nothing further is desired or wanted.
That day had seen the full accomplishment
Of all his travels. Daniel's Civil War.
Being tried at that time only with a promise, he gave full credit to that promise, and still gave evidence of his fidelity as fast as occasions were offered. Hammond's Pract. Catechism.
The resurrection of Jesus from the dead hath given the world full assurance of another life. Tillotson, Sermon 5.
9. Complete without abatement; at the utmost degree.
At the end of two full years Pharaoh dreamed. Genesis.
After hard riding plunge the horses into water, and allow them to drink as they please; but gallop them full speed, to warm the water in their bellies. Swift's Direct. to the Groom.
10. Containing the whole matter; expressing much.
Where my expressions are not so full as his, either our language or my art were defective; but where mine are fuller than his, they are but the imperfections which the often reading of him hath left upon my thoughts. Denham.
Should a man go about with never so set study to describe such a natural form of the year before the deluge as that which is at present established, he could scarcely do it in so few words, so fit and proper, so full and express. Woodward.
11. Strong; not faint; not attenuated.
I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart;
but the saying is true, the empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Barrels placed under the floor of a chamber, make all noises in the same more full and resounding. Bacon's Nat. History.
Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line, Pope.
12. Mature; perfect.
In the sultanry of the Mamelukes, slaves reigned over families of free men; and much like were the case, if you suppose a nation, where the custom were that after full age the sons should expulse their fathers and mothers out of their possessions. Bacon's Holy War.
13. [Applied to the moon.] Complete in its orb.
Towards the full moon, as he was coming home one morning, he felt his legs faulter. Wifeman's Surgery.
14. Noting the conclusion of any matter, or a full stop.
Therewith he ended, making a full point of a hearty figh. Sidney.
15. Spread to view in all dimensions.
Till about the end of the third century, I do not remember to have seen the head of a Roman emperor drawn with a full face; they always appear in profile. Addison on Medals.
FULL, n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. Complete measure; freedom from deficiency.
When we return,
We'll see those things effected to the full. Shak. Henry VI.
He liked the pomp and absolute authority of a general well, and preserved the dignity of it to the full. Clarendon, b. viii.
The picture of Ptolemy Philopater is given by the foremen-tioned authors to the full. Dryden's Preface to Cleomenes.
Sicilian tortures and the brazen bull,
Are emblems, rather than express the full
Of what he feels. Dryden's Pers. Sat. iii.
If where the rules not far enough extend,
Some lucky licence answer to the full. Pope's Criticism.
2. The highest state or degree.
The swan's down feather,
That stands upon the swell at full of tide, Neither way inclines. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
3. The whole; the total.
The king hath won, and hath sent out
A speedy pow'r to encounter you, my lord:
This is the news at full. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

FUL

- But what at full I know, thou know'st no part;
I knowing all my peril, thou no art. Shakespeare.
4. The state of being full.
When I had fed them to the full. Jer. v. 7.
5. [Applied to the moon.] The time in which the moon makes a perfect orb.
Brains in rabbits, woodcocks, and calves, are fullest in the full of the moon. Bacon's Natural History.
FULL, adv.
1. Without abatement.
In the unity of place they are full as scrupulous; for many of their critics limit to that very spot of ground where the play is supposed to begin. Dryden's Dramatick Poessy.
A modest blush he wears, not form'd by art;
Free from deceit his face, and full as free his heart. Dryden.
The most judicious writer is sometimes mistaken after all his care; but the hasty critic, who judges on a view, is full as liable to be deceived. Dryden's Aurengz. Preface.
Since you may
Suspect my courage, if I should not lay,
The pawn I proffer shall be full as good. Dryd. Virg. Paj.
2. With the whole effect.
'Tis the pencil, thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth to express the foam, which the painter, with all his skill, could not perform without it. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony,
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.
3. Exactly.
Full in the centre of the sacred wood,
An arm ariseth of the Stygian flood. Addison on Italy.
Full nineteen sailors did the ship convey,
A shoal of nineteen dolphins round her play. Addis. Ovid.
4. Directly.
He met her full, but full of warefulness. Sidney.
He then confronts the bull,
And on his ample forehead aiming full,
The deadly stroke descending pierc'd the skull. Dryden.
At length resolv'd, he throws with all his force
Full at the temples of the warrior horse. Dryden's Enn.
5. It is placed before adverbs and adjectives, to intend or strengthen their signification.
Why on your shield, so goodly fear'd,
Bear ye the picture of that lady's head?
Full lively is the semblant, though the substance dead. F. 2.
I was set at work
Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking Either for such men or such business. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Full well ye reject the commandment. Mar. vi. 9.
Adam was all in tears, and to his guide
Lamenting turn'd full sad. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
You full little think that you must be the beginner of the discourse yourself. Mare's Divine Dialogues.
Full little thought of him the gentle knight. Dryden.
Full well the god his filer's envy knew,
And what her aims and what her arts pursue. Dryden.
There is a perquisite full as honest, by which you have the best part of a bottle of wine for yourself.
FULL is much used in composition to intimate any thing arrived at its highest state, or utmost degree.
FULL-BLOWN, adj. [full and blown.]
1. Spread to the utmost extent, as a perfect blossom.
My glories are past danger; they're full-blown:
Things, that are blasted, are but in the bud. Denb. Sophy.
My full-blown youth already fades apace;
Of our short being 'tis the shortest space! Dryden's Juven.
2. Stretched by the wind to the utmost extent.
He who with bold Cratinus is inspir'd,
With zeal and equal indignation fir'd;
Who at enormous villany turns pale,
And steers against it with a full-blown sail. Dryd. Pers. Sat.
FULL-NOTOMED, adj. [full and bottom.] Having a large bottom.
I was obliged to sit at home in my morning-gown, having pawned a new suit of cloaths and a full-bottomed wig for a sum of money. Guardian, No. 166.
FULL-EX'ERD, [full and ear.] Having the heads full of grain.
As flames roll'd by the winds conspiring force,
O'er full-ear'd corn, or torrents raging course. Denham.
FULL-EYED, [full and eye.] Having large prominent eyes.
FULL-FE'D, [full and fed.] Sated; fat; faginated.
All as a partridge plump, full-fed and fair,
She form'd this image of well-bodied air. Pope's Dunciad.
FULL-LADEN, [full and laden.] Laden 'till there can be no more.
It were unfit that so excellent a reward as the Gospel promises should stoop down, like fruit upon a full-laden bough, to be plucked by every idle and wanton hand. Tillotson's Sermon.

FULL-SPREAD

FUL

- FULL-SPREAD, [full and spread.] Spread to the utmost extent.
How easy 'tis, when destiny proves kind,
With full-spread sails to run before the wind;
But those that gainst stiff gales lavecoring go,
Must be at once resolv'd and skilful too. Dryden.
FULL-SUMMED, [full and summ'd.] Complete in all its parts.
The time was that the cedar stretched forth his imperial branches as far as the mountains of the moon, and that the king of birds nestled within his leaves, thick feathered, and with full-summed wings fastening his talons East and West;
but now the eagle is become half naked. Atwood's 1st Ec. Forest.
To FULL, v. a. [fullo, Latin.] To cleanse cloth from its oil or grease.
FULLAGE, n. f. [from full.] The money paid for fulling or cleansing cloth.
FULLER, n. f. [fullo, Latin.] One whose trade is to cleanse cloth.
The clothiers have put off
The spinsters, carders, fullers, weavers. Shakespeare's H. VIII.
His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can whiten them. Mar. ix. 3.
FULLERS' EARTH, n. f.
Fullers' earth is a marl of a close texture, extremely soft and unctuous to the touch: when dry it is of a greyish brown colour, in all degrees, from very pale to almost black, and generally has something of a greenish cast in it. The finest fullers' earth is dug in our own island. Hill's Mat. Medica.
The fuller's earth of England is very various, and it very much exceeds any yet discovered abroad in goodness; which is one great reason why the English furpals all other nations in the woollen manufacture. Woodward on Fossils.
FULLERY, n. f. [from fuller.] The place where the trade of a fuller is exercised.
FULLINGMILL, n. f. [full and mill.] A mill where the water raises hammers which beat the cloth 'till it be cleansed.
By large hammers, like those used for paper and fulling-mills, they beat their hemp. Morimer.
FULLY, adv. [from full.]
1. Without vacuity.
2. Completely; without lack; without more to be desired.
There are many graces for which we may not cease hourly to sue, graces which are in bestowing always, but never come to be fully had in this present life; and therefore, when all things here have an end, endless thanks must have their beginning in a state which bringeth the full and final satisfaction of all such perpetual desires. Hooker, b. v. f. 43.
He fully possessed the entire revelation he had received from God, and had thoroughly digested it. Locke.
The goddess cry'd
It's enough, I'm fully satisfy'd. Addison's Ovid's Metam.
FULMINANT, adj. [fulminans, Fr. fulminans, Latin.] Thundering; making a noise like thunder.
To FULMINATE, v. n. [fulminare, Lat. fulminare, French.]
1. To thunder.
2. To make a loud noise or crack.
Whilst it was in fufion we cast into it a live coal, which presently kindled it, and made it boil and flash for a pretty while: after which we cast in another glowing coal, which made it fulminate afresh. Boyle.
In damps one is called the suffocating, and the other the ful-minating damp. Woodward's Natural History.
3. To issue out ecclesiastical censures.
To FULMINATE, v. a. To throw out as an object of terror.
As excommunication is not greatly regarded here in England, as now fulminated; so this constitution is out of use among us in a great measure. Ayliffe's Parergon.
FULMINATION, n. f. [fulminatio, Latin; fulmination, French, from fulminare.]
1. The act of thundering.
2. Denunciations of censure.
The fulminations from the vatican were turned into ridicule. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Thundering; striking horror.
FULNESS, n. f. [from full.]
1. The state of being filled so as to have no part vacant.
Your heave-offering shall be reckoned the fulness of the wine-press. Numb. xviii. 27.
To the houses I wished nothing more than safety, fulness, and freedom. King Charles.
2. The state of abounding in any quality good or bad.
3. Completeness; such as leaves nothing to be desired.
Our enjoyments are to be complete, I turn wishes into gratulations, and congratulating their fulness only with their continuance. South.
4. Completeness from the coalition of many parts.
The king set forwards to London, receiving the acclama-tions and applauses of the people as he went; which indeed were true and unfeigned, as might well appear in the very demonstrations and fulness of the cry. Bacon's Henry VII.

FUM

5. Completeness; freedom from deficiency.
He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such as she;
And the fair divided excellence,
Whose fulness of perfection lies in him. Shakespeare's K. John.
6. Repletion; satiety.
I need not instance in the habitual intemperance of rich tables, nor the evil accidents and effects of fulness, pride and lust, wantonness and softness. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
7. Plenty; wealth.
To lapse in fulness
Is sorer than to lie for need, and fallhood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
8. Struggling perturbation; swelling in the mind.
A principal fruit of friendship is the ease and discharge of the fulness of the heart, which passions of all kinds do cause and induce. Bacon, Essay 28.
9. Largeness; extent.
There wanted the fulness of a plot, and variety of characters to form it as it ought; and perhaps something might have been added to the beauty of the style. Dryden.
10. Force of sound, such as fills the ear; vigour.
This sort of pastoral derives almost its whole beauty from a natural ease of thought and smoothness of verse; whereas that of most other kinds consists in the strength and fulness of both. Pope.
FULSOME, adj. [from fülle, Saxon, foul.]
1. Nauseous; offensive.
The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands;
And in the doing of the deed of kind,
He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes. Shakespeare.
He that brings fulsome objects to my view,
With nauseous images my fancy fills,
And all goes down like oxymel of squills. Roscommon.
Now half the youth of Europe are in arms,
How fulsome must it be to stay behind,
And die of rank diseases here at home? Ottway's Orphan.
2. Of a rank odious smell.
White fatyrion is of a dainty smell, and bean-flowers:
again, if the plant puts forth white flowers only, and those not thin or dry, they are commonly of rank and fulsome smell.
Bacon's Natural History, No. 507.
3. Tending to obscenity.
A certain epigram, which is ascribed to the emperor, is more fulsome than any passage I have met with in our poet. Dryden.
FULSOMELY, adv. [from fulsome.] Nauseously; rankly; ob-scenely.
FULSOMENESS, n. f. [from fulsome.]
1. Nauseousness.
2. Rank smell.
3. Obscenity.
No decency is considered, no fulsome is omitted, no venom is wanting, as far as dulness can supply it. Dryden.
FUMADO, n. f. [fumus, Latin.] A smoked fish.
Fish that serve for the hotter countries, they used at first to fume, by hanging them up on long sticks one by one, drying them with the smoke of a soft and continual fire, from which they purchased the name of fumados. Cervus.
FUMAGE, n. f. [from fumus, Latin.] Hearthmoney. Diſt.
FUMATORY, n. f. [fumaria, Lat. fumetaria, Fr.] See FUMITORY.
It hath divided leaves resembling those of the umbelliferous plants: the flowers, which are collected into a spike, are of an anomalous figure, somewhat resembling a papilionaceous flower, consisting of two petals or leaves, open like two lips, the upper lip ending in a spur: the footstalk is joined to the middle part of the flower: the fruit is either of a long or a round figure, which is like a pod. Miller.
Her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumatory,
Doth root upon. Shakespeare's Henry V.
To FUMBLE, v. n. [femblem, Dutch.]
1. To attempt any thing awkwardly or ungainly.
Our mechanick thefts will have their atoms never once to have fumbled in these their motions, nor to have produced any inept system. Cudworth.
2. To puzzle; to strain in perplexity.
Am not I a friend to help you out? You would have been fumbling half an hour for this excuse. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
3. To play childishly.
I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger's end. Shakespeare's Henry V.
To FUMBLE, v. a. To manage awkwardly.
As many farewells as be flars in heav'n,
With distinct breath and config'd kisses to them,
He fumbles up all in one loose adieu. Shakespeare.
His greatly bald-pate choir
Came fumbling o'er the heads, in such an agony,
They told 'em false for fear. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
FUMBLER, n. f. [from fumble.] One who acts awkwardly.
FUMBLINGLY, adv. [from fumble.] In an awkward manner.
FUMER, n. f. [fumie, French; fumus, Latin.]
1. Smoke.
2. Thus

FUM

Thus fighting fires a while themselves consume;
But freight, like Turks, forc'd on to win or die,
They first lay tender bridges of their fumes,
And o'er the breach in unctuous vapours fly. Dryden.

2. Vapour; any volatile parts flying away.
Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes. Shakespeare.
It were good to try the taking of fumes by pipes, as they do in tobacco, of other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon.
In Winter, when the heat without is less, it becomes so far condensed as to be visible, flowing out of the mouth in form of a fume, or crasser vapour; and may, by proper vessels, set in a strong freezing mixture, be collected in a considerable quantity. Woodward's Natural History.

3. Exhalation from the stomach.
The fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brains of a man overcharged with it. South's Sermons.
Plung'd in sloth we lie, and snore supine,
As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine. Dryden's Pers. Sat.
Pow'r, like new wine, does your weak brain surprize,
And its mad fumes in hot discourses rise;
But time these yielding vapours will remove:
Mean while I'll taste the sober joys of love. Dryden's Aurem.

4. Rage; heat of mind; passion.
The fumes of his passion do really intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty. South.

5. Any thing unsubstantial.
When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wafers to convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

6. Idle conceit; vain imagination.
Plato's great year would have some effect, not in renewing the state of like individuals; for that is the fume of those, that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influences upon those things below, than indeed they have, but in grols.
Bacon, Essay 59.

To lay aside all that may seem to have a show of fumes and fancies, and to speak solids, a war with Spain is a mighty work. Bacon's War with Spain.

To FUME. v. n. [fumer, French; fumus, Latin.]
1. To smoke.

Their pray'r's pass'd
Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
With incense, where the golden altar fum'd,
By their great intercessor, came in fight
Before the Father's throne. Milton's Paradise Lost, l. xi.

2. To vapour; to yield exhalations.
From thence the fuming trail began to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head. Dryd. En.
Strait hover round the fair her airy band;
Some, as the fipp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd. Pope.

3. To pass away in vapours.
Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
Silenus lays,
Whose constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
And always boil in each extended vein. Roscommon.

4. To be in a rage.
No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning;
Our hate is spent and fum'd away in vapours,
Before our hands be at work. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
Their parts are kept from fuming away by their fixity, and also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

5. To be in a rage.
The first fresh dawn then wak'd the gladden'd race
Of uncorrupted man, nor blus'd to see
The sluggish sleep beneath its sacred beam;
For their light slumbers gentle fum'd away. Thomson's Spring.

To FUME. v. a.
1. To smoke; to dry in the smoke.
Those that serve for hot countries they used at first to fume, by hanging them upon long sticks one by one, and drying them with the smoke of a soft fire. Carew.

2. To perfume with odours in the fire.
She fum'd the temples with an od'rous flame,
And oft before the sacred altars came. Dryden.
To pray for him who was an empty name.
The fuming of the holes with brimstones, garlic, or other unfavoury things, will drive moles out of the ground. Martini.

3. To disperse in vapours.
The heat will fume away most of the scent. Martini.
FUMETTE. n. f. [French.] A word introduced by cooks, and the pupils of cooks, for the stink of meat.
A haunch of venison made her sweat,
Unless it had the right fumette. Swift.

FUMID. adj. [fumidus, Latin.] Smoky; vaporous.

FUN

A crafts and fumid exhalation is caused from the combat of the sulphur and iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aquafortis. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 5.
FUMIDITY. n. f. [from fumid.] Smokiness; tendency to smoke. DiA.

To FUMIGATE. v. n. [from fumus, Latin; fumiger, Fr.]
1. To smoke; to perfume by smoke or vapour.
Wouldst thou preserve thy family's health,
With fragrant thyme the city fumigate,
And break the waxen walls to save the state. Dryden's Virg.

2. To medicate or heal by vapours.
FUMIGATION. n. f. [fumigatio, Latin; fumigation, French;
from fumigare.]
1. Scents raised by fire.

Fumigations, often repeated, are very beneficial. Arbuthnot.
My fumigation is to Venus, just
The souls of roses, and red coral's dust:
And, last, to make my fumigation good,
'Tis mixt with sparrows brains and pigeons blood. Dryden.

2. The application of medicines to the body in fumes.
FUMINGLY. adv. [from fume.] Angriily; in a rage.
That which we move for our better learning and instruction fake, turneth unto anger and choler in them: they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer fuming's, that they are ashamed to defile their pens with making answer to such idle questions. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

FUMITER. n. f. See FUMATORY.
Why, he was met even now,
As mad as the vex'd sea; finging aloud,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds. Shakespeare.

FUMOUS. adj. [fumosus, French; from fume.] Producing fumes.
From dice and wine the youth retir'd to rest,
And puff'd the fumes god from out his breast:
Ev'n then he dream'd of drink and lucky play;
More lucky had it lasted till the day. Dryden's En.

FUN. n. f. [A low cant word.] Sport; high merriment; holicksome delight.
Don't mind me, though, for all my fun and jokes,
You bards may find us bloods good-natur'd folks. Merc.

FUNCTION. n. f. [functio, Latin.]
1. Discharge; performance.
There is hardly a greater difference between two things than there is between a representing commoner in the function of his public calling, and the same person in common life. Swift.

2. Employment; office.
The ministry is not now bound to any one tribe: now none is secluded from that function of any degree, state, or calling. Whitgift.

You have paid the heav'n's your function, and the prisoner the very debt of your calling. Shakef. Measure for Measure.
Nor was it any policy of state, or obliquity of will, or partiality of affection either to the men or their function, which fixed me. King Charles.

This double function of the goddess gives a considerable light and beauty to the ode which Horace has address'd to her. Addison's Remarks on Itat.

Let not these indignities discourage us from asserting the just privileges and pre-eminence of our holy function and character. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. Single act of any office.
Without difference those functions cannot, in orderly sort,
be executed. Hooker.

They have several offices and prayers against fire, tempests, and especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments. Stillingfleet's Def. of Diss. on Rom. Cath.

4. Trade; occupation.
Follow your function; go, and batten on cold bits. Shakespeare.

5. Office of any particular part of the body.
The bodies of men, and other animals, are excellently well fitted for life and motion; and the several parts of them well adapted to their particular functions. Bentley's Sermons.

6. Power; faculty.
Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function sitting
With forms to his conceit. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Nature seems
In all her functions weary of herself:
My race of glory run, and race of shame;
And I shall shortly be with them that rest.
Whatever warms the heart, or fills the head,
As the mind opens, and its functions spread,
Imagination plies her dang'rous art,
And pours it all upon the peccant part.
Though every human constitution is morbid, yet are their diseases consistent with the common functions of life. Arbuthnot.

FUND. n. f. [fundus, French; fundus, a bag, Latin.]
1. Stock; capital; that by which any expense is supported.
He touches the passions more delicately than Ovid, and performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply. Dryden.

FUN

Part must be left, a fund when foes invade,
And part employ'd to roll the wat'ry tide. Dryden.
In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust entirely to the stock or fund of their own reason, advanced indeed, but not overlaid by commerce with books. Swift.

2. Stock or bank of money.
As my estate has been hitherto either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed in substantial acres. Add.

FUNDAMENT. n. f. [fundamentum, Latin.] The back part of the body.
FUNDAMENTAL. adj. [fundamentalis, Lat. from fundament.]
Serving for the foundation; that upon which the rest is built;
essential; important; not merely accidental.

Until this can be agreed upon, one main and fundamental cause of the most grievous war is not like to be taken from the earth. Raleigh's Essays.

You that will be less fearful than discreet,
That love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt the change of it. Shakef. Coriolanus.

Others, when they were brought to allow the throne vacant, thought the succession should go to the next heir, according to the fundamental laws of the kingdom, as if the last king were actually dead. Swift's Examiner.

Gain some general and fundamental truths, both in philosophy, in religion, and in human life. Watts.

Such we find they are, as can controul
The servile actions of our wav'ring soul,
Can fright, can alter, or can chain the will;
Their ills all built on life, that fundamental ill. Prior.

Yet some there were among the founder few,
Of those who less presum'd, and better knew,
Who durst assert the juster ancient cause,
And here restor'd wit's fundamental laws. Pope on Criticism.

FUNDAMENTAL. n. f. Leading proposition; important and essential part which is the groundwork of the rest.
We will propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably, in respect of those superstructures and consequences that arise from them. South's Sermons.

It is a very just reproach, that there should be so much violence and hatred in religious matters among men who agree in all fundamentals, and only differ in some ceremonies, or mere speculative points. Swift.

FUNDAMENTALLY. adv. [from fundamental.] Essentially;
originally.
As virtue is seated fundamentally in the intellect, so perspectively in the fancy; so that virtue is the force of reason, in the conduct of our actions and passions to a good end. Greav.

Religion is not only useful to civil society, but fundamentally necessary to its very birth and constitution. Bentley.

The unlimited power placed fundamentally in the body of a people, the legislators endeavour to deposit in such hands as would preserve the people. Swift on the Diss. in Ath. and Rome.

FUNERAL. n. f. [funus, Latin; funerales, French.]
1. The solemnization of a burial; the payment of the last honours to the dead; obsequies.
Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest,
Come I to speak in Caesar's funeral. Shak. Julius Caesar.

All things that we ordained festival,
Turn from their office to black funeral. Shakespeare.
He that had cast out many unburied, had none to mourn for him, nor any solemn funerals, nor sepulchre with his fathers. 2 Mac. v. 10.

No widow at his funeral shall weep.
The pomp or procession with which the dead are carried. Sandy.

The long funerals blacken all the way.
You are sometimes desirous to see a funeral pass by in the street. Swift's Directions to the Chambermaid.

3. Burial; interment.
May he find his funeral
P' th' sands, when he before his day shall fall. Denham.

FUNERAL. adj. Used at the ceremony of interring the dead.
Our infruments to melancholy bells,
Our wedding cheer to a sad funeral feast. Shak. R. and Jul.

Let such honours
And funeral rites, as to his birth and virtues
Are due, be first perform'd. Denham's Sophy.
Thy hand o'er towns the funeral torch displays,
And forms a thousand ills ten thousand ways. Dryden.

FUNERAL. adj. [funeraria, Latin.] Suits a funeral; dark; dismal.
But if his soul hath wing'd the destin'd flight,
Inhabitant of deep disastrous night,
Homeward with pious speed repairs the main,
To the pale shade funeral rites ordain. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.

FUNGUS. n. f. [from fungus.] Unfold excrescence. DiA.
FUNGOSITY. n. f. [from fungus.] Unfold excrescence. DiA.
FUNGUS. adj. [from fungus.] Excrecent; spongy; wanting firmness.
It is often employed to keep down the fungous lips that spread upon the bone; but it is much more painful than the echarotick medicines. Sharp's Surgery.

FUR

FUNGUS. n. f. [Latin.] Strictly a mushroom: a word used to express such excrescences of flesh as grow out upon the lips of wounds, or any other excrescence from trees or plants not naturally belonging to them; as the agarick from the larchtree, and auricula judæ from elder. Quincy.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as the fibres lengthen too much, are too fluid, and produce fungus, or as they harden and produce callosities. Arbuthnot on Diet.

FUNICLE. n. f. [funiculus, Latin.] A small cord; a small ligature; a fibre.
FUNICULAR. adj. [funiculaire, Fr. from funicle.] Consisting of a small cord or fibre.

FUNK. n. f. A stink. A low word.
FUNNEL. n. f. [infundibulum, Latin; whence fundible, fundles, funnel.]
1. An inverted hollow cone with a pipe descending from it, through which liquors are poured into vessels with narrow mouths; a tundish.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it; but with a funnel, and by degrees, you shall fill many of them. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend,
Through which ingested meats with ease descend. Blackm.
The outward ear or auricula is made hollow, and contracted by degrees, to draw the sound inward, to take in as much as may be of it, as we use a funnel to pour liquor into any vessel. Ray on the Creation.

2. A pipe or passage of communication.
Towards the middle are two large funnels, bored through the roof of the grotto, to let in light or fresh air. Addison.

FUR. n. f. [furrure, French.]
1. Skin with soft hair with which garments are lined for warmth, or covered for ornament.
December must be expressed with a horrid and fearful countenance; as also at his back a bundle of holly, holding in fur mittens the sign of Capricorn. Peachment on Drawing.

'Tis but dressing up a bird of prey in his cap and furs to make a judge of him. L'Estrange.
And lordly gout wrapt up in fur,
And wheezing asthma, loth to stir. Swift.

2. Soft hair of beasts found in cold countries, where nature provides coats suitable to the weather; hair in general.
This night, wherein the cubdrawn bear would couch,
The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry, unbonnetted he runs,
And bids what will take all. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Such animals as feed upon flesh qualify it, the one by swallowing the hair or fur of the beasts they prey upon, the other by devouring some part of the feathers of the birds they gorge themselves with. Ray on the Creation.

3. Any moisture exhaled to such a degree as that the remainder sticks on the part.
Methinks I am not right in ev'ry part;
I feel a kind of trembling at my heart:
My pulse unequal, and my breath is strong;
Besides a filthy fur upon my tongue. Dryden's Pers. Sat. 3.

To FUR. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To line or cover with skins that have soft hair.
How mad a fight it was to see Dametas, like rich tissue fur'd with lambskins? Sidney, b. ii.

Through tatter'd cloaths small vices do appear;
Robes and fur'd gowns hide all. Shakespeare's King Lear.
You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest;
You fur your gloves with reason. Shakef. Troil. and Cress.

2. To cover with soft matter.
To make lamblack, take a torch and hold it under the bottom of a latten basin; and, as it groweth to be fur'd and black within, strike it with a feather into some shell. Peachment.

The filters, mourning for their brother's loss,
Their bodies hid in bark, and fur'd with moss. Dryden.
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry fur'd tongues. Phillips.

A dungeon wide and horrible; the walls
On all sides fur'd with mouldy damps, and hung
With clots of rosy gore. Addison.

FUR. adv. [It is now commonly written far.] At a distance.
The white lovely dove
Doth on her wings her utmost swiftness prove,
Finding the gripe of falcon fierce not fur. Sidney.

FUR-WROUGHT. adj. [fur and wrought.] Made of fur.
Silent along the mazy margin stray,
And with the fur-wrought fly delude the prey. Gay's Post.

FURACIOUS. adj. [furax, Latin.] Thievish; inclined to steal.
FURACITY. n. f. [from furax, Latin.] Disposition to theft;
thievishness. DiA.

FUR-BELOW. n. f. [fur and below.] Fur sewed on the lower part of the garment; an ornament of dress.
Nays, oft in dreams invention we bestow
To change a founce, or add a fur-below. Pope.

FUR

To FURBLOW. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with ornamental appendages of dress.

When arguments too fiercely glare,
You calm them with a milder air;
To break their points, you turn their force,
And furbelow the plain discourse. Prior.
She was furbowed from head to foot; every ribbon was crinkled, and every part of her garments in curl.
Addison's Spectator, N^o. 129.

To FURBISH. v. a. [fourbir, French.] To burnish; to polish; to rub to brightness.

It may enter Mowbray's waxen coat,
And furbish new the name of John o' Gaunt. Shak. R. II.
Furbish the spears, and put on the brigandines. Jer. xlv. 4.
Some others who furbish up and reprint his old errors, hold that the sufferings of the damned are not to be, in a strict sense, eternal; but that, after a certain period of time, there shall be a general god-delivery of the souls in prison, and that not for a farther execution, but a final release. Saunders's Sermon.

As after Numa's peaceful reign,
The martial Ancus did the sceptre wield;
Furbish'd the rusty sword again,
Refurn'd the long-forgotten shield,
And led the Latins to the dusty field. Dryden.

Inferior ministers, for Mars repair
His broken axle-tree, and blunted war;
And send him forth again, with furbish'd arms. Dryden.

FURBISHER. n. s. [fourbisseur, French, from furbish.] One who polishes any thing.

FURCA'TION. n. s. [furca, Latin.] Forkiness; the state of shooting two ways like the blades of a fork.

When they grow old they grow less branched, and first do lose their brow-antlers, or lowest furcations next the head.

FURFUR. n. s. [Latia.] Hark or chaff, scurf or dandrif, that grows upon the skin, with some likeness to bran. Quincy.

FURFURACEOUS. adj. [furfuraceus, Latin.] Husky; branny; scaly.

FURIOUS. adj. [furiosus, French; furiosus, Latin.] Mad; phrenetic.

No man did ever think the hurtful actions of furious men and innocents to be punishable. Hooker, b. i. f. 9.

2. Raging; violent; transported by passion beyond reason.

Who can be wife, amazed, temperate and furious,
Loyal and neutral in a moment? No man. Shaksp. Macb.

To be furious,
Is to be frightened out of fear; and, in that mood,
The dove will peck the estridge. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

FURIOUSLY. adv. [from furious.] Madly; violently; vehemently.

Which when his brother saw, fraught with great grief
And wrath, he to him leapt furiously. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

They observe countenance to attend the practice; and this carries them on furiously to that which of themselves they are inclined. South's Sermons.

She heard not half, to furiously she flies;
Fear gave her wings. Dryden.

FURIOUSNESS. n. s. [from furious.] Frenzy; madness; transport of passion.

To FURL. v. a. [frusser, French.] To draw up; to contract.

When fortune sends a stormy wind,
Then shew a brave and present mind;
And when with too indulgent gales
She swells too much, then furl thy sails. Cruch.

FURLONG. n. s. [farlang, Saxon.] A measure of length; the eighth part of a mile.

If a man stand in the middle of a field and speak aloud, he shall be heard a furlong in round, and that in articulate sounds.
Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 289.

Coming within a few furlongs of the temple, they passed through a very thick grove. Addison's Freeholder.

FURLOUGH. n. s. [verloof, Dutch.] A temporary dismissal from military service; a licence given to a soldier to be absent.

Brutus and Cato might discharge their souls,
And give them furloughs for another world;
But we, like sentries, are oblig'd to stand
In starless nights, and wait th' appointed hour. Dryden.

FURMENTY. n. s. [More properly frumenty, or frumty, of frumentum, Latin.] Food made by boiling wheat in milk.

Remember, wife, therefore, though I do it not,
The feed-cake, the paffies, and frumenty pot. Tuff. Husb.

FURNACE. n. s. [furnus, Latin.] An inclosed fireplace.

Heat not a furnace for your foe so hot
That it may singe yourself. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

The firing pot is for silver and the furnace for gold. Prov.
We have also furnaces of great diversities, that keep great diversity of heats. Bacon's New Atlantis.

The kings of Spain have erected divers furnaces and forges, for the trying and firing of their gold. Abbo.

Whoso falleth not down and worshippeth, shall the same hour be cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace. Dan.

FUR

A dungeon horrible, on all sides around,
As one great furnace, flam'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, l. i.

To FURNACE. v. a. [from the noun.] To throw out as sparks from a furnace. A bad word.

He furnaces
The thick fighs from him. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

To FURNISH. v. a. [fournir, French.] To supply with what is necessary.

1. To supply with what is necessary. She hath directed
How I shall take her from her father's house;
What gold and jewels she is furnish'd with. Shaksp. As You Like It.

2. To give things for use. These simple ideas, the materials of all our knowledge, are suggested and furnish'd to the mind only by these two ways, sensation and reflection. Locke.

It is not any action of the state, but a compact among private persons that hath furnish'd out these several remittances. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

3. To fit up; to fit with appendages. Something deeper,
Whereof perchance these are but furnishings. Shaksp. As You Like It.

Plato entertained some of his friends at dinner, and had in the chamber a bed or couch, neatly and costly furnish'd. Diogenes came in, and got up upon the bed, and trampled it, saying, I trample upon the pride of Plato. Plato mildly answered, But with greater pride, Diogenes. Bacon's Apophth.

We were led into another great room, furnish'd with old inscriptions. Addison on Italy.

4. To equip; to fit out for any undertaking. Will your lordship lend me a thousand pounds to furnish me? Shaksp. Henry IV. p. i.

Ideas, forms, and intellects,
Have furnish'd out three different sects. Prior.

Doubtless the man Jesus Christ is furnish'd with superior powers to all the angels in heaven, because he is employed in superior work. Watt's Improvement of the Mind.

5. To decorate; to adorn. The wounded arm would furnish all their rooms,
And bleed for ever scarlet in the looms. Holmes.

FURNISHER. n. s. [fournisseur, French, from furnish.] One who supplies of his own.

FURNITURE. n. s. [fourniture, Fr. from furnish.] 1. Moveables; goods put in a house for use or ornament.

No man can transport his large retinue, his sumptuous fare, and his rich furniture into another world. South's Sermons.

There are many noble palaces in Venice: their furniture is not commonly very rich, if we except the pictures from the hands of the best masters. Addison.

2. Appendages. By a general conflagration mankind shall be destroyed, with the form and all the furniture of the earth. Tillotson.

3. Equipage; embellishments; decorations. Young Clarion, with vauntful lufftyhed,
After his guise did cast abroad to fare,
And thereto 'gan his furnitures prepare. Spenser.

The duke is coming: see, the barge be ready,
And fit it with such furniture as suits
The greatness of his person. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

The ground must be of a mixt brown, and large enough, or the horse's furniture must be of very sensible colours. Dryden.

FURNITURER. n. s. [from furnish.] A dealer in furs.

FURROW. n. s. [furrow, Saxon.] 1. A small trench made by the plow for the reception of seed.

What must be sowed above furrows before Michaelmas. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Then ploughs for feed the fruitful furrows broke,
And oxen labour'd first beneath the yoke. Dryden's Ovid.

2. Any long trench or hollow: as a wrinkle. My lord it is, though time has plow'd that face
With many furrows since I saw it first;
Yet I'm too well acquainted with the ground quite to forget it. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

FURROW-WEED. n. s. [furrow and weed.] A weed that grows in furrowed land. Shaksp.

To FURROW. v. a. [from the noun; furrow, Saxon.] 1. To cut in furrows.

While the plowman near at hand,
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land. Milton.

2. To divide in long hollows. No

FUR

No briny tear has furrow'd her smooth cheek. Sackling.

The billows fall, while Neptune lays his mace
On the rough sea, and smooths its furrow'd face. Dryden.

3. To make by cutting. There go the ships that furrow out their way;
Yea, there of whales enormous fights we see. Wotton.

FURRY. adj. [from fur.] 1. Covered with fur; dressed in fur.

From Volga's banks th' imperious Czar Leads forth his furry troops to war. Felton to Lord Gower.

2. Consisting of fur. Not arm'd with horns of arbitrary might,
Or claws to seize their furry spoils in fight. Dryden.

FURTHER. adv. [from forth, not from far, as is commonly imagined; forth, fu, ther, farthel, corrupted from farther, farthel, farthel, Saxon. Farther is used by Sir Thomas More.
See FORTH and FARTHER, of which the examples are to be referred to this word.]

1. At a greater distance. What further need have we of witnesses. Mat. xxvi. 65.

FURTHER. adv. [from forth.] To a greater distance. And the angel of the Lord went further, and stood in a narrow place. Numb. xxii. 2.

To FURTHER. v. a. [from the adverb; forth, Saxon.] To put onward; to forward; to promote; to countenance;
to assist; to help.

Things thus set in order, in quiet and rest,
Shall further thy harvest, and pleasure thee best. Tuff. Husb.

Could their fond superstition have furthered so great attempts, without the mixture of a true persuasion concerning the irrefragible force of divine power. Hooker, b. v. f. 1.

Grant not, O Lord, the desires of the wicked; further not his wicked device. Pf. cxi. 8.

This binds thee then to further my design,
As I am bound by vow to further thine. Dryden.

FURTHERANCE. n. s. [from further.] Promotion; advancement; help.

The Gauls learned them first, and used them only for the furtherance of their trade and private business. Spenser.

Our diligence must search out all helps and furtherances of direction, which scriptures, councils, fathers, histories, the laws and practices of all churches afford. Hooker.

For gain and work, and success in his affairs, he seeketh furtherance of him that hath no manner of power. Hooker.

Cannot my body, nor blood-sacrifice,
Intreat you to your wretched furtherance? Shak. Henry VI.

If men were minded to live righteously, to believe a God would be no hindrance or prejudice to any such design, but very much for the advancement and furtherance of it. Tillotson.

FURTHERER. n. s. [from further.] Promoter; advancer. That earnest favourer and furtherer of God's true religion, that faithful servant to his prince and country. Alban.

FURTHERMORE. [farther and more.] Moreover; besides.

This ring I do accept most thankfully,
And so, I pray you, tell him: farthermore,
I pray you, shew my youth old Shylock's house. Shaksp.

FURTIVE. adj. [furtivus, Fr. furtivus, Latin.] Stolen; gotten by theft.

Or do they, as your schemes, I think, have shown,
Dart furtive beams and glory not their own,
All servants to that source of light, the sun? Prior.

FURUNCLE. n. s. [furuncle, Fr. furunculus, Latin.] A bile; an angry pustule.

A furuncle is in its beginning round, hard, and inflamed; and as it increaseth, it riseth up with an acute head, and sometimes a pustule; and then it is more inflamed and painful, when it arrives at its state, which is about the eighth or ninth day. Wise's Surgery.

FURY. n. s. [furor, Latin; furor, French.] 1. Madness.

2. Rage; passion of anger; tumult of mind approaching to madness.

I do oppose my patience to his fury; and am arm'd
To suffer with a quietness of spirit
The very tyranny and rage of his. Shaksp. Mer. of Venice.

He hath given me to know the nature of living creatures, and the furies of wild beasts. Wotton's Architecture.

3. Enthusiasm; exaltation of fancy. Taking up the lute, her wit began to be with a divine fury inspired; and her voice would, in so beloved an occasion, second her wit. Steuens, b. ii.

A fybil, that had number'd in the world
The sun to count two hundred compasses,
In her prophetic fury few'd the work. Shaksp. Othello.

Greater than human kind she seem'd to look,
And with an accent more than mortal spoke;
Her flaming eyes with sparkling fury roll,
When all the god came rushing on her soul. Dryden's Æn.

4. [From furis, Latin.] One of the deities of vengeance, and thence a stormy, turbulent, violent, raging woman.
The fight of any of the house of York,
Is as a fury to torment my soul. Shaksp. Henry VI. p. iii.

FUS

It was the most proper place for a fury to make her exit; and I believe every reader's imagination is pleas'd, when he sees the angry goddess thus sinking in a tempest, and plunging herself into hell, amidst such a scene of horror and confusion.

FURZE. n. s. [furz, Saxon.] Gorse; goss. The whole plant is very thorny; the flowers, which are of the pea-bloom kind, are disposed in short thick spikes, which are succeeded by short compressed pods, in each of which are contained three or four kidney-shaped seeds. The species are three, each of which grow wild on the heaths and upland-commons in England: the first is sometimes used to make hedges, for which purpose it will do very well for a few years. Miller.

Carry out gravel to fill up a hole,
Both timber and furze, the turf and the cole. Tuff. Husb.

For fewel, there groweth generally in all parts great store of furze, of which the shrubby sort is called tame, and the better grown French. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

From hence uncertain seasons we may know,
And when to reap the grain, and when to sow,
Or when to fell the furzes. Dryden's Virg. Georg.

FURZY. adj. [from furze.] Overgrown with furze; full of gorse.

Wide through the furzy field their route they take,
Their bleeding bosoms force the thorny brake. Goy.

FUSCA'TION. n. s. [fuscus, Latin.] The act of darkening or obscuring. Diogenes.

To FUSE. v. a. [fundo, fusum, Latin.] To melt; to put into fusion; to liquify by heat.

To FUSE. v. n. To be melted; to be capable of being liquified by heat.

FUSÉE. n. s. [fusée, French.] 1. The cone round which is wound the cord or chain of a clock or watch.

The reason of the motion of the balance is by the motion of the next wheel, and that by the motion of the next, and that by the motion of the fusée, and that by the motion of the spring: the whole frame of the watch carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the intellectual idea that was in the artist. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. A firelock [from fusil, Fr.]; a small neat musquet. This is more properly written fusil.

FUSEE of a bomb or grando shell, is that which makes the whole powder or composition in the shell take fire, to do the designed execution. 'Tis usually a wooden pipe or tap filled with wildfire, or some such matter; and is intended to burn no longer than is the time of the motion of the bomb from the mouth of the mortar to the place where it is to fall, which time Anderson makes twenty-seven seconds. Harris.

FUSÉE. Track of a buck. Ainsworth.

FUSIBLE. adj. [from fusil.] Capable of being melted; capable of being made liquid by heat.

Colours afforded by metalline bodies, either colliquate with or otherwise penetrate into other bodies, especially fusible ones. Boyle.

FUSIBILITY. n. s. [from fusible.] Capacity of being melted;
quality of growing liquid by heat.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metallical nature, or at least a fusibility, seem to have resolved it into a nobler use. Watson's Architecture.

The bodies of most use, that are sought for out of the depths of the earth, are the metals, which are distinguished from other bodies by their weight, fusibility, and malleability.

FUSIL. adj. [fusile, French; fusilis, Latin.] 1. Capable of being melted; liquifiable by heat.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools; then, what might else be wrought
Fusile, or grav'd in metal. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Some, less skillful, fancy these scap that occur in most of the larger Gothick buildings of England are artificial; and will have it, that they are a kind of fusil marble. Woodward.

2. Running by the force of heat. Perpetual flames,
O'er sand and ashes, and the stubborn flint,
Prevailing, turn into a fusil sea. Phillips.

FUSIL. n. s. [fusil, French.] 1. A firelock; a small neat musquet.

2. [In heraldry, from fusus, Latin.] Something like a spindle.
Fusils must be made long, and small in the middle, in the ancient coat of Mountague, argent three fusils in fesse gules.

FUSILIER. n. s. [from fusil.] A soldier armed with a fusil.

FUSION. n. s. [fusio, Latin; fusio, French.] 1. The act of melting.

2. The state of being melted, or of running with heat.

Metals in fusion do not flame for want of a copious fume, except spelter, which fumes copiously, and thereby flames.

FUSS. n. s. [A low cant word.] A tumult; a bustle.

FUT

- End as it befits your station;
Come to use and application;
Nor with senates keep a futz:
I submit, and answer thus.
- FUT. n. f. [futis, French.]
1. A trunk or body of a column.
2. [From futis, French.] A strong smell, as that of a mouldy barrel.
- TO FUT. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow mouldy; to smell ill.
- FUSTIAN. n. f. [futains, French, from futis, a tree, because cotton grows on trees.]
1. A kind of cloth made of linen and cotton, and perhaps now of cotton only.
Is supper ready, the house trimm'd, the serving-men in their new fustian and their white stockings? Shakesp. care.
2. A high swelling kind of writing made up of heterogeneous parts, or of words and ideas ill associated; bombast.
Nor will you raise in me combustion,
By dint of high heroic fustian. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 1.
What fustian have I heard these gentlemen find out in Mr. Cowley's odes? In general, I will say, that nothing can appear more beautiful to me than the strength of those images which they condemn. Dryden.
I am much deceived if this be not abominable fustian; that is, thoughts and words ill sorted, and without the least relation to each other. Dryden's Spanish Fryar, Dedication.
Chance thoughts, when govern'd by the close,
Of rise to fustian, or descend to prose. Smith.
- FUSTIAN. adj. [from the noun.]
1. Made of fustian.
2. Swelling; unnaturally pompous; ridiculously tumid. Used of style.
When men argue, th' greatest part
Of th' contest falls on terms of art,
Until the fustian stuff be spent,
And then they fall to th' argument. Hudibras, p. i. can. 3.
Virgil, if he could have seen the first verses of the Sylva, would have thought Statius mad in his fustian description of the statue on the brazen horse. Dryden's Dunciad.
FUSTIC. n. f. A sort of wood brought from the West-Indies, used in dying of cloth. Dier.
TO FUTIGATE. v. a. [futigo, Latin.] To beat with a stick; to cane. Dier.
FUSTILIAN. n. f. [from fustis.] A low fellow; a flunkard; a scoundrel. A word used by Shakespeare only.
Away, you scullion, you rampallian, you fustilian: I'll tickle your catastrophe. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
FUSTINESS. n. f. [from fustis.] Mouldiness; stink.
FUSTY. adj. [from fustis.] Ill smelling; mouldy.
Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains: he were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel. Shakespeare's Troilus and Crisseida.
The fusty plebeians hate thine honours. Shak. Coriolan.
The large Achilles, at this fusty stuff,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause. Shakesp.
FUTILE. adj. [utile, French; utilis, Latin.]
1. Talkative; loquacious.
One utile person, that maketh it his glory to tell, will do more hurt than many that know it their duty to conceal. Bacon.
2. Trifling; worthless; of no weight.
FUTILITY. n. f. [utilité, French, from utile.]
1. Talkativeness; loquacity.
This fable does not strike so much at the futility of women, as at the incontinent levity of a prying humour. L'Estrange.
2. Triflingness; want of weight; want of solidity.

FY

- Trifling futility appears in their signs of the zodiac, and their mutual relations and aspects. Bentley.
FUTROCKS. n. f. [corrupted from foot books. Skinner.] The lower timbers that hold the ship together.
- FUTURE. adj. [futurus, Latin; futur, French.] That which will be hereafter; to come: as, the future state.
Glory they sung to the most High! good will
To future men, and in their dwellings peace. Milt. P. L.
He sows the teeth at Pallas's command,
And flings the future people from his hand. Addison's Ovid.
FUTURE. n. f. [from the adjective.] Time to come; something to happen hereafter.
Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present time; and I feel now
The future in the instant. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after. Locke.
- FUTURELY. adv. [from future.] In time to come.
This preference of God, as it is preference, is not the cause of any thing *futur*ly succeeding; neither doth God's foreknowledge impose any necessity, or bind. Raleigh.
- FUTURITION. n. f. [from future.] The state of being to be; of being to come to pass hereafter.
Is it imaginable, that the great means of the world's redemption should rest only in the number of possibilities, and hang so loose in respect of its futurition, as to leave the event in an equal poise, whether ever there should be such a thing or no? South's Sermon.
- FUTURITY. n. f. [from future.]
1. Time to come; events to come.
Not my service pass, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,
Can ransom me. Shakespeare's Othello.
All futurities are naked before that All-seeing Eye, the light of which is no more hindered by distance of time than the light of an angel can be determined by distance of place. South.
I will contrive some way to make it known to futurity, that I had your lordship for my patron. Swift.
This, great Amphibius, lay hid from thee.
Though skill'd in fate and dark futurity. Pope's Statius.
2. The state of being to be; futurity.
It may be well reckoned among the bare possibilities, which never commence into a futurity; it requiring such a free, sedate and intent mind, as, it may be, is no where found but among the platonical ideas. Glavin. Serp. c. 10.
- TO FUZZ. v. n. [without etymology.] To fly out in small particles.
FUZZBALL. n. f. [fuzz and ball.] A kind of fungus, which, when pressed, bursts and scatters dust in the eyes.
- FY. interj. [fy, French and Flemish; Öz, Greek; vab, Lat.] A word of blame and disapprobation.
And fy on fortune, mine avowed foe,
Whose wrathful wreaks themselves do now allay. Fa. Quen.
Fy, my lord, fy! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?
A bawd, sir, fy upon him! Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou do'st stray!
Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton.
Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place?
Unhand me, or, I swear, I'll scratch your face:
Let go, for shame; you make me mad for spite:
My mouth's my own; and if you kiss, I'll bite. Dryden.
Fy, madam, he cried, we must be past all these gaities. Tatler, N. 54.

GAD

- G Has two sounds, one from the Greek Γ, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard G, because it is formed by a pressure somewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue against the upper gum. This sound G retains before a, o, u, *i, e, y; as, gate, go, gull. The other sound, called that of the soft G, resembles that of J, and is commonly, though not always, found before e, i; as, gem, gibbet. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away; as in the French, from which these words are commonly derived: thus, for benign, malign, condign, we pronounce benine, maïne, condine. It is often silent in the middle of words before b; as, might. The Saxon g, seems to have had generally the sound of y consonant; whence gate is by rusticks still pronounced yate.*
- GABARDINE. n. f. [gavardina, Italian.] A coarse frock; any mean dress.
My best way is to creep under his gabardine; there is no other shelter hereabout. Shakespeare's Tempest.
You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog,
And spit upon my Jewish gabardine. Shakesp. Mer. of Venice.
The knight did straight submit,
And laid his weapons at her feet:
Next he disrobd his gabardine,
And with it did himself resign. Hudibras, b. i.
- TO GABBLE. v. n. [gabare, Italian; gabbern, Dutch.]
1. To make an inarticulate noise.
When thou could'st not, savage,
Shew thine own meaning, but would'st gabble like
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes
With words that made them known. Shakesp. Tempest.
Flocks of fowl, that when the tempests roar,
With their hoarse gabbles seek the silent shoar. Dryd. Æn.
2. To prate loudly without meaning.
Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house?
Which made some thinkers, when he did gabble,
Th' had heard three labours of Babel. Hudibras, p. i.
Such a rout, and such a rattle,
Run to hear Jack Pudding gabble. Swift.
- GABBLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Inarticulate noise like that of brute animals.
Not to know what we speak one to another, so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: chough's language, gabble enough, and good enough. Shak. All's well that ends well.
2. Loud talk without meaning.
Forthwith a hideous gabble rises loud
Among the builders; each to other calls,
Not understood. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
GABBLER. n. f. [from gabble.] A prater; a chattering fellow.
GABEL. n. f. [gabelle, French; gabello, Italian; gapel, Saxon, a tribute.] An excise; a tax.
The gabels of Naples are very high on oil, wine, and tobacco. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
GABION. n. f. [French.] A wicker basket which is filled with earth to make a fortification or intrenchment.
His battery was defended all along with gabions, and caiks filled with sand. Kneller's History of the Turks.
GABLE. n. f. [gaval, Welsh; gable, French.] The sloping roof of a building.
Take care that all your brick-work be covered with the tiling, according to the new way of building, without gable ends, which are very heavy, and very apt to let the water into the brick-work. Mortimer's Husbandry.
GAD. n. f. [gab, Saxon; gaddur, Icelandic, a club.]
1. A wedge or ingot of steel.
Flemish steel is brought down the Rhine to Dort, and other parts of Holland and Flanders, some in bars, and some in gads; and therefore called Flemish steel, and sometimes gad steel. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
2. It seems to be used by Shakespeare for a stile or graver, [from gab, Saxon, a goad.]

GAG

- G I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gad of steel will write these words. Shakespeare.
GAD. v. n. [Derived by Skinner from gadfy; by Junius from gadow, Welsh, to forsake.] To ramble about without any settled purpose; to rove loosely and idly.
How now, my headstrong, where have you been gadding?
—Where I have learnt me to repent. Shakesp. Rom. and Jul.
Give the water no passage, neither a wicked woman liberty to gad abroad. Ecclus. xxv. 25.
The lesser devils arose with ghastly rore,
And thronged forth about the world to gad;
Each land they fill'd, river, stream and shore. Fairfax, b. iv.
Envy is a gadding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep home. Bacon, Essay 9.
Gad not abroad at ev'ry quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion;
To court each place or fortune that doth fall,
Is wantonness in contemplation. Herbert.
Thence, shepherd, the woods and desert caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,
And all their echo's moan. Milton.
A fierce loud buzzing breeze; their flings draw blood,
And drive the cattle gadding through the wood. Dryd. Virg.
She wreaks her anger on her rival's head;
With furies frights her from her native home,
And drives her gadding, round the world to roam. Dryden.
Gull 'em with freedom,
And you shall see 'em tof their tails, and gad
As if the breeze had stung them. Dryd. and Lee's Oedipus.
There's an ox lost, and this coxcomb runs a gadding after wild fowl. L'Estrange.
No wonder their thoughts should be perpetually shifting from what disgusts them, and seek better entertainment in more pleasing objects, after which they will unavoidably be gadding. Locke.
GABDER. n. f. [from gad.] A rambler; one that runs much abroad without business.
A drunken woman, and a gadder abroad, causeth great anger, and she will not cover her own shame. Ecclus. xxvi. 8.
GADDINGLY. adv. [from gad.] In a rambling, roving manner.
GADFLY. n. f. [gad and fly; but by Skinner, who makes it the original of gad, gadfly.] Supposed to be originally from goad, in Saxon gab, and fly.] A fly that when he flings the cattle makes them gad or run madly about; the breec.
The fly called the gadfly breedeth of somewhat that swimeth upon the top of the water, and is most about ponds. Bac.
Light fly his slumbers, if perchance a fight
Of angry gadflies fasten on the herd. Thomson's Summer.
GAFF. n. f. A harpoon or large hook. Answorth.
GAFFER. n. f. [gepepe, companion, Saxon.] A word of respect now obsolete, or applied only in contempt to a mean person.
For gaffer Treadwell told us by the bye, Excellive sorrow is exceeding dry. Gay's Pastoral.
GAFFILES. n. f. [gapelucay, spears, Saxon.]
1. Artificial spurs put upon cocks when they are set to fight.
2. A steel contrivance to bend cross-bows. Answorth.
TO GAG. v. n. [from gabbel, Dutch, the palate, Minshew.] To stop the mouth with something that may allow to breathe, but hinder to speak.
He's out of his guard already: unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagg'd. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.
There foam'd rebellious logic, gagg'd and bound. Pope.
GAG. n. f. [from the verb.] Something put into the mouth to hinder speech or eating.
Some, when the kids their dams too deeply drain,
With gags and muzzles their soft mouths restrain. Dryden.
Your woman would have run up stairs before me; but I have secured her below with a gag in her chaps. Dryden.
GAGE. n. f. [gage, French.] A pledge; a pawn; a caution; any thing given in security.

GAI

Who, when the shamed shield of slain Sansfoy
He spy'd, with that same fairy champion's page,
He to him leapt; and that same envious gage,
Of victor's glory, from him snatcht away. Fairy Queen.

There I throw my gage
Disclaiming here the kindred of a king,
And lay aside my high blood's royalty. Shaksp. Richard II.
There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell. Shaksp. Richard II.
They from their mothers breasts poor orphans rend,
Nor without gages to the needy lend. Sandy's Paraphrase.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Southern's Oronok.
But since it was decreed, auspicious king,
In Britain's right that thou should'st wed the main,
Heav'n, as a gage, would call some previous thing,
And therefore doom'd that Layton should be slain. Dryden.
In any truth, that gets not possession of our minds by self-evidence or demonstration, the arguments, that gain it assent, are the vouchers and gages of its probability. Locke.

To GAGE, v. a. [gager, French.]
1. To wager; to depose as a wager; to impawn; to give as a caution, pledge, or security.

Against the which, a moiety competent
Was gaged by our king. Shaksp. Hamlet.
Drawing near the shore, he found the Turkish merchants making merry upon the main: unto these merchants he gave due salutations, gaging his faith for their safety, and they likewise to him. Knellet's History of the Turks.

2. To measure; to take the contents of any vessel of liquids particularly. More properly gauge. See GAUGE.

—Nay, but I bar to-night: you shall not gage me
By what we do to-night. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.
To GA'GGLE, v. n. [gaggen, gagelen, Dutch.] To make noise like a goose.

Birds prune their feathers, geese gaggle, and crows seem to call upon rain: which is but the comfort they receive in the relenting of the air. Bacon's Natural History, N° 823.
May fat geese gaggle with melodious voice.

And ne'er want gooseberries or apple-sauce. King.
GA'ITY. See GAYETY.

GAILY, adv. [from gay.]
1. Airily; cheerfully.

2. Splendidly; pompously; with great show.
The ladies gaily dress'd, the Mall adorn
With curious dyes, and paint the sunny morn. Gay's Trivia.
Like some fair flower that early Spring supplies,
That gaily blooms, but ev'n in blooming dies. Pope.

GAIN, n. f. [gain, French.]
1. Profit; advantage.

But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Phil. iii. 7.
Besides the purpose it were now, to teach how victory should be used, or the gains thereof communicated to the general content. Raleigh's Essays.

It is in praise of men as in gettings and gains; for light gains make heavy purses; for light gains come thick, whereas great come but now and then. Bacon's Essay 53.

This must be made by some governor upon his own private account, who has a great stock that he is content to turn that way, and is invited by the gains. Temple.

2. Interest; lucrative views.
That fir, which serves for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack, when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm. Shaksp. King Lear.

3. Unlawful advantage.
Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent unto you?

4. Overplus in a comparative computation; any thing opposed to loss.

To GAIN, v. a. [agagner, French.]
1. To obtain as profit or advantage.

Thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortions. Ezek. xxii. 12.

2. To have the overplus in comparative computation.
If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. If such a tradition were endeavoured to be set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult to conceive how ever it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson's Sermons.

4. To obtain increase of any thing allotted.
I know that ye would gain the time, because ye see the king as gone from me. Dan. ii. 8.

5. To obtain whatever good or bad.
Ye should not have looked from Crete, and have gained this harm and loss. Acts xxvii. 21.

6. To win.

GAI

They who were sent to the other pass, after a short resistance, gained it. Clarendon, b. viii.

Fat fees from the defended Umbrian draws,
And only gains the wealthy client's cause. Dryd. Pers. Sat.
O love! for Sylvia let me gain the prize,
And make my tongue victorious as her eyes. Pope's Spring.

7. To draw into any interest or party.
Come, with presents, laden from the port,
To gratify the queen and gain the court. Dryd. Virg. Æn.

If Pyrrhus must be wrought to pity,
No woman does it better than yourself:
If you gain him, I shall comply of course. A. Phil. ii.

8. To reach; to attain.
The West glimmers with some streaks of day:
Now spurs the latest traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Death was the post, which I almost did gain:
Shall I once more be toft into the main? Wallr.

We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it. Addison on Italy.

Thus sav'd from death, they gain the Phœtan shores,
With shatter'd vessels and disabled oars. Pope's Odyssey, b. iii.

9. To GAIN over. To draw to another party or interest.
The court of Hanover should have endeavoured to gain over those who were represented as their enemies. Swift.

To GAIN, v. n.
1. To enroach; to come forward by degrees.
When watchful herons leave their wat'ry stand,
And mounting upward with erected flight,
Gain on the skies, and soar above the night. Dryd. Virg. Gæ.

On the land while here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide sandy plains. Pope on Criticism.

2. To get ground; to prevail against.
The English have not only gained upon the Venetians in the Levant, but have their cloth in Venice itself. Addison.

3. To obtain influence with.
My good behaviour had gained so far on the emperor, that I began to conceive hopes of liberty. Galliver's Travels.

To GAIN, v. n. To grow rich; to have advantage; to be advanced in interest or happiness.

GAIN, adj. [An old word now out of use.] Handy; ready;
dexterous.

GA'INER, n. f. [from gain.] One who receives profit or advantage.

The client, besides retaining a good conscience, is always a gainer, and by no means can be at any loss, as feeling, if the composition be overhurd, he may relieve himself by recourse to his oath. Bacon's Off. of Alienation.

If what I get in empire
I lose in fame, I think myself no gainer. Denham's Suppl.

He that loses anything, and gets wisdom by it, is a gainer by the loss. L'Estrange's Fables.

By extending a well regulated trade, we are as great gainers by the commodities of many other countries as those of our own nation. Addison's Freeholder.

GA'INFUL, adj. [gain and full.]
1. Advantageous; profitable.

He will dazzle his eyes, and bait him in with the luscious propofal of some gainful purchase, some rich match, or advantageous project. South.

2. Lucrative; productive of money.
Nor knows he merchants gainful care. Dryden's Horace.

Thrice sacred muse! commodious precepts gives,
Instructive to the swains, not wholly bent
On what is gainful: sometimes the divers
From solid counsels. Philips.

GA'INFULLY, adv. [from gainful.] Profitably; advantageously.

GA'INFULNESS, n. f. [from gainful.] Profit; advantage.

GA'INGIVING, n. f. [gainful and give.] The same as misgiving; a giving against; as gainfaying, which is still in use, is faying against, or contradicting. Hammer.

It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gainfaying as would, perhaps, trouble a woman. Shaksp. Hamlet.

GA'INLESS, adj. [from gain.] Unprofitable; producing no advantage.

GA'INLESSNESS, n. f. [from gainless.] Unprofitableness; want of advantage.

The parallel holds too in the gainfulness as well as labori-ousness of the work: those wretched creatures, buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they dugged; no more is the insatiable miser. Decay of Piety.

GA'INLY, adv. [from gain.] Handily; readily; dexterously.

To GA'INSAY, v. a. [gainst and say.]
1. To contradict; to oppose; to controvert with; to dispute against.

Speeches which gainfay one another, must of necessity be applied both unto one and the same subject. Hooker, b. v.

Too facile then, thou didst not much gainfay;
Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milton's P. L.

2. To deny any thing.

GAL

I never heard yet of any bold vices wanted
That any of those bolder vices wanted

Less impudence to gainfay what they did,
Than to perform it first. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

GA'INSAYER, n. f. [from gainfay.] Opponent; adversary.
Such as may satisfy gainfayers, when suddenly, and besides expectation, they require the same at our hands. Hooker, b. v.

We are, for this cause, challenged as manifest gainfayers of Scripture, even in that which we read for Scripture unto the people. Hooker, b. vi. f. 19.

It was full matter of conviction to all gainfayers. Hammond.
GA'INST, prep. [for against.] See AGAINST.

Tremble, ye nations! who, secure before,
Laugh'd at those arms, that 'gainst ourselves we bore. Dryd.

To GA'INSTAND, v. a. [gainst and stand.] To withstand; to oppose; to resist.

Love proved himself valiant, that durst with the sword of reverent duty gainstand the force of so many enraged desires. Sidney, b. ii.

GA'IRISH, adj. [gearrish, to dress fine, Saxon.]
1. Gaudy; showy; splendid; fine.

I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,
The pretension of but what I was;
A mother, only mock'd with two fair babes;
A dream of what thou wast, a gainrish flag.

To be the aim of every dangerous shot. Shaksp. Rich. III.
There in close covert by some brook,
Where no profane eye may look,
Hide me from day's gainrish eye. Milton.

2. Extravagantly gay; flighty.
Fame and glory transports a man out of himself: it makes the mind loose and gainrish, scatters the spirits, and leaves a kind of dissolution upon all the faculties. Saunders's Sermons.

GA'IRISHNESS, n. f. [from gainrish.]
1. Finery; flaunting gaiety.

2. Flighty or extravagant joy.
Let your hope be without vanity, or gainrishness of spirit, but sober, grave and silent. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

GAIT, n. f. [gait, Dutch.]
1. A way; as, gang your gait.

Good youth, address thy gait unto her;
Be not denied access, stand at her door. Shaksp. Lear.

2. March; walk.
Nought regarding, they kept on their gait,
And all her vain allurements did forsake. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Thou art so lean and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gait. Hubb. Tale.

3. The manner and air of walking.
Great Juno comes; I know her by her gait. Shaksp. Lear.
He had in his person, in his aspect, the appearance of a great man, which he preserved in his gait and motion. Clarendon.

A third, who, by his gait
And fierce demeanour, seems the prince of hell. Milton.

Wallowing, unwieldy, enormous in their gait. Milton.
I describ'd his way;

Bent all on speed, and mark'd his airy gait. Milt. Pa. Lost.
GALA'GS, n. f. A shepherd's clog.

My heart-blood is well nigh frome, I feel;
And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser's Pastoral.

GALA'NGAL, n. f. [galange, French.] A medicinal root, of which there are two species. The lesser galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness: its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acrid and pungent taste than the smaller fort. They are both brought from the East-Indies; the small kind from China, while the larger from the island of Java, wherewith the people, while it is fresh, by way of spice, season their dishes. The small fort is used with us in medicine as a stomachick, and is an ingredient in almost all bitter infusions and mixtures. Hill.

GALA'XY, n. f. [galaxia, galaxie, Fr.] The milky way; a stream of light in the sky.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as flars to thee appear.
Seen in the galaxy. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

A brown, for which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and flars be tann'd. Cicciolanti.

Men doubt, because they stand so thick i' th' sky,
If those be flars that paint the galaxy.

We dare not undertake to shew what advantage is brought to us by those innumerable flars in the galaxy. Bentley's Sermon.

GA'LEANUM, n. f.
We meet with galbanum sometimes in loose granules, called drops or tears, which is the purest, and sometimes in large masses. It is soft, like wax, and ductile between the fingers; of a yellowish or reddish colour: its smell is strong and disagreeable; its taste acrid, nauseous and bitterish. It is of a middle nature between a gum and a resin, being inflammable

GAL

as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil as pure resins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant, whose stalks are about an inch thick, and five or six feet high: its leaves are like the common anise, of a strong smell, and acrid taste; but the flowers, and especially the seeds, much more so. The whole plant abounds with a viscous milky juice, which it yields when wounded, and which soon concretes into substance called galbanum. The plant is frequent in Persia, and in many parts of Africa. Its medicinal virtues are considerable in asthma, coughs, and hysterick complaints. Hill's Materia Medica.

I yielded indeed a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh; as galbanum. Ezech. xxiv. 15.

GALE, n. f. [gahling, hastily, sudden, German.] A wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze.

What happy gale
Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona? Shaksp. Lear.

Winds
Of gentlest gale Arabian odours fann'd
From their soft wings, and Flora's earliest smells. Milton.

Fresh gales and gentle air.
Umbria's green retreats, Addison.

Where western gales eternally reside.

GA'LEAS, n. f. [galasse, French.] A heavy low-built vessel, with both sails and oars. It carries three masts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley. It has thirty-two seats for rowers, and six or seven slaves to each. They carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tire of guns. Diet.

The Venetians pretend they could fit out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred gallees, and ten ga-leasses. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

GA'LEATED, adj. [galatus, Latin.]
1. Covered as with a helmet.

A galeated echinus copped, and in shape somewhat more conick than any of the foregoing. Wadsworth on Fossils.

2. [In botany.] Such plants as bear a flower resembling an helmet, as the monkhood.

GALER'ULATE, adj. [from galerus, Latin.] Covered as with a hat.

GA'LIOT, n. f. [galiotte, French.] A little galley or sort of brigantine, built very slight and fit for chase. It carries but one mast, and two or three paterroes. It can both sail and row, and has sixteen or twenty seats for the rowers, with one man to each oar. Diet.

Barbarossa sent before him Dragut and Corsetus, two notable pyrates, with thirty galiots, who, landing their men, were valiantly encountered by Sarmatus, and forced again to their galiots. Knellet's History of the Turks.

GALL, n. f. [zeala, Saxon; galle, Dutch.]

1. The bile; an animal juice remarkable for its supposed bitterness.

Come to my woman's breast,
And take my milk for gall, you murth'ring ministers! Shak.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shaksp. Lear.

It drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. Shaksp. King Lear.

This position informs us of a vulgar error, terming the gall bitter, as their proverb more peremptorily implies, it's as bitter as gall; whereas there's nothing puttable sweeter; and what is most unctuous must needs partake of a sweet favour.

Gall is the greatest solvent of curdled milk: Boerhaave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an eel with success. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The part which contains the bile.

The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar. Brown's Sac. Err.

3. Any thing extremely bitter.

Thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste! Shaksp.

She still insults, and you must still adore;
Grant that the honey's much, the gall is more. Dryd. Juv.

4. Rancour; malignity.
They did grow hurt unto his title, and have left a perpetual gall in the mind of the people. Spenser's State of Ireland.

5. A slight hurt by fretting off the skin. [From the verb.]
This is the fatal wound of the tongue, carries least smart, but infinitely more of danger; and is as much superior to the former, as a gangrene is to a gall or scratch: this may be sore and vexing, but that stupifying and deadening.

Government of the Tongue, f. 8.

6. Anger; bitterness of mind.
Suppose your hero were a lover,
Though he before had gall and rage;
He grows dispirited and low,
He hates the fight, and shuns the blow. Prior.

GAL

7. [From galla.]
Galls or galnuts are a kind of preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on various trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have two kinds, the Oriental and the European galls: the Oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm and solid texture, and a disagreeable, acerb, and astringent taste. The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces: they are light, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a less austere taste, and are of much less value than the first fort, both in manufactures and medicine. The general history of galls is this: an insect of the fly kind, for the safety of her young, wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposits her egg: the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg of the fly, which, as soon as it is perfect, and in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen on its surface, the maggot, or its remains, are sure to be found within, on breaking it. It has been observed, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries; but this observation should be confined to the medicinal galls; for all those excrescences which we find on this tree in our own woods, and call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true and genuine galls, though less firm in their texture. The true reason of the hard ones not being produced with us, seems to be that we want the peculiar species of insect to which they owe their origin, which is a fly of the ichneumon kind, only found in hot countries. The species of fly that occasions, by its punctures, the soft galls of France and Italy, is different both from the Syrian one and from ours, though still of the ichneumon kind; and we find the several kinds, which occasion the different galls in our own kingdom, produce different kinds, and those of different degrees of hardness, on the same tree. Galls are used in making ink, and in dying and dressing leather, and many other manufactures. In medicine they are very astringent, and good under proper management. Hill.
Besides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak-nuts. Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 635.
Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morbose excrescences, demonstrates that all such excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed. Ray on the Creation.
The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them. Derham.
To GALL, v. a. [galer, French.]
1. To hurt by fretting the skin.
I'll touch my point
With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,
It may be death. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
His yoke is easy, when by us embrac'd;
But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis cast. Denham.
A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horse, begins with casting his eye upon all things. Locke.
On the monarch's speech Achilles broke,
And furious thus, and interrupting spoke,
Tyrant, I well deserv'd thy galling chain. Pope's Iliad.
2. To impair; to wear away.
He doth object, I am too great of birth;
And that my state being gall'd with my expence,
I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Shakespeare.
If it should fall down in a continual stream like a river, it would gall the ground, wash away plants by the roots, and overthrow houses. Ray on the Creation.
3. To tease; to fret; to vex.
In honour of that action, and to gall their minds who did not so much commend it, he wrote his book. Hooker, b. ii.
What they seem contented with, even for that very cause we reject; and there is nothing but it pleaseth us the better, if we espy that it galleth them. Hooker, b. iv. f. 9.
When I shew justice,
I pity those I do not know;
Which a dimis'd offence would after gall. Shakespeare.
Let it not gall your patience, good lago,
That I extend my manners: 'tis my breeding,
That gives me this bold shew of courtesy. Shakespeare, Othello.
All studies here I solemnly defy,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke. Shak. H. IV.
No man commits any sin but his conscience finites him, and his guilty mind is frequently galled with the remembrance of it. Tillotson's Sermons.
5. To harass; to mischief.
The Helots had gotten new heart, and with divers sorts of shot from corners of streets and house-windows galled them. Sidney.
Light demilances from afar they throw,
Fasten'd with leathern thongs, to gall the foe. Dryd. En.

In our wars against the French of old, we used to gall them with our long bows, at a greater distance than they could shoot their arrows. Addison on the State of the War.
To GALL, v. n. To fret.
I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shakespeare's Henry V.
GALLANT, adj. [galant, French, from gala, fine dress, Spanish.]
1. Gay; well dressed; showy; splendid; magnificent.
A place of broad rivers, wherein shall go no gally with oars, neither shall gallant ships pass thereby. If. xxiii. 21.
The gay, the wife, the gallant, and the grave,
Subdu'd alike, all but one passion have. Waller.
2. Brave; high spirited; daring; magnanimous.
Scorn, that any should kill his uncle, made him seek his revenge in manner gallant enough. Sidney, b. ii.
But, fare thee well, thou art a gallant youth. Shakespeare.
A gallant man, whose thoughts fly at the highest game, requires no further insight into them than to satisfy himself by what way they may be performed. Digby on the Soul, Dedicat.
3. Fine; noble; specious.
There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;
But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,
Make gallant thew and promise of their mettle. Shakespeare.
He discour'd, how gallant and how brave a thing it would be for his highness to make a journey into Spain, and to fetch home his mistress. Clarendon.
4. Inclined to courtship.
When first the soul of love is sent abroad,
The gay troops begin
In gallant thought to plume their painted wings. Thomson.
GALLANT, n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. A gay, sprightly, airy, splendid man.
The new proclamation.
—What is't for?
—The reformation of our travell'd gallants.
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and taylor's. Shakespeare.
The gallants and lusty youths of Naples came and offered themselves unto Vadius. Kroll's History of the Turk.
The gallants, to protect the lady's right,
Their fauchions brandish'd at the grisly fright. Dryden.
Gallants, look to't, you say there are no frights;
But I'll come dance about your beds at night. Dryden.
2. A whoremaster, who cares for women to debauch them.
One, worn to pieces with age, shews himself a young gallant. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
The next carried a handsome young fellow upon her back: he had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant. Addison's Spectator.
3. A wooer; one who courts a woman for marriage. In the two latter senses it has commonly the accent on the last syllable.
GALLANTLY, adv. [from gallant.]
1. Gayly; splendidly.
2. Bravely; nobly; generously.
You have not dealt so gallantly with us as we did with you in a parallel case: last year a paper was brought here from England, which we ordered to be burnt by the common hangman. Swift.
GALLANTRY, n. f. [galanterie, French.]
1. Splendour of appearance; show; magnificence; glittering grandeur; ostentatious finery.
Make the sea shine with gallantry, and all
The English youth flock to their admiral. Waller.
2. Bravery; nobleness; generosity.
The eminence of your condition, and the gallantry of your principles, will invite gentlemen to the useful and ennobling study of nature. Glavin. Serp. Prefat.
3. A number of gallants.
Hector, Deiphobus, and all the gallantry of Troy, I would have arm'd to-day. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
Courtship; refined address to women.
The martial Moors, in gallantry refin'd,
Invent new arts to make their charmers kind. Granoville.
5. Vicious love; lewdness; debauchery.
It looks like a sort of compounding between virtue and vice, as if a woman were allowed to be vicious, provided she be not a profligate; as if there were a certain point where gallantry ends, and infamy begins.
GALLEASS, n. f. [galais, French.] A large galley; a vessel of war driven with oars.
My father hath no less Than three great argosies, besides two galleos,
And twelve tight galleies. Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew.
The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, whereof galleasses and galleons seventy-two, goodly ships, like floating towers. Bacon's War with Spain.
GALLEON, n. f. [galion, French.] A large ship with four or sometimes five decks, now in use only among the Spaniards. I assured them that I would stay for them at Trinidad, and that no force should drive me thence, except I were sunk or set on fire by the Spanish galleons. Raleigh's History.

GALLERY, n. f. [galerie, French, derived by Du Cange from galeria, low Latin, a fine room.]
1. A kind of walk along the floor of a house, into which the doors of the apartments open; in general, any building of which the length much exceeds the breadth.
In most part there had been framed by art such pleasant arbors, that, one answering another, they became a gallery aloft from tree to tree, almost round about, which below gave a perfect shadow. Sidney, b. i.
High lifted up were many lofty towers,
And goodly galleries fair overlaid. Fairy Queens, b. i.
Your gallery
Have we pass'd through, not without much content. Shakespeare.
The row of return on the banquet side, let it be all flately galleries, in which galleries let there be three cupola's. Bacon.
A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Not to the foe yet known. Denham.
Nor is the shape of our cathedral proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other; for into this condition the parish-churches of London are driving apace, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them. Graunt.
There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison on Italy.
2. The seats in the playhouse above the pit, in which the meaner people sit.
While all its throats the gallery extends,
And all the thunder of the pit ascends. Pope's Ep. of Horace.
GALLETYLE, n. f. I suppose this word has the same import with gallipot.
Make a compound body of glass and gallestyle; that is, to have the colour milky like a chalcedon, being a stuff between a porcelaine and a glass. Bacon's Phys. Rem.
GALLEY, n. f. [galia, Italian; galere, French; derived, as some think, from galathea, a helmet pictured anciently on the prow; as others from galathea, the swordfish; as others from galien, expressing in Syriac men exposed to the sea. From galley come galleass, galloon, galliot.]
1. A vessel driven with oars, much in use in the Mediterranean, but found unable to endure the agitation of the main ocean. Great Neptune grieved underneath the load
Of ships, hulks, galleies, barks and brigandines. Fairfax.
In the ages following, navigation did every where greatly decay, and especially far voyages; the rather by the use of galleies, and such vessels as could hardly brook the ocean. Bacon's New Atlantis.
Jason ranged the coasts of Asia the Leds in an open boat, or kind of galley.
On oozy ground his galley's moor;
Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore. Dryden.
2. It is proverbially considered as a place of toilsome misery, because criminals are condemned to row in them.
The most voluptuous person, were he tied to follow his hawks and his hounds, his dice and his courthips every day, would find it the greatest torment that could befall him: he would fly to the mines and the galleies for his recreation, and to the spade and the mattock for a diversion from the misery of a continual uninterrupted pleasure. Saath's Sermons.
GALLEY-SLAVE, n. f. [galley and slave.] A man condemned for some crime to row in the galleies.
As if one chain were not sufficient to load poor man, but he must be clogged with innumerable chains: this is just such another freedom as the Turkish galley-slaves do enjoy. Bramb.
Hardened galley-slaves despise manumission. Deay of Piety.
The furies gently dash against the shore,
Flocks quit the plains, and galley-slaves their oar. Garth.
From the Gaulish ard, genius, and gay.
1. A gay, brisk, lively man; a fine fellow.
Selden is a galliard by himself. Cleveland.
2. An active, nimble, spritely dance. It is in both senses now obsolete.
I did think by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was form'd under the star of a galliard. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.
There's nought in France
That can be with a nimble galliard won:
You cannot revel into dukedoms there. Shakespeare, Henry V.
If there be any that would take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on; as musicians use to do with those that dance too long galliards. Bacon.
The tripla's and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion; as when galliard time and measure time are in the melody of one dance. Bacon's Natural History.
GALLIARDISE, n. f. [galliard, French.] Merriment; exuberant gaiety.
At my nativity my ascendant was the watry sign of Scorpius: I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me: I am no way facetious, nor disposed for the mirth and galliardise of company. Brown's Rel. Med.

GAL

GALLICISM, n. f. [gallicisme, French, from gallicus, Latin.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language: such as, he figured in controversy; he held this conduct; he held the same language that another had held before: with many other expressions to be found in the pages of Belinbroke.
In English I would have Gallicisms avoided, that we may keep to our own language, and not follow the French mode in our speech. Pulson on the Classics.
GALLIGASKINS, n. f. [Caligæ Gallo-Vasconum. Skinner.] Large open hole.
My galligaskins, that have long withstood
The Winter's fury, and encroaching frosts,
By time subdu'd, what will not time subdue,
An horrid chafin disclose. Phillips.
GALLIMATHIA, n. f. [gallimathias, French.] Non sense; talk without meaning.
GALLIMAUFRY, n. f. [gallimaufree, French.]
1. A hock-poch, or hock of several sorts of broken meat; a medley.
They have made of our English tongue a gallimaufry of gambols, because they are not in't. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.
The painter who, under pretence of diverting the eyes, would fill his picture with such varieties as alter the truth of history, would make a ridiculous piece of painting, and a mere gallimaufry of his work. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
3. It is used by Shakespeare ludicrously of a woman.
Sir John affects thy wife.
—Why, fir, my wife is not young.
—He woos both high and low, both rich and poor;
He loves thy gallimaufry, friend. Shakespeare.
GALLIOT, n. f. [galiole, French.] A small swift galley.
Barbarossa departing out of Hellepontus with eighty galleies, and certain galliots, shaped his course towards Italy. Kroll.
GALLIPOT, n. f. [gleye, Dutch, shining earth. Skinner.] The true derivation is from gala, Spanish, finery. Gala, or gally-pot, is a fine painted pot. A pot painted and glazed, commonly used for medicines.
Plato said his master Socrates was like the apothecary's gal-lipot, that had on the outides apes, owls, and fatyrs; but within, precious drugs. Bacon, Apophth. 227.
Here phials in nice discipline are fet;
There gallipots are rang'd in alphabet. Garth's Dispensatory.
Alexandrinus thought it unsafe to trust the real secret of his phial and gallipot to any man. Spectator, N^o. 426.
Thou that do'st Æsculapius deride,
And o'er his gallipots in triumph ride. Penton.
GALLON, n. f. [gale, low Latin.] A liquid measure of four quarts.
Beat them into powder, and boil them in a gallon of wine, in a vessel close stopp'd. Hjeman's Surgery.
GALLON, n. f. [galion, French.] A kind of close lace, made of gold or silver, or of silk alone.
To GALLUP, v. n. [galoper, French. Derived by all the etymologists, after Budeus, from καταπαύειν; but perhaps it comes from gaut, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch; that is, to go on full speed.]
1. To move forward by leaps, so that all the feet are off the ground at once.
I did hear
The galloping of horse: who was't came by? Shak. Macb.
His steeds will be restrain'd,
But gallop lively down the western hill. Donne.
In such a shape grim Saturn did restrain
His heav'nly limbs, and flow'd with such a mane,
When half surpris'd, and fearing to be seen,
The leacher gallop'd from his jealous queen. Dryden's Virgil.
2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.
Seeing such streams of blood as threaten'd a drowning life,
We galloped toward them to part them. Sidney, b. ii.
They can espy
An armed knight towards them gallop fast,
That seem'd from some feared foe to fly. Fairy Queens, b. i.
He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallop all day full speed. Locke.
3. To move very fast.
The golden sun salutes the morn,
And, having gilt the ocean with his beams, Gallops the zodiack in his glistering coach. Shak. Tit. Andr.
Whom doth time gallop withal?
—With a thief to the gallows. Shakespeare, As you like it.
He that rides post through a country may, from the tran-sient view, tell how in general the parts lie: such superficial ideas he may collect in galloping over it. Locke.
GALLUP, n. f. [from the verb.] The motion of a horse when he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forwards, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while these are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hindlegs almost at once.

GAM

Farrier's Dict.

GALLOWAY. n. f. [from gallop.]

1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet. Martin. Hud.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

GALLOWAY. n. f. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the North; probably as coming originally from Galloway; ashire in Scotland.

To GALLOWAY. v. a. [agelpen, to fright, Saxon.] To terrify; to fright.

The wrathful skies
Gallow the very wand'ers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GALLOWGLASSES. n. f.

It is worth then likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen call gallowglasses; the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for gallow signifies an English fervitor or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail, down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was then pedes gravis armatura; and was instead of the footman that now weareth a corset, before the corset was used, or almost invented. Spenser on Ireland.

2. [Hammer, otherwise than Spenser.] Soldiers among the wild Irish, who serve on horseback.

A puissant and mighty pow'r
Of gallowglasses and stout kernes,
Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

GALLOW. n. f. [It is used by some in the singular; but by Gallow.] n. f. more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowes. Gallow, Gothic; gallow, Saxon; gallow, Dutch; which some derive from gallow, furca, Latin; others from gallow high; others from gallow, Welsh, power: but it is probably derived like gallow, to fright, from agelpen, the gallow being the great object of legal terror.]

1. A beam laid over two posts, on which malefactors are hanged.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows: in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney, b. ii.

I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of gallows and gallowes. Shakespeare's Cymbel.

I prophesied, if a gallow were on land,
This fellow could not drown. Shakespeare's Tempest.

A little before dinner he took the major aside, and whispered him in the ear, that execution must that day be done in the town, and therefore required him that a pair of gallows should be erected.

A production that naturally groweth under gallowes, and places of execution. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

A poor fellow, going to the gallows, may be allowed to feel the smart of whips while he is upon Tyburn road. Swift.

2. A wretch that deserves the gallows.

Cupid hath been five thousand years a boy.
—Ay, and a fivefold unhappy gallow too. Shakespeare.

GALLOWSERRE. adj. [gallow and free.] Exempt by destiny from being hanged.

Let him be gallowfree by my consent,
And nothing suffer, since he nothing meant. Dryden.

GALLOWTREE. n. f. [gallow and tree.] The tree of terror; the tree of execution.

He hung their conquer'd arms, for more defame,
On gallowtrees, in honour of his dearest dame. Fai. Queen.

A Scot, when from the gallowtree got loose, Drops into Styx, and turns a island goose. Cleaveland.

GAMBA'DE. n. f. [gamba, Italian, a leg.] Spatterdashes; GAMBA'DO. n. f. boots worn upon the legs above the shoe.

The pettifogger ambles to her in his gambades once a week. Dennis's Letters.

GAMBLER. n. f. [A cant word, I suppose, for game or gamester.] A knave whose practice it is to invite the unwary to game, and cheat them.

GAMBOGE. n. f.

Gamboge is a concreted vegetable juice, partly of a gummy, partly of a resinous nature. It is heavy, of a bright yellow colour, and scarce any smell. It is brought from America, and from many parts of the East Indies, particularly from Cambaja, or Cambogia, whence it has its name. Gamboge was not known in Europe till 1603, and soon after got into use as a purgative medicine; but the roughness of its operation rendering it less esteemed as such, it got into use in painting, where it yet retains its credit. Hill.

To GAMBOGE. v. n. [gambiller, French.]

1. To dance; to skip; to frisk; to jump for joy; to play merry frolics.

Bears, tigers, ounces, pards,
Gambol'd before them. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

GAM

The king of elfs, and little fairy queen,
Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green. Dryden.

The monsters of the flood
Gambol around him in the wat'ry way,
And heavy whales in awkward measures play. Pope.

2. To leap; to start.

'Tis not madnes
That I have utter'd; bring me to the test,
And I the matter will record, which madnes
Would gambol from. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

GAMBOT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A skip; a hop; a leap for joy.

A gentleman had got a favourite spaniel, that would be still toying and leaping upon him, and playing a thousand pretty gambols.

Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,
And beafts in gambols frisk'd before their honest god. Dryden.

2. A frolic; a wild prank.

For who did ever play his gambol's,
With such insufferable rambles? Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 2.

GAMBLE. n. f. [from gamba, gambarella, Italian.] The leg of a horse.

What can be more admirable than for the principles of the fibres of a tendon to be so mixed as to make it a soft body, and yet to have the strength of iron? as appears by the weight which the tendon, lying on a horse's gambrel, doth then command, when he rears up with a man upon his back. Green.

GAME. n. f. [gamon, a jest, Islandick.]

1. Sport of any kind.

We have had pastimes here, and pleasing game. Shakespeare.

2. Jest, opposed to earnest or seriousness.

Then on her head they set a garland green,
And crown'd her 'twixt earnest and 'twixt game. Fai. Q.

3. Insolent merriment; sportive insult.

Do they not seek occasion of new quarrels,
On my refusal, to distress me more;
Or make a game of my calamities. Milton's Agonistes.

4. A single match at play.

Advantage in play.
Mutual vouchers for our fame we stand,
And play the game into each other's hand. Dryden.

5. Scheme pursued; measures planned.

This seems to be the present game of that crown, and that they will begin no other 'till they see an end of this. Templ.

6. Field sports: as, the chase, falconry.

If about this hour he make his way,
Under the colour of his usual game,
He shall here find his friends with horse and men,
To let him free from his captivity. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

What arms to use, or nets to frame
Wild beafts to combat, or to tame,
With all the mysteries of that game. Waller.

Some sportmen, that were abroad upon game, spied a company of bustards and cranes.

8. Animals pursued in the field; animals appropriated to legal sportmen.

Hunting, and men, not beafts, shall be his game,
With war, and hostile snare, such as refuse Subjection to his empire tyrannous. Milton's Parad. Lost.

There is such a variety of game springing up before me, that I am distracted in my choice, and know not which to follow. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

A bloodhound will follow the track of the person he pursues, and all hounds the particular game they have in chase. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Go, with thy Cynthia hurl the pointed spear
At the rough bear, or chase the flying deer;
I and my Chloe take a nobler aim,
At human hearts we sling, nor ever miss the game. Prin.

Proud Nimrod first the bloody chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his prey was man;
Our haughty Norman boasts that bar'rous name,
And makes his trembling slaves the royal game. Pope.

9. Solemn contests exhibited as spectacles to the people.

The games are done, and Caesar is returning. Shakespeare.

Milo, when ent'ring the Olympick game,
With a huge ox upon his shoulders came. Denham.

To GAME. v. n. [gaman, Saxon.]

1. To play at any sport.

2. To play wantonly and extravagantly for money.

Gaming leaves no satisfaction behind it: it is no way profits either body or mind.

GAMMECOCK. n. f. [game and cock.] Cocks bred to fight.

They managed the dispute as fiercely as two gamecocks in the pit. Lect.

GAME-EGG. n. f. [game and egg.] Eggs from which fighting cocks are bred.

To make the fowl more furious for the fray. Garth.

GAMMEKEEPER. n. f. [game and keep.] A person who looks after game, and sees it is not destroyed. GAMESOME.

GAN

GAMESOME. adj. [from game.] Frolicsome; gay; sportive; playful; sportful.

Geron, though old, yet gamesome, kept one end with Sidney. Cosim.

I am not gamesome; I do lack some part
Of that quick spirit that is in Antony. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

The gamesome wind among her tresses plays,
And curleth up those growing riches short. Fairfax, b. iv.

Belial, in like gamesome mood. Milton's Paradise Lost.

This gamesome humour of children should rather be encouraged, to keep up their spirits and improve their strength and health, than curbed or restrained. Lect.

GAMESOMENESS. n. f. [from gamesome.] Sportiveness; merriment.

GAMESOMELY. adv. [from gamesome.] Merrily.

GAMSTER. n. f. [from game.]

1. One who is vitiously addicted to play.

Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

A gamester, the greater master he is in his art, the worse man he is. Bacon.

Gamesters for whole patrimonies play;
The steward brings the deeds, which must convey
The whole estate. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 1.

Could we look into the mind of a common gamester, we should see it full of nothing but trumps and matadores: her slumbers are haunted with kings, queens and knaves. Addison.

All the superfluous whims relate,
That fill a female gamester's pate;
What agony of soul she feels
To see a knave's inverted heels. Swift.

2. One who is engaged at play.

When lenity and cruelty play for kingdoms,
The gentler gamester is the soonest winner. Shakespeare's Henry V.

A man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamester sees always more than a looker-on: but, when all is done, the help of good counsel is that which setteth business free. Bacon's Essay 28.

3. A merry frolicsome person.

You're a merry gamester,
My lord Sands. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

4. A prostitute.

She's impudent, my lord,
And was a common gamester to the camp. Shakespeare.

GAMMER. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology; perhaps from grand mere, and therefore used commonly to old women.] The compellation of a woman corresponding to gaffer.

GAMMON. n. f. [gambone, Italian.]

1. The buttock of an hog salted and dried; the lower end of the flitch.

All for what price thy venal tongue was sold:
A rusty gammon of some leev'n years old. Dryden's Jew. Sat.

Gammons, that give a relish to the taste,
And potted fowl, and fish, come in so fast,
That ere the first is out, the second stinks. Dryden's Pers.

2. A kind of play with dice.

The quick dice,
In thunder leaping from the box, awake
The founding gammon. Thomson's Autumn.

GAMUT. n. f. [gama, Italian.] The scale of musical notes.

Madam, before you touch the instrument,
To learn the order of my fingering,
I must begin with rudiments of art,
To teach you gamut in a briefer sort. Shakespeare.

When by the gamut some musicians make
A perfect song, others will undertake,
By the same gamut chang'd, to equal it:
Things simply good can never be unfit. Donne.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a feuge expire. Addison.

GAN. v. n. [gan, from gan for begin.]

The noble knight gan feel
His vital force to faint. Spenser.

To GANCH. v. a. [ganchiare, from gancio, a hook, Italian; ganche, French.] To drop from a high place upon hooks by way of punishment: a practice in Turkey, to which Smith alludes in his Poecilius.

Cohors catenis qua pia stridulis
Gemunt onuli, vel fude trans finum
Luctantur acti, pendulive Sanguineis luctantur in unes. Muse Angl.

GANDER. n. f. [gansa, Saxon.] The male of the goose.

As deep drinketh the goose as the gander. Camden's Rem.

One gander will serve five geese. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GANG. v. n. [gansen, Dutch; gangan, Saxon; gang, Scottish.] To go; to walk: a come word not now used, except ludicrously.

But let them gang alone,
As they have brewed, so let them bear blame. Spenser.

GAO

Your flaunting beafts gang with their breasts open. Arbutnot.

GANG. n. f. [from the verb.] A number herding together; a troop; a company; a tribe; a herd. It is seldom used but in contempt or abhorrence.

Oh, you panderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conspiracy against me. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

As a gang of thieves were robbing a house, a mastiff fell a barking. L'Estrange's Fable 21.

Admitted in among the gang,
He acts and talks as they befriend him. Prior.

GANGHON. [French.] A kind of flower.

GANGLION. n. f. [ganglion, Fr. ganglione, Lat.] A tumour in the tendinous and nervous parts, proceeding from a fall or stroke. It relits, if stirred; if pressed upon the side, is not diverted, nor can be turned round. Harris.

Boneletters usually represent every bone dislocated, though possibly it be but a ganglion, or other crude tumour or preternatural protuberance of some part of a joint. Wifeman.

GANGRENE. n. f. [gangrene, Fr. gangrena, Lat.] A mortification; a stoppage of circulation followed by putrefaction.

This experiment may be transferred unto the cure of gangrenes, either coming of themselves, or induced by too much applying of opiates. Bacon's Natural History.

She saves the lovers, as we gangrene flay,
By cutting hopes, like a lopt limb, away. Waller.

A discolouring in the part was supposed an approach of a gangrene. Wifeman's Surgery.

If the substance of the soul is fettered with these paffions, the gangrene is gone too far to be ever cured: the inflammation will rage to all eternity. Addison's Spectator.

To GANGRENE. v. a. [gangrene, French, from the noun.] To corrupt to mortification.

In cold countries, when men's noses and ears are mortified, and, as it were, gangrened with cold, if they come to a fire they rot off presently; for that the few spirits, that remain in those parts, are suddenly drawn forth, and so putrefaction is made complete. Bacon's Natural History.

Gangren'd members must be lop'd away,
Before the nobler parts are tainted to decay. Dryden.

To GANGRENE. v. n. To become mortified.

My griefs not only pain me
As a ling'ring disease;
But finding no redress, ferment and rage,
Nor less than wounds immedicable
Rankle and fester. Milton's Agonistes.

To black mortification.
As phlegmons are subject to mortification, so also in fat bodies they are apt to gangrene after opening, if that fat be not speedily digested out. Wifeman's Surgery.

GANGRENOUS. adj. [from gangrene.] Mortified; producing or betokening mortification.

The blood, turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing hemorrhages, pustules red, lead-coloured, black and gangrenous. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GANGWAY. n. f. In a ship, the several ways or passages from one part of it to the other.

GANGWEEK. n. f. [gang and week.] Rogation week, when processions are made to lustrate the bounds of parishes. Ditch.

GANTLOPE. n. f. [gantlet, only corrupted from gantlope, GANTLET.] n. f. all, and loper, to run, Dutch.] A military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives a lash from each man.

But would'st thou, friend, who hast two legs alone,
Would'st thou to run the gantlet these expose,
To a whole company of hob-nail'd shoes? Dryden's Jew.

Young gentlemen are driven with a whip, to run the gantlet through the several classes. Locke.

GANZA. n. f. [gansa, Spanish, a goose.] A kind of wild goose, by a flock of which a virtuoso was fabled to be carried to the lunar world.

They are but idle dreams and fancies,
And favour strongly of the ganza's. Hudibras, p. ii.

GAOL. n. f. [geol, Welsh; geole, French.] A prison; a place of confinement. It is always pronounced and too often written jail, and sometimes goal.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol. Sh. K. Lear.

Have I been ever free, and must my house
Be my retentive enemy, my gaol? Shakespeare's Timon.

If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the gaols, and let out the prisoners. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

GAOLDELIVERY. n. f. [gaol and delivery.] The judicial process, which by condemnation or acquittal of persons confined evacuates the prison.

Then doth th' aspiring soul the body leave,
Which we call death; but were it known to all,
What life our souls do by this death receive,
Men would it birth or gaol delivery call. Davies.

These make a general gaol delivery of souls, not for punishment. South.

GAOLER. n. f. [from gaol.] Keeper of a prison; he to whose care the prisoners are committed.

This

This is a gentle provost; seldom, when
The steeld gaoler is the friend of men. Sh. Meaf. for Meaf.
I know not how or why my furly gaoler,
Hard as his irons, and infolent as pow'r
When put in vulgar hands, Cleanthes, Put off the brute. Dryden's Cleomenes.
From the polite part of mankind he had been banished and immured, 'till the death of her gaoler Tatler, N^o. 53.
GAP. n. f. [from gape.]

1. An opening in a broken fence.
Behold the despair,
By custom and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gates. Tatler's Husbandry.
With terrors and with furies to the bounds
And crystal wall of heav'n; which, opening wide,
Roll'd inward, and a spacious gap disclosed
Into the wasteful deep. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
Buffs are most lasting of any for dead hedges, or to mend gaps. Mortimer's Husbandry.
I fought for a man, says God, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me, for the land that I should not destroy it. Rogers, Sermon 18.

2. A breach.
The loss of that strong city concerned the Christian commonweal: manifold and lamentable miseries afterwards enfued by the opening of that gap, not unto the kingdom of Hungary only, but to all that side of Christendom. Knolles.
3. Any passage.

He's made master
O' th' rolls and the king's secretary: further Stands in the gap, and treads for more preferment. Shakspeare.
So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear,
And hears him rustling in the wood. Dryden.

4. An avenue; an open way.
The former kings of England passed into them a great part of their prerogatives; which though then it was well intended, and perhaps well deferred, yet now such a gap of mischief lies open thereby, that I could wish it were well flopt. Spenser.
5. A hole; a deficiency.

If you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your honour. Shak. King Lear.
Nor is it any botch or gap at all in the works of nature.

6. Any interstice; a vacuity.
Each one demand, and answer to his part Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were differ'd. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.
That I might sleep out this great gap of time my Antony is away. Shakspeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
To make 'twixt words and lines huge gaps,
Wide as meridians in maps. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 3.
One can revive a languishing conversation by a sudden surprising sentence; another is more dexterous in seconding; a third can fill the gap with laughing. Swift's Gentle Conversation.

7. An opening of the mouth in speech during the pronunciation of two successive vowels.
The hiatus, or gap between two words, is caused by two vowels opening on each other. Pope.

8. To stop a GAP, is to elude by some mean shift: alluding to hedges mended with dead bushes, till the quickets will grow.
His policy consists in setting traps. Swift.
In finding ways and means, and stopping gaps.

9. GAP-TOOTHED. adj. [gap and tooth.] Having interstices between the teeth.
The reeve, miller, and cook, are distinguished from each other as much as the mincing lady priores and the broad-speaking gap-toothed wife of Bath. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

10. To Gape. v. n. [gapan, Saxon.]
1. To open the mouth wide; to yawn.
Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad, if they behold a cat. Shakspeare.
Gaping or yawning, and stretching, do pass from man to man; for that that causeth gaping and stretching is when the spirits are a little heavy by any vapour. Arbutnot.
She stretches, gapes, unglues her eyes,
And asks if it be time to rise. Swift.

2. To open the mouth for food, as a young bird.
As callow birds,
Whose mother's kill'd in seeking of the prey,
Cry in their nest, and think her long away;
And at each least that flies, each blast of wind,
Gape for the food which they must never find. Dryden.
As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain,
Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train. Dryden.

3. To desire earnestly; to crave. With fer.
To her grim death appears in all her shapes;
The hungry grave for her due tribute gapes.
To thy fortune be not thou a slave;
For what hast thou to fear beyond the grave?

And thou, who gap'st for my estate, draw near;
For I would whisper somewhat in thy ear. Dryden's Pers.
4. With after.
What shall we say of those who spend their days in gaping after court-favour and preferments? L'Estrange.

5. With at.
Many have gaped at the church revenues; but, before they could swallow them, have had their mouths stopp'd in the church-yard. Sauti's Sermon.

6. To open in fissures or holes.
If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape
And bid me hold my peace. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father. Sh. H. VI.
The great horse-muffel, with the fine shell, doth gape and flut as the oysters do. Bacon's Natural History.
The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes and greedily opens itself to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower. Sauti.
The mouth of a little artery and nerve gapes into the cavity of these vessels. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

7. To open with a breach.
The planks, their pitchy coverings wash'd away,
Now yield, and now a yawning breach display:
The roaring waters, with a hostile tide,
Rush through the ruins of her gaping side. Dryden.
That all these actions can be performed by aliment as well as medicines, is plain; by observing the effects of different substances upon the fluids and solids, when the vessels are open and gape by a wound. Arbutnot.

8. To open; to have an hiatus.
There is not, to the best of my remembrance, one vowel gaping on another for want of a cesura in this whole poem. Dryden's An. Dedication.

9. To make a noise with open throat.
And, if my muse can through past ages see,
That noisy, nauseous, gaping fool is he. Reformation.

10. To stare with hope or expectation.
Others will gape t' anticipate
The cabinet designs of fate;
Apply to wizards, to foretell
What shall, and what shall never be. Hudibras, p. ii.

11. To stare with wonder.
Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
Which one day bloom'd and fruitful were the next. Shakspeare.
My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holbourn,
I saw good strawberries in your garden there. Shakspeare, R. III.
In the royal ordering of gardens, there ought to be gardens
for all the months in the year. Bacon's Essays.
In every garden should be provided flowers, fruit, shade and water. Temple.

12. To stare irreverently.
They have gaped upon me with their mouth. Jeb. xvi. 10.
GAP'ER. n. f. [from gape.]
1. One who opens his mouth.
2. One who stares foolishly.
3. One who longs or craves.

The golden shower of the dissolved abbey-lands rained well near into every gaper's mouth. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
GAR, in Saxon, signifies a weapon: so Eadgar is a happy weapon; Ethelgar, a noble weapon. Gibson's Camden.
To GAR, v. a. [giera, Islandick.] To cause; to make. It is still in use in Scotland.
Tell me, good Hobbinol, what gars thee greet?
What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs yorn?
Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lous forlorn. Spenser's Pastoral.

GARB. n. f. [garbe, French.]
1. Drefs; cloaths; habit.
Thus Belial, with words cloath'd in reason's garb, Counsel'd ignoble ease, and peaceful sloth. Milton's Paradise Lost.
He puts himself into the garb and habit of a professor of physick, and sets up. L'Estrange, Fable 37.

2. Fashion of drefs.
Horace's wit, and Virgil's state,
He did not steal, but emulate;
And when he would like them appear,
Their garb, but not their cloaths, did wear. Denham.

3. Exterior appearance.
This is some fellow,
Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect
A faucy roughness, and constrains the garb Quite from his nature. Shakspeare's King Lear.
GARBEACE. n. f. [garbeace, Spanish.] This etymology is very doubtful.
1. The bowels; the offal; that part of the inwards which is separated and thrown away.
The cloyed will,
That satiate, yet unsatisfy'd desire, that tub

Will fate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbace. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
A flum more fenicless than the ro'ry
Of old Arupicy and augry,
That out of garbages of cattle
Pregad'd th' events of truce or battle. Hudibras, p. ii.

Who, without avercion, ever look'd
On holy garbages, though by Homer cook'd? Reformation.
When you receive condign punishment, you run to your confessor, that parcel of guts and garbages. Lryd. Span. Pryor.
GARBEL. n. f. A plank next the keel of a ship. Bayley.

GARBRIDGE. n. f. Corrupted for garbidge.
All thavings of horns, hoofs of cattle, blood, and garbidge is good manure for land. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GARBISH. n. f. Corrupted from garbidge.
In Newfourdland they improve their ground with the gar-bish of fish. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GARBLE. v. a. [garbellare, Italian.] To sift; to part;
to separate the good from the bad.
But you who fathers and traditions take,
And garble some, and some you quite forsake. Dryden.
Had our author set down this command without garbling, as God gave it, and joined mother to father, it had made directly against him. Locke.

The underlarding works to collate, combine, and garble the images and ideas, the imagination and memory present to
it. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

GARBLES. n. f. [from garble.] He who separates one part from another.

A farther secret in this clause may best be discovered by the projectors, or at least the garblers of it. Swift's Examiner.
GARBOIL. n. f. [garboille, French; ga buglio, Italian.] Disorder; tumult; uproar. Hannmer.

Look here, and at thy sovereign leisure read
What garboils the awak'd. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
GARD. n. f. [garde, French.] Wardship; care; custody.

GARDEN. n. f. [garda, Welsh; jardin, French; giardino, Italian.]
1. A piece of ground inclosed, and cultivated with extraordinary care, planted with herbs or fruits for food, or laid out for pleasure.

Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
Which one day bloom'd and fruitful were the next. Shakspeare.
My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holbourn,
I saw good strawberries in your garden there. Shakspeare, R. III.
In the royal ordering of gardens, there ought to be gardens
for all the months in the year. Bacon's Essays.
In every garden should be provided flowers, fruit, shade and water. Temple.

2. A place particularly fruitful or delightful.
I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy. Shak. Tam. of the Shrew.

3. GARDEN is often used in composition for hortensis, or belonging to a garden.
GARDEN-MOULD. n. f. Mould fit for a garden.
They delight most in rich black garden-mould, that is deep and light, and mixed rather with sand than clay. Mortimer.

GARDEN-TILLAGE. n. f. Tillage used in cultivating gardens.
Peas and beans are what belong to garden tillage as well as that of the field. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GARDEN-WARE. n. f. The produce of gardens.
A clay bottom is a much more pernicious soil for trees and garden-ware than gravel. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GARDEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To cultivate a garden;
to lay out gardens.
At first, in Rome's poor age,
When both her kings and consuls held the plough,
Or garden'd well. Ben. Jonson's Catiline.
When ages grow to civility and elegance, men come to build stately, sooner than to garden finely; as if gardening were the greater perfection. Bacon, Essay 47.

GARDENER. n. f. [from garden.] He that attends or cultivates gardens.
Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that, if we will plant nettles, or sow lettuce, the power lies in our will. Shakspeare's Othello.
Gardeners tread down any loose ground, after they have sown onions or turnips. Bacon's Natural History.
The gardener may lop religion as he please. Howell.
The life and felicity of an excellent gardener is preferable to all other diversions. Hyde's Calendar.

Then let the learned gardener mark with care
The kinds of stocks, and what those kinds will bear. Dryd.
GARDENING. n. f. [from garden.] The act of cultivating or my compositions in gardening are after the Pindarick manner, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without affecting the nicer elegancies of art. Spectator, N^o. 477.

GARE. n. f. Coarse wool growing on the legs of sheep. Diet.
GARGARISM. n. f. [γάργαρασμος; gargarisme, French.] A liquid form of medicine to wash the mouth with. Quincy.
Apoplegmatisms and gargarisms draw the rheum down by the palate. Bacon's Natural History.

To GARGARIZE. v. a. [γάργαραζω; gargariser, French.]
To wash the mouth with medicated liquor.
Vinegar, put to the nostrils, or gargarized, doth ease the hicough; for that it is astringent, and inhibiteth the motion of the pituit. Bacon's Natural History.
This being relaxed, may make a flaking of the larynx;
as when we gargarize. Holder's Elements of Speech.

GARGET. n. f. A distemper in cattle.
The garget appears in the head, maw, or in the hinder parts. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GARGLE. v. a. [garguiller, French; gargolare, Ital.] gurgel, German, the throat.
1. To wash the throat with some liquor not suffered immediately to descend.

Gargle twice or thrice with sharp oxyerate. Harvey.
The excision made, the bleeding will soon be stoppt by gargling with oxyerate. Wijeman's Surgery.
They comb, and then they order ev'ry hair;
Next gargle well their throats. Dryden's Pers. Sat.

2. To warble; to play in the throat. An improper use.
Thole which only warble long,
And gargle in their throats a song. Waller.
So charm'd you were, you ceas'd a while to doat
On nonsense gargl'd in an eunuch's throat. Fenton.

GARGOLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A liquor with which the throat is washed.
His throat was washed with one of the gargles set down in the method of cure. Wijeman's Surgery.

GARGLION. n. f. An exudation of nervous juice from a bruise, or the like, which indurates into a hard immovable tumour. Quincy.

GARGOL. n. f. A distemper in hogs.
The signs of the gargol in hogs are, hanging down of the head, moist eyes, staggering, and loss of appetite. Mortimer.

GARLAND. n. f. [garlande, garland, French.] A wreath of branches or flowers.
Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel-tree,
A garland made, on temples for to wear;
For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village-lord that Whiffuntide to bear. Sidney.

With every minute you do change a mind,
And call him noble, that was now your hate,
Him vile, that was your garland. Shakspeare.
A reeling world will never stand upright,
'Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.

How! wear the garland! do it thou mean the crown?
—Ay, my good lord. Shakspeare's Richard III.
Then party-colour'd flow'rs of white and red
She wove, to make a garland for her head. Dryden's Fables.
Vanquish again, though she be gone,
Whole garland crown'd the victor's hair,
And reign; though she has left the throne,
Who made thy glory worth thy care. Prior.

Her gods and godlike heroes rise to view,
And all her faded garlands bloom anew. Pope.

GARLICK. n. f. [gar, Saxon; a lance, and leek, the leek that shoots up in blades. Skinner.]
It has a bulbous root, consisting of many small tubercles included in its coats: the leaves are plain: the flowers consist of six leaves, formed into a corymbus on the top of the stalk;
and are succeeded by subrotund fruit, divided into three cells, which contain roundish seeds. Milcr.

Garlick is of an extremely strong, and to most people a disagreeable smell, and of an acrid and pungent taste. It is an extremely active and penetrating medicine, as may be proved by applying plaisters of garlick to the soles of the feet, which issues will in a very little time give a strong smell to the breath.
Itues will smell strongly of garlick three or four hours after a person has eaten it; and given to fowls, it communicates its taste strongly to their flesh, and in some degree to their eggs.
Bruised, and laid on any tender part of the skin, it corrodes it, and raises blisters. Some are very fond of it in food; and a little of it is not only agreeable this way, but assists digestion, and strengthens the stomach. Hill.

Garlick has, of all our plants, the greatest strength, affords most nourishment, and supplies most spirits to those who eat little flesh. Temple.

'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;
Each clove of garlick is a sacred pow'r;
Religious nations sure, and blest abodes,
Where ev'ry orchard is o'er-run with gods. Tate's Juven.

GARLICK Pear-tree. n. f.
It hath an anomalous flower, consisting of four petals or leaves, which stand erect, the lower part being occupied by a number of chives: the pointal, which is fixed on a long foot-stalk,

stalk, rises from the centre of the empalement, and afterward becomes a globular fleshy fruit; in the centre of which are included many seeds, which are shaped almost like kidneys. This tree is pretty common in Jamaica, and several other places in the warmer parts of America, where it usually rises to the height of thirty or forty feet, and spreads into many branches. When the flowers fall off the pointal, it becomes a round fruit about the size of a tennis-ball, which, when ripe, has a rough brownish rind, and a mealy sweet pulp, somewhat like some of the European pears; but has a strong scent of garlic.

GARLICK Wild. n. f.

The characters are: it agrees in every respect with the garlic; but hath, for the most part, a sweet scent; and the flowers are produced in an umbel.

GARLICK-TER n. f. [from garlick and cat.] A mean fellow.

You've made good work,
You and your apron men, that stood so much Upon the voice of occasion, and
The breath of garlick-aters.

GARMENT n. f. [from garment, old French.] Any thing by which the body is covered; cloths; drefs.

Hence, rotten things, or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments.

Our leaf, once fallen, springeth no more; neither doth the sun or summer adorn us again with the garments of new leaves and flowers.

Three worthy persons from his side it tore,
And dy'd his garment with their feather'd gore.
The peacock, in all his pride, does not display half the colours that appear in the garments of a British lady, when she is drest.

GARNER n. f. [from grenier, French.] A place in which threshed grain is stored up.

Earth's increase, and joyous plenty,
Barns and *garner*s never empty.
For sundry foes the rural realm surround;
The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground;
For gather'd grain the blind laborious mole,
In winding mazes, works her hidden hole.

TO GARNER v. a. [from the noun.] To store as in *garner*s.

There, where I have garner'd up my heart,
Where either I must live, or bear no life.

GARNET n. f. [from granato, Italian; granatus, low Latin, from its resemblance in colour to the grain of the pomegranate.]

The garnet is a gem of a middle degree of hardness, between the sapphire and the common crystal. It is found of various sizes. Its surfaces are not so smooth or polite as those of a ruby, and its colour is ever of a strong red, with a plain admixture of blueish: its degree of colour is very different, and it always wants much of the brightness of the ruby. Hill. The garnet seems to be a species of the carbuncle of the ancients: the Bohemian is red, with a slight cast of a flame-colour; and the Syrian is red, with a slight cast of purple.

TO GARNISH v. a. [from garnir, French.]

1. To decorate with ornamental appendages.
There were hills which garnish'd their proud heights with stately trees.

All within with flowers was garnish'd,
That, when mild Zephyrus amongst them blew,
Did breathe out bounteous smells, and painted colours flew.

With taper light
To seek the beauteous eye of heav'n to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.

Paradise was a terrestrial garden, garnish'd with fruits, delighting both the eye and taste.

All the streets between the Bridge-foot and palace of Paul's, where the king then lay, were garnish'd with the citizens, standing in their liveries.

2. To embellish a dish with something laid round it.

With what expence and art, how richly drest!
Garnish'd with 'sparagus, himself a feast!

No man lards salt pork with orange-peel,
Or garnish'd his lamb with spitchook'd eel.

3. To fit with fetters.

GARNISH n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

So are you, sweets,
Ev'n in the lovely garnish of a boy.

Matter and figure they produce;
For garnish this, and that for use;

They seek to feed and please their guests.

2. Things strewed round a dish.

3. [In gaols.] Fetters.

4. Penfancula carceraria; an acknowledgment in money when first a prisoner goes into a gaol.

GAR

GARNISHMENT n. f. [from garnish.] Ornament; embellishment.

The church of Santa Guitiniana in Padoua is a found piece of good art, where the materials being but ordinary stens, without any garnishment of sculpture, do ravish the beholders.

GARNITURE n. f. [from garnish.] Furniture; ornament.

They conclude, if they fall short in the garniture of their knees, that they are inferior in the furniture of their heads.

Plain sense, which pleas'd your fires an age ago,
Is lost, without the garniture of show.

As nature has poured out her charms upon the female part of our species, so they are very studious in bestowing upon themselves the finest garnitures of art.

GARROUS adj. [from garum.] Resembling pickle made of fish.

In a civet-cat a different and offensive odour proceeds, partly from its food, that being especially fish; whereof this humour may be a garrous excretion, and odorous separation.

GARRAN n. f. [Erf. It imports the same as gelding. The word is still retained in Scotland.] A small horse; a hobby.

A highland horse which when brought into the North of England takes the name of gallaway.

When he comes forth he will make their cows and garraus to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons.

Every man would be forced to provide winter-fodder for his team, whereas common garraus shift upon grass the year round; and this would force men to the enclosing of grounds, so that the race of garraus would decrease.

GARRET n. f. [from garrit, the tower of a citadel, French.]

1. A room on the highest floor of the house.

The mob, commissi'd by the government,
Are seldom to an empty garret sent.

John Bull skipped from room to room; ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garret.

On earth the god of wealth was made
Sole patron of the building trade;

Leaving the arts the spacious air,
With licence to build castles there;

And 'tis conceiv'd his old pretence,
To lodge in garrets, comes from thence.

2. Rotten wood.

The colour of the shining part of rotten wood, by daylight, is in some pieces white, and in some pieces inclining to red, which they call the white and red garret.

GARRETER n. f. [from garret.] An inhabitant of a garret.

GARRISON n. f. [from garison, French.]

1. Soldiers placed in a fortified town or castle to defend it.

How oft he said to me,
Thou art no soldier fit for Cupid's garriſon.

2. Fortified place stored with soldiers.

Whom the old Roman wall so ill confin'd,
With a new chain of garriſons you bind.

3. The state of being placed in a fortification for its defence.

Some of them that are laid in garriſon will do no great but to the enemies.

TO GARRISON v. a. [from the verb.] To secure by fortresses.

Others those forces join,
Which garriſon the conquests near the Rhine.

GARRULITY n. f. [from garrulus, Latin.]

1. Loquacity; incontinence of tongue; inability to keep a secret.

Let me here
Expiate, if possible, my crime,
Shameful garrulity.

2. The quality of talking too much; talkativeness.

Some vices of speech must carefully be avoided: first of all, loquacity or garrulity.

GARRULOUS adj. [from garrulus, Latin.] Prattling; talkative.

Old age looks out,
And garrulous recounts the feats of youth.

GARTER n. f. [from garter, Welsh; jartier, French, from gans Welsh, the binding of the knee.]

1. A string or ribband by which the stocking is held upon the leg.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit.

When we rest in our cloaths we loosen our garters, and other ligatures, to give the spirits free passage.

Handsome garters at your knees.

There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves,
And all the trophies of his former loves.

2. The mark of the order of the garter, the highest order of English knighthood.

Now by my george, my garter.
—The george, profan'd, hath lost his holy honour;

The garter, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue.

GAS

You owe your Ormond nothing but a son,
To fill in future times his father's place,
And wear the garter of his mother's race.

3. The principal king at arms.

TO GARTER v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a garter.

He, being in love, could not see to garter his hose.

A person was wounded in the leg, below the gartering place.

GARTH n. f. [as if girth, from gird.] The bulk of the body measured by the girdle.

GAS n. f. [A word invented by the chymists.] It is used by Van Helmont, and seems designed to signify, in general, a spirit not capable of being coagulated: but he uses it loosely in many senses, and very unintelligibly and inconsistently.

GASCONADE n. f. [French, from Gascon, a nation eminent for boasting.] A boast; a bravado.

Was it a gasconade to please me, that you said your fortune was increased to one hundred a year since I left you?

TO GASCONADE v. n. [from the noun.] To boast; to brag; to bluster.

TO GASH v. a. [from habes, to cut, French, Scinner.] To cut deep so as to make a gaping wound; to cut with a blunt instrument so as to make the wound wide.

Where the Englishmen at arms had been defeated, many of their horses were found grievously gashed or gored to death.

Wit is a keen instrument, and every one can cut and gash with it; but to carve a beautiful image requires great art.

See me gash'd with knives,
Or fear'd with burning steel.

Screaming with blood, all over gash'd with wounds,
He reel'd, he groan'd, and at the altar fell.

GASH n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A deep and wide wound.

He glancing on his helmet, made a large
And open gash therein; were not his targe,
That broke the violence of his intent,

The weary soul from thence it would discharge.

A perilous gash, a very limb-lost off.

Hamilton drove Newton almost to the end of the lists; but Newton on a sudden gave him such a gash on the leg, that therewith he fell to the ground.

But th' ethereal substance clos'd,
Not long divisible; and from the gash
A stream of nectarous humour issuing flow'd.

2. The mark of a wound. I know not if this be proper.

I was fond of back-sword and cudgel play, and I now bear in my body many a black and blue gash and scar.

GASKINS n. f. [from Gaskaigne. See GALLIGASKINS.] Wide hose; wide breeches. An old ludicrous word.

If one point break, the other will hold;

Or, if both break, your gaskins fall.

TO GASP v. n. [from gape, Skinner; from gisse, Danish, to sob, Junius.]

1. To open the mouth wide to catch breath.

The sick for air before the portal gasp.

They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes;
But the weak voice deceiv'd their *gasp*ing throats.

The *gasp*ing head flies off; a purple flood Flows from the trunk.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew no longer air, but fire.

A scantling of wit lay *gasp*ing for life, and groaning beneath a heap of rubbish.

Pale and faint,
Me gasp for breath; and, as his life flows from him,
Demands to see his friends.

2. To emit breath by opening the mouth convulsively.

I lay me down to gasp my last breath;

The wolves will get a breakfast by my death.

He staggers round, his eyeballs roll in death,
And with short sobs he *gasp*s away his breath.

3. To long for. This sense is, I think, not proper, as nature never expresses desire by *gasp*ing.

The Castilian and his wife had the comfort to be under the same master, who, seeing how dearly they loved one another, and *gasp*ed after their liberty, demanded a most exorbitant price for their ransom.

GASP n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of opening the mouth to catch breath.

2. The short catch of breath in the last agonies.

His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name
Is at last gasp.

Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his last;
And to the last gasp cry'd out for Warwick.

If in the dreadful hour of death,
If at the latest gasp of breath,
When the cold damp bedews your brow,
You hope for mercy, shew it now.

Life's business at one gasp be o'er.

TO GAST v. a. [from gast, Saxon. See AGHAST.] To make aghast; to fright; to shock; to terrify; to fear; to affray.

GAT

When he saw my best alarmed spirits,
Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to th' encounter,
Or whether *gast*ed by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled.

GASTRICK adj. [from gastre.] Belonging to the belly.

GASTROGRAPHY n. f. [from gastre and graphein.] In strictness of etymology, signifies no more than sewing up any wound of the belly; yet in common acceptation it implies, that the wound of the belly is complicated with another of the intestine.

GASTROTOMY n. f. [from gastre and tomos.] The act of cutting open the belly.

GAT n. f. The preterite of get.

Moses gat him up into the mount.

GATE n. f. [from gate, Saxon.]

1. The door of a city, a castle, palace, or large building.

Open the gate of mercy, gracious God!

My soul flies through these wounds to seek thee.

GATES of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without Good-morrow to the sun.

2. A frame of timber upon hinges to give a passage into inclosed grounds.

Know'st thou the way to Dover?
—Both file and gate, horfeway and footpath.

3. An avenue; an opening.

Aunt had done nothing but wisely and politically, in setting the Venetians together by the ears with the Turks, and opening a gate for a long war.

GATEVEIN n. f. The vena portae.

Being a king that loved wealth, he could not endure to have trade sick, nor any obstruction to continue in the gatevein which disperseth that blood.

GATEWAY n. f. [from gate and way.] A way through gates of inclosed grounds.

Gateways between inclosures are so miry, that they cannot cart between one field and another.

TO GATHER v. a. [from gathian, Saxon.]

1. To collect; to bring into one place; to get in harvest.

I gather'd me silver and gold.

Gather stones—and they took stones and made an heap.

The seventh year we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase.

2. To pick up; to glean; to pluck.

Have satisfied the king for his divorce,
Gather'd from all the famous colleges.

Cast up the highways, gather out the stones.

I will spend this pretence upon those from whom I have gather'd my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer.

3. To crop.

What have I done?
To see my youth, my beauty, and my love
No sooner gain'd, but slighted and betray'd;
And like a rose just gather'd from the stalk,
But only smelt, and cheaply thrown aside,
To wither on the ground!

4. To assemble.

They have gathered themselves together against me.

Come ye heathen, and gather yourselves together.

He led us through three fair streets; and all the way we went there were gathered some people on both sides, standing in a row.

5. To heap up; to accumulate.

He that by usury and unjust gain increaseth his substance, shall gather it for him that will pity the poor.

6. To select and take.

Save us, O Lord, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks unto thy holy name.

7. To sweep together.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind.

8. To collect charitable contributions.

9. To bring into one body or interest.

I will gather others to him, besides those that are gathered unto him.

10. To draw together from a state of diffusion; to compress; to contract.

Immortal Tully shone,
The Roman rostra deck'd the consul's throne;
Gather'd his flowing robe he seem'd to stand,
In act to speak, and graceful stretch'd his hand.

11. To gain.

He gather'd ground upon her in the chase;
Now breathes upon her hair with nearer pace.

12. To pucker needlework.

GAU

13. To collect logically; to know by inference.
That which, out of the law either of reason or of God, men probably gathering to be expedient, they make it law.
Hooker, b. i. f. 3.

The reason that I gather he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance. Shakep.
After he had seen the vision, we endeavoured to get into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us.
Acts xvi. 10.

Return'd
By night, and listening where the hapless pair
Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaint, Thence gather'd his own doom. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
Mademoiselle de Scudery, who is as old as Sibil, is at this time translating Chaucer into modern French: from which I gather, that he has formerly been translated into the old Provençal. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

We may easily gather from this passage what notion the ancients had concerning a future state. Notes on the Odyssey.
14. To GATHER BRIBES. [A proverbial expression.] To have respite from any calamity.

The luckless lucky maid
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather her life in many miseries. Spenser.

To GATHER, v. n.
1. To be condensed; to thicken.

If ere night the gathering clouds we fear,
A fong will help the beating storm to bear. Dryden's Pasi.
When gathering clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys! he cries. Dry.
When the rival winds their quarrel try,
South, East and West, on airy couriers born,
The whirlwind gathers, and the woods are torn. Dryden.
Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,
And threatens every hour to burst upon it. Addison's Cato.

2. To grow larger by the accretion of similar matter.
Their snow-ball did not gather as it went; for the people came in to them. Bacon's Henry VIII.

3. To assemble.
There be three things that mine heart feareth; the slander of a city, the gathering together of an unruly multitude, and a false accusation. Ecclef. xxvi. 5.

4. To generate pus or matter.

Ask one, who by repeated restraints hath subdued his natural rage, how he likes the change, and he will tell you 'tis no less happy than the ease of a broken imposthume after the painful gathering and filling of it. Decay of Piety.
GATHER, n. f. [from the verb.] Pucker; cloth drawn together in wrinkles.

Give laws for pantaloons,
The length of breeches, and the caters,
Part cannons, periwigs and feathers. Hudibras, p. i.

GATHERER, n. f. [from gather.]

1. One that gathers; one that collects; a collector.

I will spend this preface about those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer and disposer of other mens stuff. Watson's Preface to Elem. of Architecture.

2. One that gets in a crop of any kind.

I was a herdman and a gatherer of fycamore-fruit. Amos vii.

Nor in that land

Do poisonous herbs deceive the gatherer's hand. May's Virg.

GATHERING, n. f. [from gather.] Collection of charitable contributions.

Let every one lay by him in store, that there be no gathering when I come. 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

GATTIN-TREE. See CORNELIAN-CHERRY, of which it is a species.

GAUDE, n. f. [The etymology of this word is uncertain:
Skinner imagines it may come from gaude, French, a yellow flower, yellow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks of gaude; and Mr. Lye finds gaude, in Douglas, to signify deceit or fraud, from gaudio, Welsh, to cheat. It seems to me most easily deducible from gaudium, Latin, joy; the cause of joy; a token of joy: thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure. In Scotland this word is still retained, both as a throwy bawble, and the person fooled. It is also retained in Scotland to denote a yellow flower.] An ornament; a fine thing; any thing worn as a sign of joy.

He stole th' impression of her fantasy,
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gauds, conceits,
Knacks, trifles, novelties, sweetmeats. Shakespeare.

The fun is in the heav'n, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,

Is all too wanton, and too full of gauds,
To give me audience. Shakespeare's King Lear.

My love to Hermia
Is melted as the snow; seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaud,

Which in my childhood I did doat upon. Shakespeare.

GAU

Some bound for Guiney, golden sand to find,
Bore all the gauds the simple natives wear;
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
For folded turbans finet holland bear. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.

To GAUDE, v. a. [gaudeo, Latin.] To exult; to rejoice at any thing.

Go to a gossip's feast, and gaud with me,
After so long grief such nativity. Shakespeare.

GAUDERY, n. f. [from gaud.] Finery; ostentatious luxury of dress.

The triumph was not pageants and gaudery, but one of the wisest and noolest institutions that ever was. Bacon's Essays.

Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears, of late, but in the high mode, the flaunting garb, and utmost gaudery of youth, with cloaths as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it. South's Sermons.

A plain suit, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be by taratula and known. Dryden.

GAUDILY, adv. [from gaudy.] Showily.

GAUDINESS, n. f. [from gaudy.] Showiness; tinsel appearance.

GAUDY, adj. [from gaudy.] Showy; splendid; pompous;
ostentatiously fine.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not exprest in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shakespeare Hamlet.

Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless

As the gay motes that people the fun-beams. Milton.

A man who walks directly to his journey's end, will arrive thither much sooner than him who wanders aside to gaze at every thing, or to gather every gaudy flower. Watts.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumage, that hopp'd from side to side. Dryden.

The Bavarian duke his brigades leads,
Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold. Phillips.

GAUDY, n. f. [gaudium, Latin.] A feast; a festival; a day of plenty.

He may surely be content with a fast to-day, that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow. Chapman.

GAVE, v. a. [from gaudy.]

Thou canst not every day give me thy heart;
If thou canst give it, then thou never gav'st it.

Lovers riddles are, that though thy heart depart,
It stays at home, and thou with losing sav'st it. Dome.

GAVEL, n. f. A provincial word for ground.

Let it lie upon the ground or gavel eight or ten days. Mort.

GAVELKIND, n. f. [In law.] A custom whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death amongst all his sons, or the land of the brother equally divided among the brothers, if he have no issue of his own. This custom is of force in divers places of England, but especially in Kent. Caval.

Among other Welsh customs he abolished that of gavelkind, whereby the heirs female were utterly excluded, and the bachelors did inherit as well as the legitimates, which is the very Irish gavelkind. Dorset's Ireland.

To GAUGE, v. a. [gaug, gauge, a measuring rod, French. It is pronounced gage.]

1. To measure with respect to the contents of a vessel.

2. To measure with regard to any proportion.

The vases nicely gaug'd on each side, broad on one side, and narrow on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird. Derham's Physico-Theology.

There is nothing more perfectly admirable in itself than that artful manner in Homer's battles of taking measure or gauging his heroes by each other, and thereby elevating the character of one person by the opposition of it to some other he is made to excel. Pope's Essay on Homer's Iliad.

GAUGE, n. f. [from the verb.] A measure; a standard.

This plate must be a gauge to file your worm and groove to equal breadth by. Mason's Math. Expl.

If money were to be hired, as land is, or to be had from the owner himself, it might then be had at the market rate, which would be a constant gauge of your trade and wealth. Lee.

Timothy proposed to his mistress, that she should entertain no servant that was above four foot seven inches high; and for that purpose had prepared a gauge, by which they were to be measured. Archibut's History of John Bull.

GAUGER, n. f. [from gauge.] One whose business is to measure vessels or quantities.

Those earls and dukes have, from the beginning, been privileged with royal jurisdiction; and, to this end, appointed their special officers, as sheriff, admiral, gauger, and echequer.

GAUNT, adj. [As if gaunt, from gepanian, to lessen, Saxon.]
Thin; slender; lean; meagre.

Oh, how that name befits my composition!
Old Gaunt, indeed, and gaunt in being old;
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And who ab stains from meat that is not gaunt?

For

GAZ

For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt;
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon,
Is my strict fast; I mean my childrens looks;
And therein fasting, thou hast made me gaunt;
Count am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,

Whole hollow womb inherits nought but bones. Sh. R. II.

Two maffis, gaunt and grim, her sight pursu'd,
And oft their fallen'd fangs in blood emur'd. Dryd. Fables.

GAUNTLY, adv. [from gaunt.] Leanly; slenderly; meagerly.

GAUNTLET, n. f. [gantelet, French.] An iron glove used for defence, and thrown down in challenges. It is sometimes in poetry used for the casque, or boxing glove.

A fealy gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakespeare Henry IV. p. i.

Feel but the difference, soft and rough;
This a gauntlet, that a muff

Some shall in swiftness for the goal contend,
And others try the twanging bow to bend;

The strong with iron gauntlets arm'd shall stand, Oppos'd in combat, on the yellow sand. Dryd. Virg. En.

Who naked wrestled best, befear'd with oil;
Or who with gauntlets gave or took the foil. Dryd. Fables.

The funeral of some valiant knight
May give this thing its proper light:

View his two gauntlets; these declare
That both his hands were us'd to war.

So to repel the Vandals of the stage,
Our ver'ran bard resumes his tragick rage;

He throws the gauntlet Otway us'd to wield,
And calls for Englishmen to judge the field. Southey.

GAZETTE, n. f. [gazette, French.] A kind of dance.

The disposition in a fiddle to play tunes in preludes, farabands, jigs and gavots, are real qualities in the instrument.

GAUZE, n. f. A kind of thin transparent silk.

Silken cloths were used by the ladies; and it seems they were thin, like gauze.

Brocades and damasks, and tabbies and gazes,
Are lately brought over. Swift.

GAWK, n. f. [gaw, Saxon.]

1. A cuckoo.

2. A foolish fellow. In both senses it is retained in Scotland.

GAWN, n. f. [corrupted for gown.] A small tub, or lading vessel.

GAWNTREE, n. f. [Scottish.] A wooden frame on which beer-casks are set when tunned.

GAY, adj. [gay, French.]

1. Alty; cheerful; merry; frolick.

Smooth flow the waves, the zephyrs gently play;
Belinda smil'd, and all the world was gay.

Ev'n rival wits did Voltour's fate deplore,
And the gay mourn'd, who never mourn'd before. Pope.

2. Fine; showy.

A virgin that loves to go gay.

GAY, n. f. [from the adjective.] An ornament; an embellishment.

Morose and untractable spirits look upon precepts in emblem, as they do upon gags and pictures, the fooleries of so many old wives tales. L'Estrange.

GA'YETY, n. f. [gayety, French, from gay.]

1. Cheerfulness; airiness; merriment.

2. Acts of juvenile pleasure.

And from those gayeties our youth requires
To exercise their minds, our age retires. Denham.

3. Finery; show.

Our gayety and our gilt are all besmirch'd,
With rainy marching in the painful field.

GA'YLY, adv. Merrily; cheerfully; showily.

GA'YNESS, n. f. [from gay.] Gayety; finery. Not much in use.

To GAZE, v. n. [gazeo, rather gazeo, to see, Sax.]
To look intently and earnestly; to look with eagerness.

What see'st thou there? King Henry's diadem,
Inch'd with all the honours of the world;

If so, gaze on. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

From some fine cast her modest eyes below;
At some her gazing glances roving flew.

Gaze not on a maid, that thou fall not by those things that are precious in her. Ecclef. ix. 5.

A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind. Shakespeare.

And gaz'd a while the ample sky. Milton's Paradise Lost.

GAZE, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Intant regard; look of eagerness or wonder; fixed look.

Being light'ned with her beauty's beam,
And thereby fill'd with happy influence,

And lifted up above the world's gaze,
To sing with angels her immortal praise.

Do but note a wild and wanton herd,
If any air of musick touch their ears,

Spenser.

GEA

You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,
By the sweet power of musick. Shakespeare Merch of Venice.

Not a month
Fore your queen dy'd, she was more worth such gazes
Than what you look on now. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

With secret gaze,
Or open admiration, him behold,
On whom the great Creator hath bestow'd Worlds. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Pindar is a dark writer, wants connexion as to our understanding, fears out of sight, and leaves his readers at a gaze. Dryden's Preface to Ovid.

After having stood at gaze before this gate, he discovered an inscription. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 27.

2. The object gazed on.

I must die
Betray'd, captiv'd, and both my eyes put out;
Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze;
To grind in brazen fetters, under task,

With my heav'n-gifted strength. Milton's Agonistes.

GAZE, n. f. [from gaze.] He that gazes; one that looks intently with eagerness or admiration.

In her cheeks the vermilion red did shew,
Like roses in a bed of lilies shed;

The which ambrosial odours from them threw,
And gazers sense with double pleasure fed. Fairy Queen.

I'll flay more gazers than the basilisk. Shakespeare Hen. VI.

Come, basilisk,

And kill the innocent gazer with thy fight. Shakespeare Hen. VI.

Bright as the sun, her eyes the gazers strike;
And, like the sun, they shine on all alike. Pope.

His learned ideas give him a transcendent delight; and yet, at the same time, discover the blemishes which the common gazer never observed. Watts's Logic.

GAZEFUL, adj. [gaze and full.] Looking intently.

The brightness of her beauty clear,
The ravish'd hearts of gazeful men might rear,

To admiration of that heavenly light. Spenser on Beauty.

GAZEHOUND, n. f. [gaze and hound's canis gazeus, Skinner.]

A hound that pursues not by the scent, but by the eye.

See'st thou the gazehound? how with glance severe
From the clove herd he marks the destined deer! Tickell.

GAZETTE, n. f. [gazet, a Venetian halfpenny, the price of a news paper, of which the first was published at Venice.]

A paper of news; a paper of publick intelligence. It is accented indifferently on the first or last syllable.

And sometimes when the loss is small,
And danger great, they challenge all;

Print new additions to their feats,
And emendations in gazettes. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 3.

An English gentleman, without geography, cannot well understand a gazette. Locke.

One cannot hear a name mentioned in it that does not bring to mind a piece of a gazette. Addison's Guardian.

All, all but truth, falls dead-born from the press;
Like the last gazette, or the last address. Pope.

GAZETTEER, n. f. [from gazette.]

1. A writer of news.

2. It was lately a term of the utmost infamy, being usually applied to wretches who were hired to vindicate the court.

Satire is no more: I feel it die;

No gazetteer more innocent than I. Pope.

GAZING-STOCK, n. f. [gaze and stock.] A person gazed at with scorn or abhorrence.

These things are offences to us, by making us gazing stocks to others, and objects of their scorn and derision. Ray.

GAZON, n. f. [French.] In fortification, pieces of fresh earth covered with grass, cut in form of a wedge, about a foot long and half a foot thick, to line parapets and the traverses of galleries. Harri.

GEAR, n. f. [g'han, to cloath; geape, furniture, Saxon.]

1. Furniture; accoutrements; dress; habit; ornaments.

Array thyself in her most gorgeous gear. Fairy Queen.

When he found her bound, stript from her gear,
And vile tormenters ready law in place,

He broke through. Fairfax, b. ii. Stan. 27.

When once her eye
Hath met the virtue of this magic dust,
I shall appear some harmless villager,

Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear. Milton.

I fancy every body observes me as I walk the streets, and long to be in my old plain gear again. Addison's Guardian.

To see some radiant nymph appear
In all her glitt'ring birthday gear,

You think some goddess from the sky
Descended, ready cut and dry.

2. The traces by which horses or oxen draw.

Apollo's spite Pallas discern'd, and flew to Tydeus' son;
His scourge reach'd, and his horse made fresh; then took her angry run

At king Eumelus, brake his gear. Chapman's Iliad.

The

GEL

The frauds he learn'd in his fanatick years
Made him uneasy in his lawful gears. Dryden.

3. Stuff. Hammer.
If fortune be a woman, she is a good wench for this gear.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

4. [In Scotland.] Goods or riches: as, he has gear enough.
GEASON. adj. [A word which I find only in Spenser.] Wonderful.

It to Leeches seemed strange and geason. Hubbard's Tale.

To GELD. v. a. preter. gelded or gelt; part. pass. gelded or gelt. [German.]

1. To castrate; to deprive of the power of generation.
Geld bull-calf and ram-lamb as soon as they fall. Tusser.
Lord Say hath gelded the commonwealth, and made it an enunch. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

2. To deprive of any essential part.
He bears his counsell, and runs me up
With like advantage on the other side.
Gelding th' oppos'd continent as much
As on the other side it takes from you. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

3. To deprive of any thing immodest, or liable to objection.
They were diligent enough to make sure work, and to geld it so clearly in some places that they took away the very manhood of it. Dryden's Preface to Cleomenes.

GE'LDER. n. f. [from geld.] One that performs the act of castration.

Geld later with gelders, as many one do,
And look of a dozen to geld away two. Tuff's Husbandry.

No fow gelder did blow his horn

To geld a cat, but cry'd reform. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.

GE'LDER-ROSE. n. f. [I suppose brought from Guelderland.]
The leaves are like those of the maple-tree: the flowers consist of one leaf, which expands in a circular rosette form, and is divided at the top into five parts: these are collected in form of an umbel, the largest of which grow on the outside, and are barren; but those in the middle are fruitful, producing red berries, in each of which is contained one flat heart-shaped seed.

The species are three. If the soil be moist, this plant affords a very agreeable prospect, both in the season when it is in flower, and also in the Autumn, when the fruit is ripe, which generally grows in large clusters, and is of a beautiful colour. Miller.

The gelder-rose is increased by suckers and cuttings. Mort.

GE'LDING. n. f. [from geld.] Any animal castrated, particularly an horse.

Though naturally there be more males of horses, bulls or rams than females; yet artificially, that is, by making geldings, oxen and weathers, there are fewer. Graunt.

The lord lieutenant may chafe out one of the best horses, and two of the best geldings; for which shall be paid one hundred pounds for the horse, and fifty pounds a-piece for the geldings. Temple.

GE'LD. adj. [from gelidus, Latin.] Extremely cold.

From the deep ooze and gelid cavern rous'd,
They flourish.

GE'LDINESS. n. f. [from gelid.] Extreme cold. Diät.

GE'LLY. n. f. [from gelatus, Latin.] Any viscous body; viscosity; glue; gluey substance.

My best blood turn
To an infected gelly. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

The tapers of the gods,
The sun and moon, became like waxen globes,
The shooting stars end all in purple gellies,
And chaos is at hand. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

The white of an egg will coagulate by a moderate heat, and the hardest of animal solids are resolvable again into gellies. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GEN

GELT. n. f. [from geld.] A castrated animal; gelding.

The spayed gelt they esteem the most profitable. Mortimer.

GELT. n. f. [corrupted for the sake of rhyme from gelt.] Tinsel; gilt surface.

I won her with a girdle of gelt, Emboss'd with bugle about the belt. Spenser's Pastoral.

GELT. The participle passive of geld.

Let the others be gelt for oxen. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Is such, or not much bigger than he seems?
That the dimensions of his glorious face
Two geometrick feet do scarce surpass? Blackmore's Creation.

Disposed according to geometry.

Geometrick jasper seemeth of affinity with the lapis sanguinalis described by Boetius; but it is certainly one sort of lapis crystallinus. Grew's Museum.

GEOMETRICALLY. adv. [from geometrikos.] According to the laws of geometry.

'Tis possible geometrically to contrive such an artificial motion as shall be of greater swiftness than the revolutions of the heavens. Wilkins's Math. Magick.

All the bones, muscles, and vessels of the body are contrived most geometrically, according to the strictest rules of mechanics. Ray on the Creation.

GEOMETRICIAN. n. f. [from γεωμέτρης.] One skilled in geometry; a geometer.

Although there be a certain truth therein, geometricians would not receive satisfaction without demonstration thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

How easily does an expert geometrician, with one glance of his eye, take in a complicated diagram, made up of many lines and circles! Watt's Improvement of the Mind.

To GEOMETRIZE. v. n. [from γεωμετρέω.] To act according to the laws of geometry.

We obtained good store of crystals, whose figures were differing enough, though pretty shaped, as if nature had at once affected variety in their figuration, and yet confined herself to geometrical.

GEOMETRY. n. f. [from γεωμετρία, Greek; gēometria, French.] Originally signifies the art of measuring the earth, or any distances or dimensions on or within it: but it is now used for the science of quantity, extension, or magnitude abstractedly considered, without any regard to matter.

Geometry very probably had its first rise in Egypt, where the Nile annually overflowing the country, and covering it with mud, obliged men to distinguish their lands one from another, by the consideration of their figure; and after which, 'tis probable, to be able also to measure the quantity of it, and to know how to plot it, and lay it out again in its just dimensions, figure and proportion: after which, it is likely, a farther contemplation of those draughts and figures helped them to discover many excellent and wonderful properties belonging to them; which speculations were continually improving, and are still to this day. Geometry is usually divided into speculative and practical: the former of which contemplates and treats of the properties of continued quantity abstractedly; and the latter applies these speculations and theorems to use and practice, and to the benefit and advantage of mankind. Harris.

In the muscles alone there seems to be more geometry than in all the artificial engines in the world. Ray on the Creation.

Him also for my censor I disdain,
Who thinks all science, as all virtue, vain;
Who counts geometry and numbers toys;
And with his foot the sacred dust destroys. Dryd. Pers. Sat.

GEOGNICAL. adj. [from γεωγονικός, Greek; gēognikos, French.] Relating to agriculture; relating to the cultivation of the ground.

Such expressions are frequent in authors geognical, or such as have treated de re rustica. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi.

GEOGNICKS. n. f. [from γεωγονικός.] The science of cultivating the ground; the doctrine of agriculture.

GEORGE. n. f. [from Γεώργιος, Latin.]

1. A figure of St. George on horseback worn by the knights of the garter.

Look on my George, I am a gentleman;
Rate me at what thou wilt. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

2. A brown loaf. Of this sense I know not the original. Cub'd in a cabin, on a mattress laid,
On a brown George, with lousy frockers, fed. Dryd. Pers.

GEORICK. n. f. [from γεωργικός, Greek; gēorgikos, French.] Some part of the science of husbandry put into a pleasing dress, and set off with all the beauties and embellishments of poetry. Addison.

GEORICK. adj. Relating to the doctrine of agriculture.

Here I peruse the Mantuan's georgick strains,
And learn the labours of Italian swains. Gay's Rural Sports.

GEORICK. adj. [from γεωργικός.] Belonging to the earth; terrestrial.

GEORICK. adj. [from γεωργικός.] Carrying; bearing.

GIFT. n. f. [from give.]
 1. A thing given or bestowed; something conferred without price.
 They presented unto him gifts, gold, and frankincense and myrrh. Mat. ii. 11.
 Recall your gift, for I your pow'r confess;
 But first take back my life, a gift that's less. Dryd. Aureng.
 2. The act of giving.
 No man has any antecedent right or claim to that which comes to him by free gift. South's Sermons.
 3. Oblation; offering.
 Many nations shall come with gifts in their hands, even gifts to the king of heaven: Tob. xiii. 11.
 4. A bribe.
 Thou shalt not wrest judgment, thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift; for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wife. Deuter. xvi. 19.
 5. Power; faculty.
 And if the boy have not a woman's gift,
 To rain a shower of commanded tears,
 An onion will do well for such a shift. Shakespeare.
 He who has the gift of ridicule, finds fault with any thing that gives him an opportunity of exerting his beloved talent.
Addison's Spectator, N^o. 291.
GIFTED. adj. [from gift.]
 1. Given; bestowed.
 Made of my enemies the foam and gaze,
 To grind in brazen fetters, under tasks, Milton's Agonistes.
 With my heav'n gifted strength.
 2. Endowed with extraordinary powers. It is commonly used ironically.
 Two of their gifted brotherhood, Hacket and Coppinger, got up into a pease-cart, and harangued the people to dispose them to an infurrection. Dryd. Rel. Laici, Preface.
 There is no talent so pernicious as eloquence, to those who have it not under command: women, who are so liberally gifted by nature in this particular, ought to study the rules of female oratory. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 23.
GIG. n. f. [Etymology uncertain.]
 1. Any thing that is whirled round in play.
 Playthings, as tops, gigs, battledores, should be procured them. Locke.

GIGANTICK. adj. [gigantes, Latin.] Suitable to a giant;
 big; bulky; enormous; likewise wicked; atrocious.
 Others from the wall defend
 With dart and jav'lin, stones, and sulphurous fire;
 On each hand slaughter and gigantick deeds! Milt. Pa. Lost.
 I dread him not, nor all his giant-brood,
 Though fame divulg'd him father of five sons,
 All of gigantick size, Goliath chief. Milton's Agonistes.
 The son of Hercules he justly seems,
 By his broad shoulders and gigantick limbs. Dryden's Æn.
 The Cyclopean race in arms arose;
 A lawless nation of gigantick foes. Pope's Odyssey, b. vi.
 To GIGGLE. v. n. [gichelen, Dutch.] To laugh idly; to titter; to grin with merry levity. It is retained in Scotland.
GIGGLER. n. f. [from giggle.] A laugher; a titterer; one idly and foolishly merry.
 A sad wife valour is the brave complexion,
 That leads the van, and swallows up the cities:
 The giggler is a milk-maid, whom infection,
 Or the fire'd beacon, frighteth from his ditties. Herbert.
 We flew our present, joking, giggling race;
 True joy consists in gravity and grace. Garrick's Epilogue.
GIGLET. n. f. [giglet, Saxon; gylt, Dutch; gillet, Scottish, is still retained.] A wanton; a lascivious girl. Now out of use.
 Young Talbot was not born
 To be the pillage of a giglet wench. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
 The fam'd Castibelan was once at point,
 Oh giglet fortune! to master Cæsar's sword. Shak. Cymbel.
 Away with those giglets too, and with the other confederate companions. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

 Nor evening Cynthia fill her silver horn. Pope's Messiah.
 4. To brighten; to illuminate.
 The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.
 5. To recommend by adventitious ornaments.
 For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
 I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have. Shak. Hen. IV.
 Yet, oh! th' imperfect piece moves more delight;
 'Tis gilded o'er with youth, to catch the fight. Dryd. Aureng.
GILDER. n. f. [from gild.]
 1. One who lays gold on the surface of any other body.
 Gilders use to have a piece of gold in their mouth, to draw the spirits of the quicksilver. Bacon's Natural History.
 We have here a gilder, with his anvil and hammer.
 2. A coin, from one shilling and sixpence, to two shillings. Phil.
 I am bound
 To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage. Shakespeare.
GILDERING. n. f. [from gild.] Gold laid on any surface by way of ornament.
 Silvering will fully and canker more than gilding, which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, there is profit. Bacon's Phys. Rem.
 The church of the Annunciation, all but one corner of it, is covered with statues, gilding, and paint. Addison on Italy.
 Could laureate Dryden Pimp and Fry's engage,
 And I not strip the gilding off a knave,
 Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave? Pope's Hor.
GILL. n. f. [agulla, Spanish; gula, Latin.]
 1. The apertures at each side of a fish's head.
 The leviathan,
 Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
 And seems a moving land; and at his gills Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea. Milt. P. Lost.
 Fishes perform their respiration under water by the gills.
Ray on the Creation.
 He hath, on the bottom of his sides, two gill-fins; not behind the gills, as in most fishes, but for a good part before them. Walton.
 'Till they, of farther passage quite bereft,
 Were in the mesh with gills entang'd left. King's Fisherman.
 The flaps that hang below the beak of a fowl.
 The turkeycock hath great and swelling gills, and the hen hath less. Bacon's Natural History.
 3. The flesh under the chin.
 In many there is no paleness at all; but, contrariwise, redness about the cheeks and gills, which is by the fending forth of spirits in an appetite to revenge. Bacon's Natural History.
 Like the long bag of flesh hanging down from the gills of the people in Piedmont. Swift.
 4. [Gilla, barbarous Latin.] A measure of liquids containing the fourth part of a pint.
 Every battle must be rinsed with wine: some, out of mistaken thrift, will rinse a dozen with the same: change the wine at every second bottle: a gill may be enough. Swift.
 5. [From gillan, the old English way of writing Julian, or Juliana.] The appellation of a woman in ludicrous language.
 I can, for I will,
 Here at Burley o' th' Hill,
 Give you all your fill,
 Each Jack with his Gill. Ben. Johnson's Gynæce.

6. The

GIN

6. The name of a plant; ground-ivy.
 Malt liquor medicated with ground-ivy.
GILLHOUSE. n. f. [gill and house.] A house where gill is fold.
 These shall each alehouse, these each gillhouse mourn,
 And answering ginshops fourer sighs return. Pope.
GILLYFLOWER. n. f. [Either corrupted from July flower, or from gillflower, French.]
 Gillyflowers, or rather Julyflowers, so called from the month they blow in, are of a very great variety; but they may be reduced to these sorts: red and white, purple and white, scarlet and white, the various kinds of which are too many to enumerate. Martinez's Husbandry.
 In July come gillyflowers of all varieties. Bacon, Essay 47.
 Fair is the gillyflower of gardens sweet,
 Fair is the marygold, for pottage meet. Guy's Pastoral.
GILT. n. f. [from gild.] Golden flow; gold laid on the surface of any matter. Now obsolete.
 Our gaynes and our gilt are all bemirch'd,
 With rainy marching in the painful field. Shak. Hen. V.
 When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mock thee for too much curiosity: in thy rags thou know'st none, but art despis'd for the contrary. Shak. Timon of Athens.
 The double gilt of this opportunity you let time wash off.
GILT. The participle of GILD, which see.
 Where the gilt chariot never mark'd its way. Pope.
GILTHEAD. n. f. [gilt and head.] A feast.
GILT-TAIL. n. f. [gilt and tail.] A worm so called from his yellow tail.
GIM. adv. [An old word.] Neat; spruce; well dressed.
GIMCRACK. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner to be ludicrously formed from gin, derived from engine.] A slight or trivial mechanism.
 For though these gimcracks were away,
 However, more reduced and plain,
 The watch would still a watch remain;
 But if the horal orbit ceases,
 The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.
 What's the meaning of all these trigrams and gim-cracks? What, in the name of wonder, are you going about, jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds? Arbuthnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
GIMLET. n. f. [gilelet, gimblets, French.] A borer with a screw at its point.
 The gimlet hath a worm at the end of its bit. Moxon.
GIMMAL. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner and Anyworth to be derived from gimulus, Latin, and to be used only of something consisting of correspondent parts, or double. It seems rather to be gradually corrupted from geometry or geometrical.] Some little quaint devices or pieces of machinery. Harmer.
 I think by some odd gimmas or device
 Their arms are set like clocks, fill to strike on,
 Else they could not hold out so as they do. Shak. Hen. VI.
GIMMER. n. f. [See GIMMAL.] Movement; machinery.
 The holding together of the parts of matter has so confounded me, that I have been prone to conclude with myself, that the gimmers of the world hold together not so much by geometry as some natural magic. Moré's Divine Dialogues.
GIMP. n. f. [See GIM.] Gimp, in old English, is neat, spruce.
GIN. n. f. [from engine.]
 1. A trap; a snare.
 As the day begins,
 With twenty gins we will the small birds take,
 And pasture make. Sidney, b. i.
 Which two, through treason and deceitful gin,
 Hath slain Sir Mordant. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
 So doth the canny frigate in the net. Shak. Henry VI.
 Be it by gin, by snare, by subtilty. Shak. Hen. VI.
 If those, who have but sense, can shun
 The engines that have them annoy'd;
 Little for me had reason done,
 If I could not thy gins avoid. Ben. Johnson's Forest.
 I know thy trains,
 Though dearly to my cost, thy gins and toils;
 No more on me have pow'r, their force is null'd. Milton.
 He made a planetary gin,
 Which rats would run their own heads in,
 And come on purpose to be taken,
 Without expense of cheese and bacon. Hudibras, p. ii.
 Keep from slaying, scourge thy kin,
 And ankle free from iron gin. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.
 2. Any thing moved with screws, as an engine of torture.
 Typhreus joints were fratched on a gin. Fairy Queen.
 3. A pump worked by rotatory sails.
 A bituminous plate, alternately yellow and black, formed by water driving on the outside of the gin pump of Moltyn coals. Woodward on Puffin.
 4. [Contracted from GENEVA, which see.] The spirit drawn by distillation from juniper berries.

GIP

This calls the church to deprecate our sin,
 And hurls the thunder of our laws on gin. Pope, Dial. 1.
 These shall each alehouse, these each gillhouse mourn,
 And answering ginshops fourer sighs return. Pope's Dunciad.
GINGER. n. f. [zingiber, Latin; gingera, Italian.]
 The flower consists of five leaves, which are shaped somewhat like those of the iris: these are produced in an head or club, each coming out of a separate leafy scale. The ovary afterwards becomes a triangular fruit, having three cells which contain their seeds. Miller.
 The root of ginger is of the tuberous kind, knotty, crooked and irregular; of a hot, acrid, and pungent taste, though aromatick, and of a very agreeable smell. The indians eat both the young shoots of the leaves and the roots themselves, cut small in their salads, and make an excellent sweetmeat of them. Ginger is an excellent carminative and stomachick. Hill's Mat. Medica.
 Or wafting ginger round the streets to go,
 And visit alehouse where ye first did grow. Pope's Dunciad.
GINGERBREAD. n. f. [ginger and bread.] A kind of fasticious sweetmeat made of dough, like that of bread or biscuit, sweetened with treacle, and flavoured with ginger and some other aromatick seeds. It is sometimes gilt.
 An I had but one penny in the world, thou should'st have it to buy gingerbread. Shakespeare's Love's Labour's Lost.
 Her curtains there and gooseberries were spread,
 With the enticing gold of gingerbread. King's Cookery.
 'Tis a loss you are not here, to partake of three weeks froth, and eat gingerbread in a booth by a fire upon the Thames. Swift.
GINGERLY. adv. [I know not whence derived.] Cautiously;
 nicely.
 What is't that you
 Took up to gingerly? Shakespeare's Two Gent. of Verona.
GINGERNESS. n. f. Niceness; tenderness. Dict.
GINGIVAL. adj. [gingiva, Latin.] Belonging to the gums.
 Whilst the Italians strive to cut a thread in their pronunciation between D and T, so to sweeten it, they make the occlude appulse, especially the gingival, softer than we do, giving a little of puerility. Holder's Elements of Speech.
 To GINGLE. v. n.
 1. To utter a sharp clattering noise; to utter a sharp noise in quick succession.
 The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd,
 And in thy pocket ginging halfpence found. Gay'sTrivia.
 Once, we confess, beneath the parrot's cloak,
 From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke,
 And ginging down the backstairs, told the crew,
 Old Cato is as great a rogue as you. Pope's Epistles.
 2. To make an affected sound in periods or cadence.
 To GINGLE. v. a. To shake so that a sharp shrill clattering noise should be made.
 Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew;
 The bells the gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.
GINGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. A shrill resounding noise.
 2. Affecation in the sound of periods.
GINGLYMOID. adj. [ginglymus, and ginglymus.] Resembling a ginglymus; approaching to a ginglymus.
 The malleus lies along, fixed to the tympanum, and on the other end is joined to the incus by a double or ginglymoid joint. Holder's Elements of Speech.
GINGLYMUS. n. f. [ginglime, French.] A mutual indenting of two bones into each other's cavity, of which the elbow is an instance. Wise.
GINNET. n. f. [gine, Latin.] A nag; a mule; a degenerated breed. Hence, according to some, but I believe, erroneously, a Spanish ginet, improperly written for ginet.
GINSENG. n. f. [I suppose Chinese.] A root brought lately into Europe. It never grows to any great size, and is of a brownish colour on the outside, and somewhat yellowish within; and so pure and fine, that it seems almost transparent.
 It is of a very agreeable and aromatick smell, though not very strong. Its taste is acrid and aromatick, and has somewhat bitter in it. We have it from China; and there is of it in the same latitudes in America. The Chinese value this root so highly, that it sells with them for three times its weight in silver. The Asiatics in general think the ginseng almost an universal medicine. The virtues most generally believed to be in it are those of a restorative, and a cordial.
 The European physicians esteem it a good medicine in convulsions, vertiges, and all nervous complaints; and recommend it as one of the best restoratives known. Hill.
 To GIP. v. a. To take out the guts of herrings. Bailey.
GIPSY. n. f. [Corrupted from Egyptian; for when they first appeared in Europe they declared, and perhaps truly, that they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. They are now mis-gled with all nations.]
 1. A vagabond who pretends to foretell futurity, commonly by palmistry or physiognomy.
 The butler, though he is sure to lose a knife, a fork, or a spoon every time his fortune is told him, shuts himself up in 10 G the

the pantry with an old gipsy for above half an hour. Addison.
A frantick gipsy now, the house he haunts,
And in wild phantasies speaks dissembled wants. Prior.
I, near yon stile, three fallow gypsies met;
Upon my hand they cast a poring look,
Bid me beware, and thrice their heads they shook. Gay.
In this still labyrinth around her lie
Spells, philters, globes, and spheres of palmistry;
A fig in this hand the gipsy bears,
In th' other a prophetic sieve and sheers. Garth's Dispensat.
2. A reproachful name for a dark complexion.
Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen-wench; Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra a gipsy; Helen and Hero hildings and harlots. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
3. A name of slight reproach to a woman.
The widow play'd the gipsy, and so did her confidant too, in pretending to believe her. L'Estrange.
A slave I am to Clara's eyes:
The gipsy knows her pow'r, and flies. Prior.

GIRASOLE. n. f. [girafale, French.]

1. The herb turnsole.

2. The opal stone.

TO GIRD. v. a. pret. girded, or girt. [gýrban, Saxon.]

1. To bind round.

They sprinkled earth upon their heads, and girded their loins with sackcloth. 2 Mac. x. 25.

2. To put on so as to surround or bind.

Cords of the bigness of packthread were fastened to bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck. Gulliver.

3. To fasten by binding.

He girt his warlike harness about him. 1 Mac. iii. 3.

My bow and thunder, my almighty arms
Gird on, and sword upon thy puissant thigh. Milt. P. Lof.

No, let us rise at once, gird on our swords,
And, at the head of our remaining troops,
Attack the foe. Addison's Cato.

The combatant too late the field declines,
When now the sword is girded to his loins. Prior.

4. To invest.

Stoop then, and set your knee against my foot;
And in requerdon of that duty done,
I gird thee with the valiant sword of York. Shakespeare, H. VI.

The son appear'd,
Girt with omnipotence. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

5. To dress; to habit; to clothe.

I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with filk. Ezek. xvi. 10.

Typhoeus there keeps the ward,
Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryd.

6. To cover round as a garment.

These, with what skill they had, together fow'd,
To gird their waist: vain covering, if to hide
Their guilt, and dreaded shame! Milton's Paradise Lost.

7. To reproach; to gibe.

Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the gods. Shakef.

8. To furnish; to equip.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs
His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles. Paradise Regain'd.

9. To inclose; to incircle.

That Nyctean isle,
Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham
Hid Amalthea, and her florid son
Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rhea's eye. Milt. P. L.

TO GIRD. v. n. To break a scornful jest; to gibe; to sneer.

Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: the brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

GIRD. n. f. [from the verb.] A twitch; a pang; from the tension caused by a bandage or girdle drawn hard suddenly.

This word is now seldom used.

Sweet king! the bishop hath a kindly gird:
For shame, my lord of Winchester, relent. Shakef. H. VI.

They give satisfaction to his mind, and his conscience by this means is freed from many fearful girds and twinges which the atheist feels. Tillotson, Sermon 2.

He has the glory of his conscience, when he doth well, to set against the checks and girds of it when he doth amiss. Goodman's Winter Evening Con.

GIRDLE. n. f. [from gird.] In architecture, the largest piece of timber in a floor. Its end is usually fastened into the summers, or breast summers, and the joists are framed in at one arm to the girders. Harris.

The girders are also to be of the same scantling the summers and ground-plates are of, though the back girder need not be so strong as the front girder. Mason's Mech. Exer.

These mighty girders which the fabrick bind,
These ribs robust and vast in order join'd. Blackm. Creation.

GIRDLE. n. f. [gýrbel, Saxon.]

1. Any thing drawn round the waist, and tied or buckled.

GIS

There will I make thee beds of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a girdle,
Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle. Shakespeare.
Many conceive there is somewhat amiss, until they put on their girdle. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 21.
On him his mantle, girdle, sword and bow,
On him his heart and soul he did bestow. Cowley.

2. Enclosure; circumstance.

Suppose within the girdle of these walls
Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies. Shakef. Hen. V.

3. The equator; the torrid zone.

Great breezes in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, do refrigerate. Bacon.

TO GIRDLER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gird; to bind as with a girdle.

Lay the gentle babes, girdling one another Within their innocent alabaster arms. Shakef. Rich. III.

2. To inclose; to shut in; to environ.

Those sleeping stones,
That as a waist do girdle you about,
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had been dislodged. Shakespeare's King John.

Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall,
That girdlest in those wolves! Shakespeare's Timon.

GIRDLEBELT. n. f. [girdle and belt.] The belt that incircles the waist.

Tor did his eyes less longingly behold
The girdlebelt, with nails of burnish'd gold. Dryden's Æn.

GIRDLER. n. f. [from girdle.] A maker of girdles.

GIRE. n. f. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing in motion. See GYRE.

GIRL. n. f. [About the etymology of this word there is much question: Meric Casaubon, as is his custom, derives it from gyr, of the same signification; Mynheer from garvula, Latin, a prattler, or girella, Italian, a weathercock; Junius thinks that it comes from herula, Welsh, from which, says he, herlot is very easily deduced. Skinner imagines that the Saxons, who used ceopl for a man, might likewise have ceopla for a woman, though no such word is now found. Dr. Hiclus derives it most probably from the Slandick karinna, a woman.] A young woman, or female child.

In those unblest days was my wife a girl. Shakespeare.

And let it not displease thee, good Bianca;
For I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl. Shakespeare.

A weather-beaten lover, but once known,
Is sport for every girl to practise on. Dante.

Tragedy should blash as much to stoop
To the low mimic follies of a farce.

As a grave matron would to dance with girls. Reformers.

A boy, like thee, would make a kingly line;
But oh, a girl, like her, must be divine! Dryden.

GIRLISH. adj. [from girl.] Suiting a girl; youthful.

In her girlish age the kept sheep on the moor. Carver.

GIRLISHLY. adv. [from girlish.] In a girlish manner.

TO GIRN. v. n. Seems to be a corruption of grim. It is still used in Scotland, and is applied to a crabbed, captious, or pec-civill person.

GIRROCK. n. f. A kind of fish. Duff.

GIRT. part. pass. [from to gird.]

TO GIRT. v. a. [from gird.] To gird; to encompass; to encircle. Not proper.

In the dread ocean, undulating wide
Beneath the radiant line, that girts the globe,
The circling Typhon whirl'd from point to point. Thomson.

GIRT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A band by which the saddle or burthen is fixed upon the horse.

Here lies old Hobson, death hath broke his girt;
And here, alas! hath laid him in the dirt. Milton.

2. A circular bandage.

The most common way of bandage is by that of the girt, which girt hath a bolster in the middle, and the ends are tacked firmly together. Weyman's Surgery.

GIRTH. n. f. [from gird.]

1. The band by which the saddle is fixed upon the horse.

Or the fiddle turn'd round, or the girths brake;
For low on the ground, woe for his sake,
The law is found. Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.

Nor Pegasus could bear the load,
Along the high celestial road;
The steed oppress'd, would break his girths,
To raise the lumber from the earth. Swift.

Mordanto gallops on alone;
The roads are with his followers strown;
This breaks a girth, and that a bone. Swift.

2. The compas measured by the girdle, or encircling bandage.

He's a lusty jolly fellow that lives well, at least three yards in the girth. Addison's Freeholder.

TO GIRTH. v. a. To bind with a girth.

TO GISE GROND. v. a. Is when the owner of it does not feed it with his own stock, but takes in other cattle to graze. Bailyn.

GISLE.

GIV

GIV'LE. Among the English Saxons, signifies a pledge; thus, Frederick is a pledge of peace; Gisbert an illustrious pledge, like the Greek Homerus. Gibson's Camden.

GIV. n. f. An herb called Guiney pepper.

GIV. n. f. v. a. preter. gave; part. pass. given. [gyfan, Saxon.]

TO GIVE. v. a. To bestow; to confer without any price or reward.

1. To bestow; to confer without any price or reward.

This opinion abated the fear of death in them which were so resolved, and gave them courage to all adventures. Hooker.

Give us also sacrifices and burnt offerings, that we may sacrifice unto the Lord. Ex. x. 25.

I had a matter that gave me all I could ask, but thought fit to take one thing from me again. Temple.

Constant at church and change; his gains were sure,
His givings rare, gave farthings to the poor. Pope's Epistles.

2. To transmit from himself to another by hand, speech, or writing; to deliver; to impart; to communicate.

The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, the gave me of the tree, and I did eat. Gen. iii. 12.

They were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage. Mat. xxiv. 38.

Those bills were printed not only every week, but also a general account of the whole year was given in upon the Thursday before Christmas. Grant's Bills of Mortality.

We shall give an account of these phenomena. Burnet.

Aristotle advises not poets to put things evidently false and impossible into their poems, nor gives them licence to run out into wildness. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.

3. To put into one's possession; to consign.

Nature gives us many children and friends, to take them away; but takes none away to give them us again. Temple.

Give me, says Archimedes, where to stand firm, and I will remove the earth. Temple.

If the agreement of men first gave a sceptre into any one's hands, or put a crown on his head, that almost must direct its conveyance. Locke.

4. To pay as price or reward, or in exchange.

All that a man hath will he give for his life. Job ii. 4.

If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure. Shakespeare.

He would give his nuts for a piece of metal, and exchange his sheep for shells, or wool for a sparkling pebble. Locke.

5. To yield; not to withhold.

Philip, Alexander's father, gave sentence against a prisoner what time he was drowsy, and seemed to give small attention.

The prisoner, after sentence was pronounced, said, I appeal:
the king, somewhat stirred, said, To whom do you appeal?

The prisoner answered, From Philip, when he gave no ear, to Philip, when he shall give ear. Bacon's Aphorisms.

Constantia accused herself for having so tamely given an ear to the proposal. Addison's Spectator.

6. To quit; to yield as due.

Give place, thou stranger, to an honourable man. Ecclus.

7. To confer; to impart.

I will bless her, and give thee a son also of her. Gen. xvii.

Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself.

What beauties I lose in some places, I give to others which had them not originally. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

8. To expose.

All clad in skins of beasts the jav'lin bear;
Give to the wanton winds their flowing hair. Dryd. Æn.

9. To grant; to allow.

This given me once again to behold my friend. Rowe.

He has not given Luther fairer play. Atterbury.

10. To yield; not to deny.

I gave his wife proposal way;

Nay, urg'd him to go on; the shallow fraud
Will ruin him. Rowe's Ambitious Stepmother.

11. To yield without resistance.

12. To permit; to commission.

Prepare
The due libation and the solemn pray'r;
Then give thy friend to shed the sacred wine. Pope's Odyss.

13. To enable; to allow.

God himself requireth the lifting up of pure hands in prayers; and hath given the world to understand, that the wicked, although they cry, shall not be heard. Hooker.

Give me to know

How this foul rout began, who set it on. Shakespeare, Othello.

So some weak shoot, which else would poorly rise,
Jove's tree adopts, and lifts into the skies;
Through the new pulp soft'ning juices flow,
Thrust forth the gems, and give the flow'rs to blow. Tickel.

14. To pay.

The applause and approbation, most reverend for thy stretchout life, I give to both your speeches. Shak. Troil. and Cressida.

15. To utter; to vent; to pronounce.

GIV

So you must be the first that gives this sentence,
And he that suffers. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

The Rhodians seeing their enemies turn their backs, gave a great shout in derision of them. Kailler's Hist. of the Turks.

Let the first honest discoverer give the word about, that Wood's halpence have been offered, and caution the poor people not to receive them. Swift.

16. To exhibit; to expose.

This instance gives the impossibility of an eternal existence in any thing essentially alterable or corruptible. Hale.

17. To exhibit as the product of a calculation.

The number of men being divided by the number of ships, gives four hundred and twenty-four men a-piece. Arbutnot.

18. To do any act of which the consequence reaches others.

As we desire to give no offence ourselves, so neither shall we take any at the difference of judgment in others. Burnet.

19. To exhibit; to send forth as odours from any body.

In oranges the ripping of their rind gives out their smell more. Bacon.

20. To addit; to apply.

The Helots, of the other side, shutting their gates, gave themselves to bury their dead, to cure their wounds, and rest their wearied bodies. Sidney.

After men began to grow to number, the first thing we read they gave themselves into, was the tilling of the earth and the feeding of cattle. Hooker, b. i.

Groves and hill-altars were dangerous, in regard of the secret access which people superstitiously given might have always thereunto with ease. Hooker, b. v. f. 17.

The duke is virtuous, mild, and too well given,

To dream on evil, or to work my downfall. Shakespeare, H. VI.

Fear him not, Caesar, he's not dangerous:

He is a noble Roman, and well given. Shakespeare, Jul. Caesar.

His name is Falstaff: if that man should be lewdly given, he deceives me; for, Harry, I see virtue in his looks. Shakespeare.

Hunades, the scourge of the Turks, was dead long before;
so was also Mathias: after whom succeeded others, given all to pleasure and ease. Kailler's History of the Turks.

Though he was given to pleasure, yet he was likewise desirous of glory. Bacon's Henry VII.

He that gives his mind to the law of the most High, will seek out the wisdom of all the ancients. Ecclus. xxxix. 1.

He is much given to contemplation; and the viewing of this theatre of the world. Mor's Antidote against Atheism.

They who gave themselves to warlike action and enterprises, went immediately to the palace of Odin. Temple.

Men are given to this licentious humour of scoffing at personal blemishes and defects. L'Estrange.

Besides, he is too much given to horseplay in his gallery;
and comes to battle, like a dictator from the plough. Dryden.

I have some business of importance with her; but her husband is so horribly given to be jealous. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.

What can I refuse to a man so charitably given? Dryden.

21. To resign; to yield up.

Finding ourselves in the midst of the greatest wilderness of waters, without victual, we gave ourselves for lost men, and prepared for death. Bacon's New Atlantis.

Who say, I care not, those I give for lost;

And to instruct them, will not quit the cost. Herbert.

Virtue giv'n for lost;

Deprest and overthrown, as seem'd;

Like that self-begot'n bird
In the Arabian woods embost,
That no second knows, nor third,
And lay erewhile a holocaust,
From out her almy womb now teen'd. Milton's Agonistes.

Since no deep within her gulph can hold
Immortal vigour, though oppress'd and fall'n,
I give not heaven for lost. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

I have never glanced upon the late defigned proceffion of his holinefs and his attendants, notwithstanding it might have afforded matter to many ludicrous fpeculations. Addifon's Spect.
It was objected againft him that he had written verfes, wherein he glanced at a certain reverend docteur, famous for dulnefs. Swift.
To GLANCE. v. a. To move nimbly; to fhoot obliquely.
Glancing an eye of pity on his loffes,
Enough to prefs a royal merchant down. Shak. Mer. of Ven.
GLANCINGLY. adv. [from glance.] In an oblique broken manner; tranfiently.
Sir Richard Hawkins hath done fomething in this kind, but brokenly and glancingly, intending chiefly a difcourfe of his own voyage. Hakewill on Provident.
GLAND. n. f. [from glans, Latin; gland, French.]
All the glands of a human body are reduced to two forts, viz. conglobate and conglomerate. A conglobate gland is a little fmooth body, wrapt up in a fine fkin, by which it is feperated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to pafs in, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out: of this fort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands, and teftes. A conglomerate gland is compofed of many little conglobate glands, all tied together, and wrapt up in the common tunicle or membrane. Quincy.
I obferv'd the abfcess to have begun deep in the body of the glands. Wifeman's Surgery.
The glands, which o'er the body fpread,
Fine complicated clues of nervous thread,
Involv'd and twifted with th' arterial duct,
The rapid motion of the blood obftruct. Blackm. Creation.
GLANDERS. n. f. [from gland.] In a horfe, is the running of corrupt matter from the nofe, which differs in colour according to the degree of the malignity, being white, yellow, green glandula.] Pertaining to the glands; fubfifting in the glands;

having the nature of glands.
There are no tefticles, or parts official unto generation, but glandulous fubftances, that hold the nature of emunctories.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 17.
Such conftitutions muft be fubject to glandulous tumours and ruptures of the lymphatick, and all the difeafes thereon dependant. Arbutnot on Aliments.
To GLARE. v. n. [from glaren, Dutch.]
1. To fhine fo as to dazzle the eyes.
After great light, if you come fuddenly into the dark, or, contrariwife, out of the dark into a glaring light, the eye is dazzled for a time, and the light confufed. Bacon's Nat. Hift.
And like the brand of foul Alceftis flame. Fairfax, b. ii.
He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick wit, and grofs hyperboles; he maintains majesty in the midft of plainnefs; he fhines, but glares not; and is ftately without ambition. Dryden.
The court of Cacus ftands reveal'd to fight;
The cavern glares with new admitted light. Dryden's Aen.
Alas, thy dazzled eye
Beholds this man in a falfe glaring light,
Which conquelt and fuccels have thrown upon him. Addifon.
2. To look with fierce piercing eyes.
Avaunt, and quit my fight! let the earth hide thee!
Thou haft no fpeculation in thofe eyes,
Which thou do'ft glare with. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Look, how pale he glares!
His form and caufe conjoin'd, preaching to ftones,
Would make them capable. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Now friends no more, nor walking hand in hand;
But when they met they made a fury fand,
And glar'd, like angry lions, as they pafs'd,
And with'd that ev'ry look might be their laft. Dryd. Fables.
3. To fhine oftentatiously, or with too much labour'd luftre.
The moft glaring and notorious paffages are none of the finest, or moft correct. Felton on the Glafficks.
To GLARE. v. a. To fhoot fuch fplendour as the eye cannot bear.
One fpirit in them rul'd, and every eye
Glar'd lightning, and thot forth pernicious fire
Among th' accurft, that wither'd all their ftrengh. Milton.
GLARE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Overpowering luftre; fplendour, fuch as dazzles the eye.
The frame of burnish'd ftel that caft a glare
From far, and feem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryd. Fab.
I have griev'd to fee a perfon of quality gliding by me in her chair at two o'clock in the mornings, and looking like a fpectre amidft a glare of flambeaux. Addifon's Guardian.
Here in a grotto, fhelter'd clofe from air,
And green'd in fhades from day's detefted glare,
She fighs for ever. Pope's Rock of the Lock.
2. A fierce piercing look.
About them round,
A lion now he ftalks with fiery glare. Milt. Parad. Loft.

Prompts to purfue the fparkling glafs, beftore
'Tis time to fhun it. Phillips.
6. The quantity of wine ufually contained in a glafs; a draught.
While a man thinks one glafs more will not make him drunk, that one glafs hath difabled him from well difcerning his prefent condition. Taylor's Rule of living body.
The firft glafs may pafs for health, the fecond for good-humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.
7. A perfpective glafs.
Like thofe who have furveyed the moon by glaffes, I can only tell of a new and fhining world above us; but not relate the riches and glories of the place. Dryden.
GLASS. adj. Vitreous; made of glafs.
Got thee glafs eyes;
And, like a fcurvy politician, feem

Methinks I am partaker of thy paffion,
And in thy cafe do glafs mine own debility. Sidney, b. ii.
2. To cafe in glafs,
Methought all his fenfes were lockt in his eye,
As jewels in cryftal for fome prince to buy;
Who tend'ring their own worth, from whence they were glafs,
Did point out to buy them, along as you paff. Shakef.
3. To cover with glafs; to glaze.
I have obferv'd little grains of filver to lie hid in the fmall cavities, perhaps glaffed over by a vitrifying heat, in crucibles wherein filver has been long kept in fufion. Boyle.
GLASSFURNACE. n. f. [from glafs and furnace.] A furnace in which glafs is made by liquifaction.
If our dreamer pleafes to try whether the glowing heat of a glafs-furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowfy man's fancy, by putting his hand into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty that it is fomething more than bare imagination. Locke.
GLASSGazing. adj. [from glafs and gazing.] Finical; often contemplating himfelf in a mirrour.
A whorlon, glaffgazing, fuperventiceable, finical rogue. Shakespeare's King Lear.
GLASSGRINDER. n. f. [from glafs and grinder.] One whole trade is to polifh and grind glafs.
The glafsgrinders complain of the trouble they meet with. Boyle.
GLASSHOUSE. n. f. [from glafs and houfe.] A houfe where glafs is manufactured.
I remember to have met with an old Roman Mofaic, compofed of little pieces of clay half vitrified, and prepared

GLASSWORK. n. f. [from glafs and work.] Manufactory of glafs.
The cryftalline Venice glafs is a mixture, in equal portions, of ftones brought from Pavia, and the afhes of a weed call'd kali, gathered in a defert between Alexandria and Roftetta; and is by the Egyptians ufed firft for fuch, and then they cruft the afhes into lumps like a ftone, and fo tell them to the Venetians for their glaffworks. Bacon's Natural Hiftory.
GLASSWORK.

GLE

GLASSWORT. n. f. [Salicornia, or saltwort.] It hath an apetalous flower, wanting the empalement; for the lamina, or chives, and the embryos afterward become pods or bladders, which for the most part contain one seed. The species are two. These plants grow on the sea-coasts in many parts of Europe, and upon the shores in several places of England which are washed every tide with the salt water. The inhabitants, near the sea-coast where these plants grow, cut them up toward the latter end of Summer, when they are fully grown; and, after having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp, and are promiscuously gathered for use. From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali, much used by the chymists.

For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chert or glasswort; and for the coarser or green sort, the ashes of brake or other plants. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GLASSY. adj. [from glass.]

1. Made of glass; vitreous.

In the valley near mount Carmel in Judea there is a sand, which, of all others, hath most affinity with glass; inasmuch as other minerals laid in it turn to a glassy substance. Bacon.

2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness or lustre, or brittleness.

Man! proud man!

Drest in a little brief authority,

Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd:

His glassy essence, like an angry ape,

Plays such fantastic tricks before high heav'n,

As makes the angels weep. Shaksp. Meas. for Measure.

There is a willow grows aslant a brook,

That shews his hoary leaves in the glassy stream. Shak. Ham.

The magnet attracteth the shining or glassy powder brought from the Indies, usually employed in writing-dust. Brown.

Whose womb produc'd the glassy ice? Who bred

The hoary frosts that fall on Winter's head? Sandy.

A hundred weep,

With stretching oars, the glassy deep. Dryden's Æn.

GLASTONBURY Thorn. n. f. A species of MEDLAR, which is

This species of thorn produces some bunches of flowers in Winter, and flowers again in the Spring, and in no other respect differs from the common hawthorn. Miller.

GLAUCCOMA. n. f. [γλαυκωμα; gleucoma, French.] A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a greyish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion. Quincy.

The gleucoma is no other disease than the cataract. Sharp.

GLAIVE. n. f. [glais, French; glais, a hook, Welsh. Glais is Eric for a broad sword.] A broad sword; a falchion.

Two hundred Greeks came next in fight well try'd,

Not surely arm'd in steel or iron strong,

But each a glaive had pendant by his side. Fairfax, b. i.

When zeal, with aged clubs and glaives,

Gave chase to rockets and white staves. Hudibras, p. iii.

TO GLAVER. v. n. [glave, Welsh, flattery; glavan, Saxon, to flatter. It is still retained in Scotland.] To flatter; to whet. A low word.

Kingdoms have their distempers, intermissions, and pa-roxysms, as well as natural bodies; and a glaving council is as dangerous on the one hand as a wheedling priest, or a flattering physician is on the other. LEStrange's Fables.

TO GLAZE. v. a. [To glaze, only accidentally varied.]

1. To furnish with windows of glass.

Let there be two delicate cabinets daintily paved, richly hanged, and glazed with crystalline glass. Bacon's Essays.

2. To cover with glass, as potters do their earthen ware; [from the French glâze, argille.]

3. To overlay with something shining and pellucid.

Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with blinding tears,

Divides one thing entire to many objects. Shaksp. R. II.

The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; wherein though with other ornaments he may glaze and brandish the weapons, yet is it found reason that carries the stroke home. Greiv's Casm. Sac. b. ii. c. 6.

White, with other strong colours, with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life, the spirit, and the lustre of it. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

GLAZIER. n. f. [corrupted from glazier, or glazier, of glass.]

One whose trade is to make glass windows. Other manufacturers of glass are otherwise named.

Into rabbits the several panes of glasswork are set, and fastened by the glazier. Mason's Mech. Exerc.

The dextrous glazier strong returns the bound,

And ginsling fathoms on the penthouse found. Gay's Trivia.

GLEAD. n. f. A buzzard hawk; a kite. It retains that name in Scotland.

GLEAM. n. f. [geloma, Saxon.] Sudden shoot of light;

lustre; brightness.

Then was the fair Dodonian tree far seen

Upon seven hills to spread his gladome gleam;

And conquerors bedecked with his green,

Along the banks of the Ausonian stream. Spenser.

At last a gleam

Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste

His travell'd steps. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

As I bent down to look just opposite,

A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,

Bending to look on me. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Mine is a gleam of bliss, too hot to last;

Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'ercast. Dryd. Aureng.

We ken them from afar; the setting sun

Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,

And covers all the field with gleams of fire. Addison's Cato.

In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,

And floating forests paint the waves with green. Pope.

Nought was seen, and nought was heard,

Around the dreary coast,

But dreadful gleams,

Fires that glow,

Shrieks of woe. Pope's St. Cecilia.

TO GLEAM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine with sudden conflagration.

Observant of approaching day,

The meek-eyed morn appears, mother of dews,

At first faint gleams in the dappled East. Thomson's Summer.

Ye gleamings of departed peace

Shine out your last. Thomson's Spring.

2. To shine.

On each hand the gushing waters play,

And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,

Or gleam in lengthen'd vista's through the trees. Thomson.

GLEAMY. adj. [from gleam.] Flashing; darting sudden conflagrations of light.

In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy rays,

Swift through the town the warriour bends his way. Pope.

TO GLEAN. v. a. [glean, French, as Skinner thinks, from granum.]

1. To gather what the gatherers of the harvest leave behind.

She came and gleaned in the field after the reapers. Ruth ii.

Cheap conquest for his following friends remain'd;

He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd. Dryden.

She went, by hard necessity compell'd,

To glean Palemon's fields. Thomson's Autumn.

2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.

Gather

So much as from occasions you may glean,

If aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus. Shaksp. Hamlet.

That goodness

Of gleaming all the land's wealth into one,

Into your own hands, card'nal, by extortion. Shak. H. VIII.

They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men.

Judge, xx. 45.

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,

When his refulgent arms flash'd through the shady plain,

Fled from his well-known face with wonted fear;

As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear

Drove headlong to their ships, and gleam'd at the routed rear. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.

In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments; since we cannot from a discovery of their real essence, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together. Locke.

GLEAN. n. f. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;

The gleam of yellow thyme diffend his thighs:

He spoils the saffron. Dryden's Virg. Georg. b. iv.

GLEANER. n. f. [from glean.]

1. One who gathers after the reapers.

For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,

Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,

Should his heart own a gleaner in the field. Thomson's Autumn.

2. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously.

An ordinary coffee-house gleaner of the city is an arrant statesman, and as much superior to him, as a man conversant about the court is to a shopkeeper. Locke.

GLEANNING. n. f. [from glean.] The act of gleanings, or thing gleaned.

There shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done. Bible.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleanings of the rich man's harvest. Auterbury's Sermons.

GLEBE. n. f. [gleba, Latin.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

Fertile of corn the glebe, of oil and wine,

With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the hills. Milton.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;

If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,

The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign,

Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

Sleeping

GLE

Sleeping vegetables lie,
Till the glad summons of a genial ray
Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to day. Garth.

2. The land possessed as part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a personage is of three sorts: the one in land, commonly called the glebe; another in tythe, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church

by the people. Spelman.

A trespas done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe. Swift.

GLEBOUS. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy. Diët.

GLEBY. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy; perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning.

Pernicious flattery! thy malignant feeds

In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand

Sadly diffus'd o'er virtue's gleby land,

With rising pride amidst the corn appear,

And choke the hopes and harvest of the year. Prior.

Ye shall not eat the glebe, the kite, and the vulture. Deut.

GLEE. n. f. [glee, Saxon.] A kite. Deut.

Ye shall not eat the glebe, the kite, and the vulture. Deut.

GLEE. n. f. [glee, Saxon.] Joy; merriment; gaiety. It anciently signified music played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,

Whom all the people follow with great glee. Fairy Queen.

Many wayfarers make themselves glee, by putting the inhabitants in mind of their privilege; who again foreflow not to baigue them with perfume. Carroll's Survey of Cornwall.

And his sportive limbs,

This way and that convolv'd, in friskful glee

Their frolics play. Thomson's Spring.

No happiness is now reserv'd for me. Gay's Pastoral.

GLEED. n. f. [glee, Saxon, to glow.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word.

GLEEFUL. adj. [glee and ful.] Gay; merry; cheerful.

My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,

When every thing doth make a gleeful boast? Shakspere.

GLEEK. n. f. [glee, Saxon.] Mute; or musician.

What will you give us?—No money, but the glee: I will give you the minstrel. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.

TO GLEEK. v. a. [gleek, Saxon, to glow.] A mimic or a droll.]

1. To sneer; to gibe; to droll upon.

I can gleek upon occasion. Shaksp. Mid. Night's Dream.

I have seen you gleeking or galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shakspere's Henry V.

2. In Scotland it is still retained, and signifies to fool or spend time idly, with something of mimicry or drollery.

TO GLEEN. v. n. To shine with heat or polish. I know not the original notion of this word: it may be of the same race with glew or with gleam.

Thole who labour

The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythes,

Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleening armour,

Acknowledge Vulcan's aid. Prior.

GLEET. n. f. [It is written by Skinner glitt, and derived from glean, Saxon, to run fastly.] A fanious ooze; a thin ichor running from a sore.

There then lay a hard dry eschar, without either matter or glee. Wifeman's Surgery.

TO GLEET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To drip or ooze with a thin fanious liquor.

His thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone: this not only bled, but gleeted a few drops. Wifeman's Surgery.

GLI

Sec'st thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild,
The seat of desolation, void of light,
Save what the glimmering of these livid flames
Casts pale and dreadful? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
The sacred influence
Of light appears, and from the walls of heav'n
Shoots far into the bosom of dim night
A glimmering dawn. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
Through these sad shades this chaos in my soul,
Some seeds of light at length began to roll;
The rising motion of an infant ray
Shot glimmering through the cloud, and promis'd day. Prior.
Oft by the winds, extinct the signal lies;
Or smother'd in the glimmering locker dies. Gay's Trivia.
When rosy morning glimmer'd o'er the dales,
He drove to pasture all the luffy males. Pope's Odyssey.
2. To be perceived imperfectly; to appear faintly.
On the way the baggage post-boy, who had been at court, got a glimmering who they were. Wotton.
The Pagan priesthood was always in the druids; and there was a perceivable glimmering of the Jewish rites in it, though much corrupted. Swift.
GLIMMER. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Faint splendour; weak light.
2. A kind of foil.
The lesser masses that are lodged in sparry and stony bodies, disperfed, from their shining and glimmering, were an inducement to the writers of fables to give those bodies the name of mica and glimmer. Woodward on Fossils.
Stones which are composed of plates, that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible and elastic: talc, catiliver, or glimmer, of which there are three forts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black. Woodward.
GLIMMER. n. s. [glimmer, Dutch, to glow.]
1. A weak faint light.
Such vast room in nature,
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far Down to this habitable, which returns Light back to them. Milt. Par. Lost.
Thousands of things, which now either wholly escape our apprehensions, or which our shortighted reason having got some faint glimpse of, we, in the dark, grope after. Locke.
2. A quick flashing light.
Light as the lightning glimpse they ran? Milton's P. Lost.
My thoughtless youth was wing'd with vain desires;
Follow'd false lights; and when their glimpse was gone,
My pride struck out new fangles of her own. Dryden.
3. Transitory lustre.
If I, celestial fire, in aught
Have serv'd thy will, or gratified thy thought,
One glimpse of glory to my illue give;
Grac'd for the little time he has to live. Dryd. Fables.
4. Short fleeting enjoyment.
If, while this weary'd flesh draws fleeting breath,
Not satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
If haply be thy will that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great fire, dispel
The clouds that press my soul. Prior.
5. A short transitory view.
O friends! I hear the tread of nimble feet
Hasting this way, and now by glimpse discern Ithuriel, and Zephon, through the shade. Milt. Par. Lost.
Some he punisheth exemplarily in this world, that we might from thence have a taste or glimpse of his present justice.
Hakewill on Providence.
A man, used to such sort of reflections, sees as much at one glimpse as would require a long discourse to lay before another, and make out in one entire and gradual deduction. Locke.
What should I do! while here I was enchain'd,
No glimpse of godlike liberty remain'd. Dryden's Virgil.
6. The exhibition of a faint resemblance.
There is no man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of.
Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

Two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in. Shakespeare's K. John.
Justice is their virtue: that alone
Makes them fit sure, and glorifies the throne. Daniel.
2. To pay honour or praise in worship.
God is glorified when such his excellency, above all things, is with due admiration acknowledged. Hooker, b. v.
This form and manner of glorifying God was not at that time first begun; but received long before, and alleged at that time as an argument for the truth. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.
Good fellows, tell us here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorify the Lord. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
All nations shall glorify thy name. Pf. lxxxvi. 9.
This is the perfection of every thing, to attain its true and proper end; and the end of all these gifts and endowments, which God hath given us, is to glorify the giver. Tillotson.
3. To praise; to honour; to extol.
Whomsoever they find to be most licentious of life, desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition, him they set up and glorify. Spenser on Ireland.

very stands upon comparisons. Bacon, Essay 55.
2. Noble; illustrious; excellent.

GLO

Let them know that thou art Lord, the only God, and glorious over the whole world. Dan. iii. 22.

Impartial justice holds her equal scales,
Till stronger virtue does the weight incline;
If over thee thy glorious foe prevails,
He now defends the cause that once was thine. Prior.

Let us remember we are Cato's friends,
And act like men who claim that glorious title. Addison's Cato.
Glossary. v. adv. [from glorious.] Nobly; splendidly; illustriously.

They inspire with those celestial flames, which shine so gloriously in their works. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true critics dare not mend. Pope.
Glossary. n. f. [glorie, French; gloria, Latin.] Among the old poets it was used sometimes as one syllable, glire.

1. Praise paid in adoration. Luke ii. 14.
Glory to God in the highest.

2. The felicity of heaven prepared for those that please God.
Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me to thy glory. Psal. lxxiii. 24.

Then enter into glory, and resume
His seat at God's right hand, exalted high Above all names in heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity.
Think it no glory to swell in tyranny. Sidney.

Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought. Shak. H. VI.

And with that word and warning foam was dight,
Each soldier longing for near coming glory. Fairfax, b. i.

Can we imagine that either the ambition of princes, or interest, or gain in private persons, or curiosity and the desire of knowledge, or the glory of discoveries, could ever move them in that endless time to try their fortunes upon the sea. Burnet.

4. Splendour; magnificence.
Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. Matt. vi. 29.

Treated so ill, chas'd from your throne,
Returning, you adorn the town;
And with a brave revenge do show
Their glory went and came with you. Waller.

Aristotle says, that should a man under ground converse with works of art, and be afterwards brought up into the open day, and see the several glories of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God. Addison's Spectator.

5. Lustre; brightness.
Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie:
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope's Winter.

From opening fises may streaming glories shine,
And faints embrace thee with a love like mine. Pope.

6. A circle of rays which surrounds the heads of faints in picture.
It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it depends. South's Sermons.

A smile plays with a surprising agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and fits like a glory upon the countenance. Collier of the Aspects.

7. Pride; boastfulness; arrogance.
By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end. Wisd. xiv. 14.

8. Generous pride.

To GLORIFY. v. n. [glorior, Latin.] To boast in; to be proud of.

With like judgment glorifying when he had happened to do a thing well, as when he had performed some notable mischief. Sidney, b. ii.

They were wont, in the pride of their own proceedings, to glory, that whereas Luther did but blow away the roof, and Zuinglius batter but the walls of popish superstition, the last and hardest work of all remained, which was to raze up the very ground and foundation of popery. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.

Let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them. Shaksp.

Your glorifying is not good. 1 Cor. v. 6.

Thou hast seen mount Atlas,
While storms and tempests thunder on its brow,
And oceans break their billows at its feet.

It stands unmov'd, and glories in its height. Addison's Cato.

This title is what I most glory in, and what most effectually calls to my mind the happiness of that government under which I live. Addison's Freeholder, No. 1.

If others may glory in their birth, why may not we, whose parents were called by God to attend on him at his altar? Aster.

No one is out of the reach of misfortune; no one therefore should glory in his prosperity. Clarissa.

To GLOSE. v. a. To flatter; to collogue. Hammer. See To GLOZE.

GLO

GLOSS. n. f. [γλῶσσα; gloss, French.]
1. A scholium; a comment.

They never hear sentence, which mentioneth the word or scripture, but forthwith their glosses upon it are the word preached, the scripture explained, or delivered unto us in sermons. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

If then all souls, both good and bad, do teach,
With general voice, that souls can never die;
'Tis not man's flattery's gloss, but nature's speech,
Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Davies.

Some matter at certain passages therein, by putting ill glosses upon the text, and taking with the left hand what I offer with the right. Havel.

All this, without a gloss or comment,
He could unidle in a moment. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

In many places he has perverted my meaning by his glosses, and interpreted my words into blasphemy and bawdry, of which they were not guilty. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

They give the scandal, and the wife discern;
Their glosses teach an age too apt to learn. Dryden.

Explaining the text in short glosses, was Accursius's method. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

Indentures, cov'nants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves, and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope.

2. An interpretation artfully specious; a specious representation.
Poor painters off with silly poets join,
To fill the world with strange but vain conceits;
One brings the stuff, the other fumes the coin.

Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit. Sidney, b. ii.

It is no part of the secret meaning to draw you loosely into hatred, or to set upon the face of this cause any fairer gloss than the naked truth doth afford. Hooker, Preface.

He seems with forged quaint conceit
To fet a gloss upon his bad intent. Shakspere's Henry VI.

The common gloss
Of theologians. Milton.

3. Superficial lustre.
His iron coat, all over grown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Whole glittering gloss dark'ned with filthy dust. Fairfax.

You are a sectary,
That's the plain truth: your painted gloss discovers,
To men that understand you, words and weakness. Shaksp.

Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Shall doubt will be whether it will polish so well; for fixed glosses are more repulsive than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade. Bacon's Physic, Km.

Weeds that the wind did toss
The virgins wore: the youths, woven coats, that cast a faint dim gloss, Like that of oil. Chapman's Iliads, b. xiv.

It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reverence, and a gloss to humility. South's Sermons.

Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the Spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their first gloss upon them. Addison's Spectator, No. 42.

To GLOSS. v. n. [glosser, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To comment.

Thou dost ain't Brice's in thy hands,
By priestly glossing on the gods commands. Dryd. Fables.

2. To make sly remarks.
Her equals first observ'd her growing zeal,
And laughing gloss'd, that Abra serv'd so well. Prior.

To GLOSS. v. a.
1. To explain by comment.

No woman shall succeed in Salique land;
Which Salique land the French unjustly gloss
To be the realm of France. Shakspere's Henry V.

In parchment then, large as the fields, he draws Assurances, big as gloss'd civil laws. Dennis.

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation.
Is this the paradise, in description whereof so much glossing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent? Hooker's Sermons.

Do I not reason wholly on your conduct?
You have the art to gloss the foulest cause. Phillips's Briton.

3. To embellish with superficial lustre.
But thou, who lately of the common strain
Wert one of us, if still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Gloss'd over only with a faint like show,
Then I resume the freedom which I gave;
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden's Pref.

GLOSSARY. n. f. [glossarium, Latin; glossaire, French.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

According to Varro, the most learned of the Romans when delatrum was applied to a place, it signified such a one in quo dei simulacrum dedicatum est; and also in the old glossaries.

The rest entire Milton.
Shone with a glossy scurf.

His furcoat was a bearskin on his back;
His hair hung long behind, and glossy raven black. Dryden.

Myself will search our planted grounds at home,
For downy peaches and the glossy plum. Dryden's Virgil.

GLOVE. n. f. [glove, Saxon, from klafus, Danish, to divide.] Cover of the hands.

Like an uproar in a town,
Before them every thing went down;
They flew about like chaff 't' the wind;
For halts some left their masks behind,
Some could not flay their gloves to find.
A wreath of laurel. Dryden.

To GLOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.

My limbs,
Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief,
Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou nice crutch;
A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakspere's Henry IV. p. i.

The next he preys on is her palm,
That almsman of transpiring balm;
So soft, 'tis air but once remov'd;
Tender as 'twere a jelly glove'd. Cleveland.

GLOVER. n. f. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

Does he not wear a great round beard like a Glover's paring knife? Shakspere's Merry Wives of Windsor.

To GLOUT. v. n. [A low word of which I find no etymology.] To glut; to look full.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and freaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks,
Where, glowing round her rock, to fish the falls. Chapman.

Glowing with fallen spight, the fury shook
Her clotted locks, and blasted with each look. Garth.

To GLOW. v. n. [glopan, Saxon; gloeyen, Dutch.]
1. To be heated so as to shine without flame.

But sithence silence lesseneth not my fire,
But told it flames, and hidden it does glow,
I will reveal what ye for much desire. Fairfax Queen, b. i.

His goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and muffers of the war
Have glaz'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn Their office upon a tawny front. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

Kunigund, wife to the emperor Henry II. to show her innocence, did take seven glowing irons, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakewill.

Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd
With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire. Milt. Par. L.

2. To burn with vehement heat.
Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettle seeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison's Ovid.

How opening heav'n's their happy regions show,
And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow. Smith.

3. To feel heat of body.

Did not his temples glow
In the same salty winds and scorching heats? Addison's Cato.

The cord slides swiftly through his glowing hands. Gay.

GLO

Clad in a gown that glows with Tyrian rays. Dryden.
A malicious joy,
Whose red and fiery beams cast through your village
A glowing pleasure. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

From the mingled strength of shade and light,
A new creation rises to my sight;
Such heav'nly figures from his pencil flow, that I find
So warm with life his blended colours glow. Addison's Savage.

Amidst the soft variety I'm lost.
Like th' ethereal glow'd the green expanse. Savage.

Fair ideas flow,
Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow. Pope.

Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows,
Can move the god. Pope.

Each pleasing Blount shall endless smiles bestow,
And fair Belinda's blush for ever glow. Pope.

Here clearer stars glow round the frozen pole. Pope.
From her naked limbs of glowing white,
In folds loose floating, fell the fainter lawn. Thomson.

5. To feel passion of mind, or activity of fancy.
You strive in vain
To hide your thoughts from him, who knew too well
The inward glowings of a heart in love. Addison's Cato.

Fore'd compliments and formal bows
Will shew thee just above neglect;
The fire with which thy lover glows,
Will settle into cold respect. Prior.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire. Prior.

Let the gay conscience of a life well spent Calm ev'ry thought, inspire ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

With furies furrour'd,
Despairing, confounded,
He trembles, he glows,
Amidst Rhodope's snows. Pope.

So perish all, whose breasts ne'er learn'd to glow
For others good, or melt at others woe. Pope.

To praise is always hard,
When real virtue fires the glowing bard. Lewis.

6. To rage or burn as a passion.
A fire which every windy passion blows;
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

When crept into aged veins,
Love slowly burns, and long remains;
It glows, and with a full heat,
Like fire in logs, it warms us long. Shadwell.

To GLOW. v. a. To make hot so as to shine. Not in use.
On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shaksp.

Glow. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Shining heat.

2. Vehemence of passion.

3. Brightness or vividness of colour.
The pale complexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain. Shakspere.

A waving glow his bloomy beds displays,
Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope, Epistle iv.

GLOWWORM. n. f. [glow and worm.] A small creeping insect with a luminous tail.

The honey bags steal from the humble bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes. Shakspere.

The glowworm thews the mattin to be near,
And 'gins to pale his inefficual fire. Shaksp. Hamlet.

A great light drowneth a smaller that it cannot be seen; as the sun that of a glowworm. Bacon's Natural History.

The man, who first upon the ground
A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found
A moving diamond, a breathing stone;
For life it had, and like those jewels shone:
He held it dear, 'till by the springing day
Inform'd, he threw the worthless worm away. Waller.

To GLOZE. v. n. [glezan, Saxon.]
1. To flatter; to wheedle; to insinuate; to fawn.

Man will hearken to his glowing lies,
And easily transgress. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Into the heart of Eve his words made way. Milt. Par. Lost.

A false gleazing parasite would call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly, and by mistaking himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass. South.

Now for a gleazing speech,
Fair protestations, specious marks of friendship. Phillips.

2. To comment. This should be gloss.

Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze

To be the realm of France, Shakspere's Henry V.

GLU

GLOZE. n. f. [from the verb.] Flattery; insinuation.
Now to plain dealing; lay these glozes by. Shakespeare.
2. Specious show; gloze.
Precious couches full oft are shak'd with a fever;
If then a bodily evil in a bodily gloze be not hidden,
Shall such morning dews be an ease to the heat of a love's fire? Sidney, b. i.
GLUE. n. f. [glu, Fr. gluten, Lat. glut, Welsh.] A viscous body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a jelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; a cement.
Water, and all liquors, do hastily receive dry and more terrestrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors: so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthly and watery substances, one is a glue to another. Bacon's Natural History.
To build the earth did chance materials chuse,
And through the parts cementing glue diffuse. Blackmore.
The clearest, driest, and most transparent glue is the best.
Moxon's Mech. Exerc.
The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbutnot on Aliments.
TO GLUE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To join with a viscous cement.
I fear thy overthrow
More than my body's parting with my soul:
My love and fear glue many friends to thee. Shakespeare, H. VI.
Whoso teacheth a fool is as one that glues a posthored together. Becky, xxii. 7.
The custom of crowning the Holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinzel crown, or a circle of stars, glued to the canvas over the head of the figure. Addison on Italy.
Most wounds, if kept clean, and from the air, the flesh will glue together with its own native balm. Dirham.
2. To hold together.
The parts of all homogeneal hard bodies, which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly; and for explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are glued together by rest, that is, by an occult quality, or rather by nothing. Newton's Opt.
3. To join; to unite; to inviscate.
Those wasps in a honey-pot are so many sensual men, that are plunged in their lusts and pleasures; and when they are once glued to them, 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out. L'Estrange, Fable 126.
Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshly lusts, do debase mens minds and clog their spirits; sink us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things. Fillsimon's Sermons.
She curb'd a groan, that else had come;
And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb:
Then to the heart ador'd devoutly *glue*d
Her lips, and, raising it, her speech renew'd. Dryden.
And round thy phantom glue my clasping arms. Pope.
GLUE-BOILER. n. f. [glue and boiler.] One whose trade is to make glue.

what then? Guardian.
TO GLUT. v. a. [engloutir, French; glutis, Lat. to swallow; glut.]
1. To swallow; to devour.
Till cram'd and gorg'd, high burst
With suck'd and glutted offal. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
2. To cloy; to fill beyond sufficiency; to faze; to disgust.
The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers. Bacon.
Love breaks friendship, whose delights
Feed, but not glut our appetites. Denham.
What way remove
His settled hate, and reconcile his love,
That he may look propitious on our toils,
And hungry graves no more be glutted with our spoils. Dry.
No more, my friend;
Here let our glutted execution end. Dryden's Æn.
I found
The fickle ear soon glutted with the sound,
Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,
Tir'd with the last, and eager of the new. Prior.
3. To feast or delight even to satiety.
With death's carcass glut the grave. Milton.
His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,
Torn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes. Dryden.
A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
Leads up the eye below, nor gluts the sight
With one full prospect; but invites by many,
To view at last the whole. Dryden's State of Innocence.
4. To overfill; to load.

He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retailing too much of a bad commodity at once. Arbutnot's Art of Politic Lying.
5. To faturate.
The menstrum, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it. Addison.
GLUT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. That which is gorged or swallowed.
Disgorging foul
Their devilish glut, chain'd thunderbolts, and hail
Of iron globes. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.
So death
Shall be deceiv'd his glut; and with us two
Be forc'd to satisfy his ravenous maw. Milton's Par. Lost.
Let him but set the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights. L'Estrange, Fable 11.
A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life, call me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement. Pope to Swift.
3. More than enough; overmuch.
If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.
4. Any thing that fills up a passage.
The water some suppose to pass continually from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs and rivers, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means, arrested in their passage.
Woodward's Natural History.
GLUTINOUS. adj. [glutimex, French, from gluten, Latin.]
Gluey; viscous; tenacious.
The cause of all vivification is a gentle and proportionable heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat doth bring forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produceth two effects: the one, that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth; the other, that the matter, being gentle and yielding, is driven forwards by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling, into shape and members.
Bacon's Natural History, N. 600.
Next this marble venom'd feast,
Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat. Milton.
Nourishment too viscid and glutinous to be subdued by the vital force. Arbutnot on Aliments.
GLUTINOUSNESS. n. f. [from glutinous.] Viscosity; tenacity.
There is a resistance in fluids, which may arise from their elasticity, glutinousness, and the friction of their parts. Boyle.
GLUTTON. n. f. [glutton, French, from glutis, Latin, to swallow.]
1. One who indulges himself too much in eating.
The Chinese eat horridly at this day, and some gluttons have used to have catsfish baked. Bacon's Natural History.
Through Macer's gullet the runs down,
When the vile glutton dines alone;
And, void of modesty and thought,
She follows Bibb's endless draught. Prior.
2. One eager of any thing to excess.
The rest bring home in state the happy pair
To that last scene of bliss, and leave them there;
All those free joys insatiably to prove,
With which rich beauty feasts the glutton love. Cowley.
Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy,
Their fatal arts so impiously employ. Granville.
TO GLUTTONISE. v. n. [from glutton.] To play the glutton;
to be luxurious.
GLUTTONOUS. adj. [from glutton.] Given to excessive feeding; delighted overmuch with food.
When they would smile and fawn upon his debts,
And take down all interest in their glutton maws. Shakespeare.
The exceeding luxuriousness of this gluttonous age, wherein we press nature with overweighty burdens, and finding her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters. Raleigh.
Thou wilt observe
The rule of not too much, by temperance taught
In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, no gluttonous delight. Milton's Par. Lost.
GLUTTONOUSLY. adv. [from gluttonous.] With the voracity of a glutton.
GLUTTONY. n. f. [gluttonie, Fr. from glutton.] Excess of eating; luxury of the table.
Their sumptuous gluttonies and gorgeous feasts,
On citron tables or Atlantick stone. Milton's Par. Lost.
Well may they fear some miserable end,
Whom gluttony and want at once attend. Dryden's Juven.
The inhabitants of cold moist countries are generally more fat than those of warm and dry; but the most common cause is too great a quantity of food, and too small a quantity of motion, in plain English, gluttony and laziness. Arbutnot.
GLUTY. adj. [from glue.]
2. Viscous; tenacious; glutinous.

 Crown high the goblets with a cheerful draught;
 Enjoy the present hour; adjourn the future thought. Dryden.
- GOBLIN: n. f. [French; goblin, which Spenser has once retained, writing it in three syllables. This word some derive from the Gibullines, a faction in Italy; so that elf and goblin is Gueph and Gibelline, because the children of either party were terrified by their nuries with the name of the other: but it appears that elf is Welsh, and much older than those factions. Ellis's Urylon are phantoms of the night, and the Germans likewise have long had spirits among them named Gobelds, from which gobelin might be derived.]
1. An evil spirit; a walking spirit; a frightful phantom.
 Angels and ministers of grace defend us!
 Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,
 Bring with thee airs from heav'n, or blasts from hell? Shak.

 A woman I forswore; but I will prove;
 Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee:
 My vow was earthy, thou a heav'nly love. Shakespeare.
 I long have waited in the temple nigh,
 Built to the gracious goddess Clemency;
 But reverence thou the pow'r. Dryden's Pables.
 From his feat the goddess born arose,
 And thus undaunted spoke. Dryden's Pables.
 When the daughter of Jupiter presented herself among a crowd of goddesses, she was distinguished by her graceful stature and superior beauty. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 1.

 A maid amidst them goddess-like appear'd. Pope's Odyssey.
- GO-BFATHER: n. f. [god and father.] The sponsor at the font.
 He had a son by her, and the king did him the honour as to stand godfather to his child. Bacon's Henry VII.
 Confirmation, a profitable usage of the church, transcribed from the apostles, consists in the child's undertaking in his own name the baptismal vow; and, that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some godfather with him, not now, as in baptism, as his procurator. Hammond.
- GO-BHEAD: n. f. [from god.]
 1. Godship; deity; divinity; divine nature.
 Be content;
 Your low-laid son our godhead will uplift. Shakespeare's Cymbel.
 At the holy mount
 Of heav'n's high-seated top, th' imperial throne
 Of godhead, fix'd for ever him and fore,
 The filial pow'r arriv'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
 So may thy godhead be confest,
 So the returning year be blest. Prior.
2. A deity in person; a god or goddess.
 Were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
 Adoring first the genius of the place,
 The nymphs and native godheads yet unknown. Dryd. En.
 GO-BLESS: adj. [from god.] Without sense of duty to God;
 atheistical; wicked; irreligious; impious.
 Of these two sorts of men, both goddesses, the one has utterly no knowledge of God, and the other studies how to persuade themselves that there is no such thing to be known. Hobbes.
 That goddess crew
 Rebellious. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi. l. 49.
 For

GOG

For faults not his, for guilt and crimes
Of godless men, and of rebellious times,
Him his ungrateful country sent,
Their best Camillus, into banishment. Dryden.

Nor ortelans nor godwits crown his board. Cowley.

GO'DYELD. adv. [corrupted from God shield or protect.] A term of thanks. Now not used.

Herein I teach you,
How you should bid godlyd us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble. Shaksp. Macbeth.

GOEL. adj. [golen, Saxon.] Yellow. An old word.

In March at the furthest, dry season or wet,
Hop-roots so well chosen let skilful go set;
The goeler and younger, the better I love;
Well gutted and pared, the better they prove. Tuff. Husb.

GO'ER. n. f. [from go.]

1. One that goes; a runner.
- I would they were in Africk both together,
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goer back. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

Such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, follow'd well, would now demonstrate them
But goers backward. Shaksp. All's well that ends well.

Nothing could hurt either of us so much as the intervening officious impertinence of those goers between us, who in England pretend to intimacies with you, and in Ireland to intimacies with me. Pope to Swift.

GO'ER. n. f. [from go.]

2. A walker; one that has a gait or manner of walking good or bad.
- The earl was so far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer. Wotton.

TO GO'GLE. v. n. To look askint.

Infam'd all over with disgrace,
To be seen by her in such a place,
Which made him hang his head, and scowl,
And wink and goggle like an owl. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 1.

Nor sighs, nor groans, nor goggling eyes did want. Dryd.

GO'GLE-EYED. adj. [gogel, Saxon.] Squint-eyed; not looking straight.

They are deformed, unnatural, or lame; and very unseemly

GO'ING. n. f. [from going.]

1. The act of walking.
- When nobles are their taylor's tutors,
No hereticks burnt, but wenchers suitors,
Then comes the time, who lives to see't,
That going shall be us'd with feet. Shaksp. King Lear.
2. Pregnancy.
- The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth; most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight; that is, the twentieth part of their going. Great's Cephel. Sac. b. iii. c. 3.
3. Departure.
- Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound. Milt. P. Lost.

GOLA. n. f. The fame with Cymatium, which see.

In a cornice the gola, or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make a noble flow. Spenfer.

GOLD. n. f. [gols, Saxon; gold, richness, Welsh.] It is called gold in our English tongue either of geel, as Scaliger says, which is in Dutch to shine; or of another Dutch word, which is gelten, and signifies in Latin valere, in English to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary word gels, for money. Peacbam on Drawing.

1. Gold is the heaviest, the most dense, the most simple, the most ductile, and most fixed of all bodies; not to be injured either by air or fire, and seeming incorruptible. It is soluble by means of sea-salt; but is injured by no other salt, and is most easily of all metals amalgamated with silver. Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a state of ore. It never constitutes a peculiar ore, but is found most frequently among ore of silver. Native gold is seldom found pure, but has almost constantly silver with it, and very frequently copper. Gold dust, or native gold, in small masses, is mixed among the sand of rivers in many parts of the world. It is found, in the greatest abundance, bedded in masses of hard stone, often at the depth of a hundred and fifty fathoms in the mines of Peru. Pure gold is so fixed, that Boerhaave informs us of an ounce of it set in the eye of a glass furnace for two months, without losing a single grain. Lill on Fossils.
- Gold* hath these natures: greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliancy or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Bacon's Nat. History.
- Ah! Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shaksp. Rich. III.

We commonly take shape and colour for so presumptive ideas of several species, that, in a good picture, we readily say this is gold, and that a silver goblet, only by the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil. Locke.

The gold freight vessel, which mad tempests beat,
He fees now vainly make to his retreat. Dryd. Tyrant. Lear.

2. Money.
- For me, the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive. Shaksp. Henry V.
- The sooner to effect what I intended. Shaksp. Henry V.
- Thou, that so stoutly hast resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
For I have bought it with an hundred blows. Shaksp. H. VI.
- If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog,
And give it Timon, why, the dog coins gold. Shaksp. Timon.
- It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρυσόν ἀγοδόν; and animam; aureos eluit in astra. Horace.
- The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold;
A lad of life, an imp of fume. Shaksp. Henry V.
- Gold* of Pleasure. n. f. [myagrum.]
- It hath a flower of four leaves, placed in form of a cross, out of whose cup arises the pointal, which becomes a turbinate fruit, having one cell, in which is included an oblong seed, and two empty cells at the point. Miller.
- GOLDBEATER*. n. f. [gold and beat.] One whose occupation is to beat or foliate gold so as to gild other matter.
- Our goldbeaters, though, for their own profit sake, they are wont to use the finest coined gold they can get, yet they scruple not to employ coined gold; and that the mint-masters are wont to alloy with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition. Bosch.
- This gilder was a goldbeater. Pope.
- GOLDBEATER'S SKIN*. n. f. The intestinum rectum of an ox, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is reduced thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small fresh wounds, as is now the common practice. Quincy.
- When your gilliflowers blow, if they break the pod, open it with a penknife or lancet at each division, as low as the flower has burst it, and bind it about with a narrow slip of goldbeater's skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- GOLDBOUND*. adj. [gold and bound.] Encompassed with gold. Thy air, Thou other goldbound brow, is like the first. Shaksp. Macbeth.

GOL

Affability, mildness, tenderness, and a word which I would fain bring back to its original signification of virtue, I mean good nature, are of daily use. Dryden.
This doctrine of God's good will towards men, this command of mens proportionable good will to one another, is not this the very body and substance, this the very spirit and life of our Saviour's whole institution? Spratt's Sermons.
It was his greatest pleasure to spread his healing wings over every place, and to make every one sensible of his good will to mankind. Calamy's Sermons.
How could you chide the young good natur'd prince,
And drive him from you with so stern an air. Addis. Cato.
26. Favourable; loving.
But the men were very good unto us, and we were not hurt. 1 Sa. xxv. 15.
Truly God is good to Israel, even to such as are of a clean heart. Pf. lxxiii. 1.
You have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you. 1 Thess. iv. 6.
This idea, thus made, and laid up for a pattern, must necessarily be adequate, being referred to nothing else but itself, nor made by any other original but the good liking and will of him that first made this combination. Locke.
27. Companionable; sociable; merry. Often used ironically.
It was well known, that Sir Roger had been a good fellow in his youth. Afcham's Schoolmaster.
Though he did not draw the good fellows to him by drinking, yet he eat well. Clarendon, b. viii.
Not being permitted to drink without eatings, will prevent the custom of having the cup often at his nose; a dangerous beginning and preparation to good fellowship. Locke.
28. It is sometimes used as an epithet of slight contempt, implying a kind of negative virtue or bare freedom from ill.
My good man, as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant. Addison's Spectator.
29. In a ludicrous sense.
As for all other good women that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to lounge themselves in the sunshine, they that have been but a while in Ireland can well witness. Spenser.

GOO

30. Hearty; earnest; not dubious.
He, that saw the time fit for the delivery he intended, called unto us to follow him, which we both, bound by oath and willing by good will, obeyed. Sidney, b. ii.
The good will of the nation to the present war has been since but too much experienced by the successes that have attended it. Temple.
God will, she said, my want of strength supplies;
And diligence shall give what age denies. Dryden's Fables.
31. In good time. Not too fast.
In good time, replies another, you have heard them dispute against a vacuum in the schools. Collier on Human Reason.
32. In good faith. Really; seriously.
What, must I hold a candle to my flames?
They in themselves, good faith, are too too light. Shakesp.
33. Good [To make.] To keep; to maintain; not to give up; not to abandon.
There died upon the place all the chieftains, all making good the fight without any ground given. Bacon's Henry VII.
He forced them to retire in spite of their dragons, which were placed there to make good their retreat. Clarendon.
Since we claim a proper interest above others in the pre-eminent rights of the household of faith, then, no doubt, to make good that claim, we are proportionally obliged above others to conform to the proper manners and virtues that belong to and become this household, and distinguish it from all others. Spratt's Sermons.
He without fear a dangerous war purfues;
As honour made him first the danger chuse,
So still he makes it good on virtue's score. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.
34. Good [To make.] To perform; to confirm.
I farther will maintain Upon his bad life to make all this good. Shakesp. Rich. II.

She makes but good the promise of her face. Waller.
These propositions I shall endeavour to make good. Snodgrass.
35. Good [To make.] To supply.
Every distinct being has somewhat peculiar to itself, to make good in one circumstance what it wants in another. L'Estr.
1. That which physically contributes to happiness; benefit; advantage; the contrary to evil.
I fear the emperor means no good to us. Shak. Tit. Andr.
Let me play the lion too: I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me. Shak. Midsum. Night's Dream.
He wad' indifferently twist them, doing neither good nor harm. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Nature in man's heart her laws doth pen,
Prescribing truth to wit, and good to will. Davies.
This caution will have also this good in it, that it will put them upon considering, and teach them the necessity of examining more than they do. Locke.
Good is what is apt to procure or increase pleasure, or diminish pain in us; or else to procure or preserve us the possession of any other good, or absence of any evil. Locke.
Refuse to leave thy debtors charge too soon,
And for the church's good defer thy own. Prior.
Works may have more wit than does them good,
As bodies perish through excess of blood. Pope's Ess. on Crit.
A thirst after truth, and a desire of good, are principles which still act with a great and universal force. Rogers.
2. Prosperity; advancement.
If he had employ'd
Those excellent gifts of fortune and of nature Unto the good, not ruin of the state. Ben. Jonst. Catiline.
3. Earnest; not jest.
The good woman never died after this, till she came to die for good and all. L'Estrange.
4. Moral qualities, such as are desirable; virtue; righteousness; piety.
Depart from evil, and do good. Pf. xxxiv. 14.
Empty of all good, wherein consists Woman's domestick honour, and chief praise. Milt. P. L.
By good, I question not but good, morally so called, bonum bonitatem ought, chiefly at least, to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure the bonum utile, or juvandum, hardly come into any account here. South.
Nor holds this earth a more deserving knight
For virtue, valour, and for noble blood,
Truth, honour, all that is compriz'd in good. Dryden.
5. Good placed after bad, with as, seems a substantive; but the expression is, I think, vitious; and good is rather an adjective elliptically used, or it may be considered as adverbial. See Good adv.
- The pilot must intend some port before he steers his course, or he had as good leave his vessel to the direction of the winds, and the government of the waves. South's Sermons.
Without good nature and gratitude, men had as good live in a wilderness as in a society. L'Estrange.
1. Well; not ill; not amiss.
2. Good. No worse.

My nurse and I, we there beheld
A goodly fruit, which, tempting me,
I would have pluck'd. Waller.
How full of ornament is all I view
In all its parts! and seems as beautiful as new:
O goodly order'd work! O power divine!
Of thee I am, and what I am is thine! Dryden's Innocence.
His eldest born, a goodly youth to view,
Excell'd the rest in shape and outward shew;
Fair, tall, his limbs with due proportion join'd,
But of a heavy, dull, degen'rate mind. Dryden's Fables.
2. Bulky; swelling; affectedly turgid.
Round as a globe, and liquor'd every chink,
Goodly and great he fails behind his link. Dryden.

GO'ODNESS. n. f. [from good.] Desirable qualities either moral or physical; kindness; favour.
If for any thing he loved greatness, it was because therein
he might exercise his goodness. Sidney, b. ii.
There is in all things an appetite or desire, whereby they incline to something which they may be; all which perfections are contained under the general name of goodness. Hooker.

All goodness
Is poison to thy stomach.
—Yes, that goodness
Of gleaming all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion:
The goodness of your intercepted packets
You write to the pope against the king; your goodness, Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious. Sh. H. VIII.
There's no goodness in thy face. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
The goodness of every thing is measured by its end and use, and that's the best thing which serves the best end and purpose. Tillotson, Sermon 1.

All severally made him very particular relations of the strength of the Scots army, the excellent discipline that was observed in it, and the goodness of the men. Clarendon, b. ii.
No body can say that tobacco of the same goodness is risen in respect of itself: one pound of the same goodness will never exchange for a pound and a quarter of the same goodness. Locke.
GOODS. n. f. [from good.]
1. Moveables in a house.

That a writ be su'd against you,
To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements,
Castles, and whatsoever. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
2. Wares; freight; merchandise.
Her majesty, when the goods of our English merchants were attached by the duke of Alva, arrested likewise the goods of the Low Dutch here in England. Raleigh's Essays.
Sallee, that scorn'd all pow'r and laws of men, Waller.
Goods with their owners hurrying to their den.
GO'ODLY. n. f. [corrupted from good wife.] A low term of civility used to mean persons.

Soft, goody sheep, then said the fox, not so;
Unto the king to rash ye may not go. Hubbard's Tale.
Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spy'd,
Which erst I saw when goody Dobson dy'd. Gay's Posthums.
Plain goody would no longer down;
'Twas madam in her program gown. Swift.
GOOSE. n. f. [plural geese.] [gor, Saxon; goes, Dutch; gawse, Erse, Eng. geese.]
1. A large waterfowl proverbially noted, I know not why, for foolishness.

Thou cream-faced down,
Where got'st thou that goose look? Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Since I pluckt geese, play'd truant, and whipt top, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten 'till lately. Shakespeare.
Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?
Goose, if I had you upon Sarum plain,
I'd drive ye cackling home to Camelot. Shakespeare, King Lear.
Birds most easy to be drawn are waterfowl; as the goose and swan. Peacham on Draughting.
Nor watchful dogs, nor the more wakeful geese,
Disturb with nightly noise the sacred peace. Dryden, Fables.
2. A tailor's smoothing iron.

Come in, taylor: here you may roast your goose. Shakespeare.
GOOSEBERRY. n. f. [goose and berry, because eaten with young geese as sauce.]

The leaves are lacinated or jagged: the whole plant is set with prickles: the fruit grows imperfectly upon the tree, having for the most part but one fruit upon a footstalk, which is of an oval or globular figure, containing many small seeds, surrounded by a pulpy substance. The species are, 1. The common gooseberry. 2. The large manured gooseberry. 3. The red hairy gooseberry. 4. The large white Dutch gooseberry.
5. The large amber gooseberry. 6. The large green gooseberry. 7. The large red gooseberry. 8. The yellow-leaved gooseberry. 9. The striped-leaved gooseberry. Miller.

fruits; as pears, plums, apples, gooseberries. Peacham.
Upon a gooseberry bush a snail I found;

For always snails near sweetest fruit abound. Gay's Post.
GOOSEFOOT. n. f. [chenopodium.] Wild orch.
The seeds are single and globose in some species; but in others they are compressed: the cup of the flower is quinquefid:
the leaves grow alternately upon the stalks between the seeds. Miller.

GOOSEGRASS. n. f. Clivers; an herb. See CLIVERS.
Goosegrass, or wild tanfy, is a weed that strong clays are very subject to. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GOBBELLY. n. f. [from gor, dung, and belly, according to Skinner and Juvius.] It may perhaps come from gor, Welsh, beyond, too much; or, as seems to me more likely, may be contracted from gormand, or gormand's belly, the belly of a glutton.] A big paunch; a swelling belly. A term of reproach for a fat man.

GOR

GOBBELLED. adj. [from gorbelly.] Fat; bigbelled; having swelling paunches.

Hang ye, gorbelled knaves, are you undone? No, ye fat chuffs, I would your store were here. Shakespeare, Henry IV. p. i.
GORD. n. f. An instrument of gaming, as appears from Bianmont and Fletcher. Warburton.
Thy dry bones can reach at nothing now, but gor and ninepins. Beaumont and Fletcher.
Let vultures gripe thy guts; for gor and Fulham holds.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
GORE. n. f. [gor, Saxon; gor, Welsh, fanious matter.]

1. Blood.
A grievous wound,
From which forth gush'd a stream of gor blood thick,
That all her goodly garment stain'd around,
And into a deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground. R. Quen.
Another's crimes the youth unhappy bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guileless gor. Dryden's Am.

2. Blood clotted or congealed.
The bloody fact
Will be aveng'd; though here thou see him die,
Rolling in dust and gor. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
His horrid beard and knotted tresses stood Stiff with his gor, and all his wounds ran blood. Danham.

TO GORE. v. a. [gebeian, Saxon.]
1. To stab; to pierce.
Oh, let no noble eye profane a tear
For me, if I be gor'd with Mowbray's spear. Shakespeare, R. II.

No weaker lion's by a stronger slain;
Nor from his larger tusks the forest boar
Commillion takes his brother swine to gor. Tate's Jucen.
For arms his men long pikes and jav'lins bore,
And poles with pointed fides their fides in battle gor. Dryd.

2. To pierce with a horn.
Some to's'd, some gor'd, some trampling down he kill'd.
Dryden's Preface to the Conquest of Granada.

He idly butting, feigns
His rival gor'd in every knotty trunk. Thomson's Spring.

GORGE. n. f. [gorge, French.]
1. The throat; the swallow.
There were birds also made so finely, that they did not only deceive the fight with their figures, but the hearing with their songs, which the wary instruments did make their gorge deliver. Sidney.

And now how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at it. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor. Shakespeare, Othello.

2. That which is gorged or swallowed.
And all the way, most like a brutish beast,
He spew'd up his gorge, that all did him detest. Fa. Quen.

TO GORGE. v. n. [gorge, French.]
1. To fill up to the throat; to glut; to satiate.
Thou detestable maw, thou womb of death,
Gorge'd with the dearest morsel of the earth. Sh. Ro. and Jul.

Being with his presence glutted, gorge'd, and full. Shakespeare.
He that makes his generation mellow,
To gorge his appetite. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Gorge with my blood thy barbarous appetite. Dryden.
I must therefore desire, that they will not gorge him either with nonsense or obscenity. Addison's Guardian.

Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain
On Africk's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds,
To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia. Adelphi Cato.

The giant, gorge'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
Lay stretcht at length, and snoring in his den. Adelphi.

2. To swallow: as, the fish has gorged the hook. Stimmer. Fine;
GORGEOUS. adj. [gorgeus, old French. Stimmer.] Fine; splendid; glittering in various colours; showy; magnificent.

O, that deceit should dwell
In such a gorgeous palace! Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.
As full of spirit as the month of May,
And gorgeous as the sun at Midsummer. Shakespeare, Ham. IV.

He had them look upon themselves and upon their enemies themselves dreadful, their enemies gorgeous and brave. Hayes.

The gorgeous East, with richest hand,
Pours on her kings barbaric pearl and gold. Milton.

With gorgeous wings, the marks of sov'reign sway,
The two contending princes make their way. Dryden, Virgil.

GORGEOUSLY. adv. [from gorgeous.] Splendidly; magnificently; finely.

The duke, one solemn day, gorgeously clad in a suit all over spread with diamonds, lost one of them of good value. Warton.

GORGEOUSLY. n. f. [from gorgeous.] Splendour; magnificence; show.

GORGET. n. f. [from gorge.] The piece of armour that defends the throat.
He with a pally fumbling on his gorget,
Shakes in and out the rivet. Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.

GOS

He did oftentimes spend the night in the church alone praying, his headpiece, gorget, and gauntlets lying by him. Knolles's History of the Turks.

See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben. Jonson, Cat.

About his neck a threefold gorget,
As rough as trebled leathern target. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.

GORGON. n. f. [gorgon.] A monster with snaky hairs, of whom the sight turned beholders to stone; anything ugly or horrid.

Gorgons and hydras, and chimera's dire.
Why didst thou not encounter man for man,
And try the virtue of that gorgon face. Dryden.

GORMAND. n. f. [goumand, French.] A greedy eater; a ravenous luxurious feeder.

TO GORMANDIZE. v. n. [from gormand.] To eat greedily;

Their gorsy fides the fresh wounds fiercely fret. Spenser.

Why dost thou shake thy gorsy locks at me?
Thou canst not say I did it.

2. Bloody; murderous; fatal. Not in use.
The obligation of our blood forbids
A gorsy emulation 'twixt us twain. Shak. Troil. and Cressida.

GOSHAWK. n. f. [gor, goose, and hawke, a hawk.] A hawk of a large kind.
Such dread his awful visage on them cast;
So seem poor doves at goshawks light aghast. Fairfax, b. iii.

GOSLING. n. f. [from goose.]
1. A young goose; a goose not yet full grown.
Why do you go nodding and wagging so like a fool, as if you were hipshot? says the goose to her gosling. L'Estrange.

Nature hath instructed even a brood of goslings to stick together, while the kite is hovering over their heads. Swift.

2. A cat's tail on nut-trees and pines.
GOSPEL. n. f. [gospel, or God's or good tidings; evan-gelion; gospel, gospel, happy tidings, Erse.]

1. God's word; the holy book of the Christian revelation.
Thus may the gospel to the rising sun
Be spread, and flourish where it first begun. Waller.

How is a good Christian animated and cheered by a steadfast belief of the promises of the gospel? Bentley's Sermons.

2. Divinity; theology.
TO GOSPEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fill with sentiments of religion. This word in Shakespeare, in whom alone I have found it, is used, though so venerable in itself, with some degree of irony: I suppose from the gospellers, who had long been held in contempt.

Are you so gospel'd
To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whole heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave? Shakespeare.

GOSPELLER. n. f. [from gospel.] A name of the followers of Whitby, who first attempted a reformation from popery, given them by the Papists in reproach, from their professing to follow and preach only the gospel.

These gospellers have had their golden days,
Have trodden down our holy Roman faith. Rawe's J. Shere.

GOSSEMER. n. f. [gossamer, low Latin.] The down of plants; the long white cobwebs which fly in the air in calm funny weather, especially about the time of Autumn. Hammer.

A lover may bestride the gossamer,
That idles in the wanton Summer air,
And yet not fall, so light is vanity. Shakespeare, Rom. and Juliet.

Hadst thou been taught but gossamer, feathers, air,
So many fathom down precipitating,
Thou'dst flither'd like an egg. Shakespeare, King Lear.

Four nimble gnats the horses were,
Their harnesses of gossamer. Drayton's Nymphid.

The filmy gossamer now sits no more,
Nor halcyons bask on the short sunny shore. Dryden, Virgil.

GOSSEY. n. f. [from goss and ryb, relations, affinity, Saxon.]
1. One who answers for the child in baptism.

Go to a gossy's feast and gaud with me,
After so long grief such nativity:
—With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast. Shakespeare.

At the christening of George duke of Clarence, who was born in the castle of Dublin, he made both the earl of Kildare and the earl of Ormond his gossips. Davies on Ireland.

2. A tripping companion.
And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab,
And when she drinks against her lips I bob. Shakespeare.

3. To do the office of a neighbour,
To be a gossip at his labour. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 1.
And be a gossip at his labour.

The common chat of gossips when they meet. Dryden.

GOV

TO GOSSIP. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To chat; to prate; to be merry.
Go to a gossip's feast and gaud with me.
—With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast. Shakespeare.

His mother was a votress of my order,
And, in the spiced Indian air, by night,
Full often hath she gossipt by my side. Shakespeare.

The market and exchange must be left to their own ways of talking; and gossippings not be robbed of their ancient privilege. Locke.

2. To be a pot-companion.
Nor met with fortune, other than at feasts,
Full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossipping. Shak. K. John.

GOSSEPER. n. f. [gossipy, from gossip.]
Gosseper or compaterity, by the canon law, is a spiritual affinity; and the juror, that was gossip to either of the parties, might, in former times, have been challenged as not indifferent. Davies on Ireland.

GOSTING. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
GOT. pret. [from the verb get.]
Titus Lartius writes, they fought together; but Aufidius got off. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

If you have strength Achilles' arms to bear,
Though foul Therites got thee, thou shalt be Lov'd and esteem'd. Dryden's Juvenal.

These regions and this realm my wars have got;
This mournful empire is the loser's lot. Dryden, Innocence.

When they began to reason about the means how the sea got thicker, and away back again, there they were presently in the dark. Woodward's Natural History.

GOT. part. pass. of get.
Solymann commended them for their valour in their evil dopes, in a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason. Knolles's History of the Turks.

Let him boast
His knowledge of good lost, and evil got. Milt. Par. Lost.

A gentle persuasion in reasoning, when the first point of submission to your will is got, will most times do. Locke.

If he behaves himself so when he depends on us for his daily bread, can any man say what he will do when he is got above the world? Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

Thou wert from Etna's burning entrails torn,
Got by fierce whirlwinds, and in thunder born. Pope.

There seem to be but two general kinds of government in the world: the one exercised according to the arbitrary commands and will of some single person; and the other according to certain orders or laws introduced by agreement or custom, and not to be changed without the consent of many. Temple.

2. An establishment of legal authority.

There they shall found
Their government, and their great fenate chute
Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws ordain'd. Milton.

While he survives, in concord and content
The commons live, by no divisions rent;
But the great monarch's death dissolves the government. Dryd.

Every one knows, who has considered the nature of government, that there must be in each particular form of it an absolute unlimited power. Addison.

Where any one person or body of men seize into their hands the power in the last resort, there is properly no longer a government, but what Aristotle and his followers call the abuse or corruption of one. Suiff.

3. Administration of public affairs.

Safety and equal government are things
Which subjects make as happy as their kings. Waller.

4. Regularity of behaviour.

You needs must learn, lord, to amend this fault;
Though sometimes it flows greatness, courage, blood,
Yet oftentimes it doth present hard rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion and disdain. Shakes. Hen. IV.

'Tis government that makes them seem divine;
The want thereof makes thee abominable. Shakes. H. VI.

5. Manageableness; compliance; obsequiousness.

Thy eyes window fall,

4. To heighten; to improve.
Not only vitriol is a cause of blackness, but the salts of natural bodies; and dyes advance and graduate their colours with salts. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 12.

GRA'DUATE. n. f. [from gradus, French; gradus, Latin.] A man dignified with an academical degree.

Of graduates I dislike the learned rout,
And chafe a female doctor for the gout. Bramhall.

GRA'DUATION. n. f. [from graduation, French; graduation.]

1. Regular progression by succession of degrees.
The graduation of the parts of the universe is likewise necessary to the perfection of the whole. Grew's Cosmol. Sacra.

Of greater repugnancy unto reason is that which he delivers concerning its graduation, that heated in fire, and often extinguished in oil of mars or iron, the loadstone acquires an ability to extract a nail fastened in a wall. Brown's Vul. Err.

2. The act of conferring academical degrees.
GRA'FF. n. f. [See GRAVE.] A ditch; a moat.

Though the fortifications were not regular, yet the walls were good, and the graft broad and deep. Clarendon, b. viii.

GRA'FF. n. f. [from graff, French.] A small branch inserted into GRA'FT. } the stock of another tree, and nourished by its sap, but bearing its own fruit; a young cyon.

God gave unto man all kind of seeds and grafts of life; as the vegetative life of plants, the sensual of beasts, the rational of man, and the intellectual of angels. Raleigh.

It is likely, that as in fruit-trees the graft maketh a greater fruit, so in trees that bear no fruit it will make the greater leaves. Bacon's Natural History, No. 475.

'Tis usual now an inmate graft to see
With insolence invade a foreign tree. Dryd. Virg. Georg.

If you cover the top with clay and horse-dung, in the same manner as you do a graft, it will help to heal the sooner. Mart.

Now the cleft rind inserted grafts receives,
And yields an offspring more than nature gives. Pope.

To GRA'FF. } v. a. [from graff, French.]

To GRA'FT. } 1. To insert a cyon or branch of one tree into the stock of another.
His growth is but a wild and fruitless plant;
I'll cut his barren branches to the stock,
And graft you on to bear. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

With his pruning hook d'sjoin
Unbearing branches from their head,
And graft more happy in their stead. Dryden.

2. To propagate by insertion or inoculation.
In March is good grafting the skilful do know,
So long as the wind in the East do not blow:
From moon being changed, 'till past be the prime,
For grafting and cropping is very good time. Tusser's Husb.

To have fruit in greater plenty the way is to graft, not only upon young stocks, but upon divers boughs of an old tree; for they will bear great numbers of fruit: whereas, if you graft but upon one stock, the tree can bear but few. Bacon.

Now

GRA

Now let me graft my pears, and prune the vine. Dryden.

3. To insert into a place or body to which it did not originally belong.
And they also, if they hide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in; for God is able to graft them in again. Rom. xi. 23.

These are th' Italian names which fate will join With ours, and graft upon the Trojan line. Dryden's Æn.

4. To fill with an adjectitious branch.
We've some old crab-trees here at home, that will not Be grafted to your relish. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The noble life doth want her proper limbs;
Her royal flock graft with ignoble plants. Shaksp. R. III.

5. To join one thing to as to receive support from another.
This resolution against any peace with Spain is a new incident grafted upon the original quarrel, by the intrigues of a faction among us. Swift.

May one kind grave unite each hapless name,
And graft my love immortal on thy fame. Pope.

GRA'FTER. n. f. [from graft or graff.] One who propagates fruit by grafting.

I am informed, by the trials of more than one of the most skilful and experienced *grafter*s of these parts, that a man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graft the same year in which the infusion is made. Evelyn.

GRAIL. n. f. [from grail, French.] Small particles of any kind.

Hereof this gentle knight unweeting was,
And, lying down upon the sandy grails,
Drank of the stream as clear as crystal glass. Fairy Queen.

GRAIN. n. f. [from grain, French; grainum, Latin; grano, Italian, has all the following significations.]

1. A single seed of corn.
Look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow, and which will not. Shaksp.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flogging, pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shak. Coriolanus.

Many of the ears, being six inches long, had fixty grains in them, and none less than forty. Martimer's Husbandry.

2. Corn.
As it ebbs, the seedman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Pales no longer swell'd the teeming grain,
Nor Phœbus fed his oxen on the plain. Dryden's Pastoral.

'Tis a rich soil, I grant you; but often covered with weeds than grain. Collier on Fame.

3. The seed of any fruit.
4. Any minute particle; any single body.
Thou exist'st on many thousand grains
That issue out of dust. Shaksp. Meas. for Measure.

By intelligence
And proofs as clear as founts in July, when
We see each grain of gravel. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

5. The smallest weight, of which in physics twenty make a scruple, and in Troy weight twenty-four make a penny weight; a grain so named because it is supposed of equal weight with a grain of corn.

They began at a known body, a barley-corn, the weight whereof is therefore called a grain; which arithmetically, being multiple, to scruples, drachms, ounces and pounds. Holder.

The trial being made betwixt lead and lead, weighing severally seven drachms, in the air; the balance in the water weighed only four drachms and forty-one grains, and abated of the weight in the air two drachms and nineteen grains:
the balance kept the same depth in the water as above said.
Bacon's Phys. Rem.

His brain
Outweigh'd his rage but half a grain. Hudibras, p. i.

6. Any thing proverbially small.
For the whole world before thee is as a little grain of the balance. Wisd. xi. 22.

The ungrateful person lives to himself, and submits by the good nature of others, of which he himself has not the least grain. South's Sermons.

7. GRAIN of Alleviance. Something indulged or remitted; something above or under the exact weight.

He, whose very best actions must be seen with grains of al-leviance, cannot be too mild, moderate, and forgiving. Addis.

I would always give some grains of alleviance to the sacred science of theology. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

8. The direction of the fibres of wood, or other fibrous matter.
Knots, by the confux of meeting sap,
Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain
Tortive and errant from his course of growth. Shaksp.

9. The body of the wood.
The beech, the swimming alder, and the plane,
Hard box, and linden of a lofter grain. Dryden.

GRA

10. The body considered with respect to the form or direction of the constituent particles.
The tooth of a sea-horse, in the midst of the solid parts, contains a curdled grain which is not to be found in ivory.

Stones of a constitution to compact, and a grain to fine, that they bear a fine polish. Woodward.

11. Diced or stained substance.
How the red roses flush up in her cheeks,
And the pure snow with goodly vermil stain,
Like crimson dy'd in grain. Spenser's Prothalam.

Over his lucid arms
A military vest of purple flow'd,
Livelier than melibæan, or the grain
Of farra, worn by kings and heroes old. Milton's P. Lost.

Come, pensive nun, devout and pure,
All in a robe of darkest grain,
Flowing with majestick train. Milton.

The third, his feet
Shadow'd from either heel with feather'd mail,
Sky-tinctur'd grain! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

12. Temper; disposition; inclination; humour.
Your minds, preoccupied with what
You rather must do than what you should do,
Made you against the grain to voice him counsel. Shaksp.

Quoth Hudibras, it is in vain,
I see, to argue 'gainst the grain. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 2.

Old clients, weary'd out with fruitless care,
Dismiss their hopes of eating, and despair;
Though much against the grain, forc'd to retire,
Buy roots for supper, and provide a fire. Dryden's Juvenal.

13. The heart; the bottom.
The one being tractable and mild, the other stiff and impatient of a superior, they lived but in cunning concord, as brothers glued together, but not united in grain. Hayward.

14. The form of the surface with regard to roughness and smoothness.
The smaller the particles of those substances are, the smaller will be the scratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances; and therefore polish it no otherwise than by bringing its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to be visible. Newton's Opt.

GRA'INED. adj. [from grain.] Rough; made less smooth.
Though now this grained face of mine be hid
In sap consuming Winter's dizzied snow,
Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shakespeare.

GRAINS. n. f. [without a singular.] The husks of malt exhausted in brewing.

Give them grains their fill,
Husks, draff, to drink and swill. Ben. Jonst. New Inn.

GRA'INY. adj. [from grain.]

1. Full of corn.
2. Full of grains or kernels.

GRA'MERCV. interj. [contracted from grant me mercy.] An obsolete expression of surprise.

Gramercy, sir, said he; but mote I weat
What strange adventure do ye now pursue? Fairy Queen.

Gramercy, lovely Lucius, what's the news? Shaksp.

GRAMINEOUS. adj. [from gramineus, Latin.] Grassy. Grami-neous plants are such as have a long leaf without a footstalk.

GRAMINIVOROUS. adj. [from graven and voro, Latin.] Grafs-eating; living upon grafs.

The ancients were verfed chiefly in the dissection of brutes, among which the graminivorous kind have a party-coloured choroides. Sharp's Surgery.

GRAMMAR. n. f. [from grammaire, French; grammatica, Latin; γραμματική.]

1. The science of speaking correctly; the art which teaches the relations of words to each other.

We make a countryman dumb, whom we will not allow to speak but by the rules of grammar. Dryden's Duress.

Men, speaking language according to the grammar rules of that language, do yet speak improperly of things. Locke.

2. Propriety or justness of speech; speech according to grammar.
Varium & mutabile semper femina, is the sharpest satire that ever was made on woman; for the adjectives are neuter, and animal must be understood to make them grammar. Dryden.

3. The book that treats of the various relations of words to one another.

GRAMMAR School. n. f. A school in which the learned languages are grammatically taught.

Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm in erecting a grammar school. Shakespeare's Hen. VI.

The ordinary way of learning Latin in a grammar school I cannot encourage. Locke.

GRAMMARIAN. n. f. [from grammairien, French; grammar.]

One who teaches grammar; a philologist.

GRA

Many disputes the ambiguous nature of letters hath created among the grammarians. Holder's Elements of Speech.

They who have called him the torture of grammarians, might also have called him the plague of translators. Dryden.

GRAMMA'TICAL. adj. [grammatical, Fr. grammaticus, Latin.] 1. Belonging to grammar.

The beauty of virtue still being set before their eyes, and that taught them with far more diligent care than grammatical rules. Stane, b. ii.

I shall take the number of consonants, not from the grammatical alphabets of any language, but from the diversity of sounds framed by single articulations with appulse. Holder.

2. Taught by grammar.

They seldom know more than the grammatical construction, unless born with a poetical genius. Dryden's Discrepancy.

GRAMMA'TICALLY. adv. [from grammatical.] According to the rules or science of grammar.

When a sentence is distinguished into the nouns, the verbs, pronouns, adverbs, and other particles of speech which compose it, then it is said to be analysed grammatically. Watts.

As grammar teacheth us to speak properly, so it is the part of rhetoric to instruct how to do it elegantly, by adding beauty to that language that before was naked and grammatically true. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

GRAMMATICASTER. n. f. [Latin.] A mean verbal pedant; a low grammarian.

I have not vexed their language with the doubts, the remarks, and eternal triflings of the French grammaticasters. Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

GRAMPLE. n. f. A crab-fish. Divjworth.

GRAMPUS. n. f. A large fish of the cetaceous kind.

GRANARY. n. f. [granarium, Latin.] A storehouse for threshed corn.

Ants, by their labour and industry, contrive the matter so, that corn will keep as dry in their nests as in our granaries. Addison's Guardian, N^o. 156.

The naked nations cloath,

And be th' exhaustless granary of a world. Thomson's Spring.

GRANATE. n. f. [from granum, Latin.] A kind of marble so called, because it is marked with small variegations like grains. Otherwise GRANITE.

GRAND. adj. [grand, French; grandis, Latin.] 1. Great; illustrious; high in power.

God had planted, that is, made to grow the trees of life and knowledge, plants only proper and becoming the paradise and garden of so grand a Lord. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

2. Great; splendid; magnificent.

A voice has flown

To re-entame a grand design. Young.

3. Noble; sublime; lofty; conceived or expressed with great dignity.

4. It is used to signify ascent or descent of consanguinity.

GRANDAM. n. f. [grand and dam or dame.] 1. Grandmother; my father's or mother's mother.

I meeting him, will tell him that my lady

Was fairer than his grandam, and as chaste

As may be in the world. Shakspeare's Troilus and Cressida.

A woman's story, at a Winter's fire,

Author'd by her grandam. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

We have our forefathers and great grandames all before us, as they were in Chaucer's days. Dryden's Fables, Pref.

Thy tygers heart belies thy angel face:

Too well thou shew'st thy pedigree from stone;

Thy grandame's was the first by Pyrrha thrown. Dryden.

2. An old withered woman.

The women

Cry'd, one and all, the suppliant should have right,

GRA

ment than strength: they furnish out vicerealties for the grandees, and poets of honour for the noble families. Addison.

GRANDE'VITY. n. f. [from grandevous, Latin.] Great age; length of life.

GRANDE'VOUS. adj. [grandevous, Latin.] Long lived; of great age.

GRANDEUR. n. f. [French.] 1. State; splendour of appearance; magnificence.

As a magistrate or great officer, he locks himself from all approaches by the multiplied formalities of attendance, by the distance of ceremony and grandeur. South's Sermons.

2. Elevation of sentiment or language.

GRANDFATHER. n. f. [grand and father.] The father of my father or mother; the next above my father in the scale of ascent.

One was saying that his great grandfather, and grandfather, and father died at sea: said another, that heard him, an' I were as you, I would never come at sea. Why, faith he, where did your great grandfather, and grandfathers, and father die? He answered, where but in their beds? He answered, an' I were as you, I would never come in bed. Bacon's Apophth.

Our grandchildren will see a few rags hung up in Westminsterhall, which cost an hundred millions, whereof they are paying the arrears, and boast that their grandfathers were rich and great.

GRANDFICK. adj. [grandis and facis, Latin.] Making great.

GRANDINOUS. adj. [grandis, Latin.] Full of hail; consisting of hail.

GRANDITY. n. f. [from grandis, Latin.] Greatness; grandeur; magnificence. An old word.

Our poets excel in grandity and gravity, smoothness and property, in quickness and briefness. Camden's Remains.

GRANDMOTHER. n. f. [grand and mother.] The father's or mother's mother.

Thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice. 1 Tim. i. 5.

GRANDSIRE. n. f. [grand and sire.] 1. Grandfather.

Think'st thou, that I will leave my kingly throne,

Wherein my grandsire and my father sat? Shakspeare's Hen. VI.

Thy grandsire, and his brother, to whom fame

Gave, from two conquer'd parts o' th' world, their name. Denham.

The wreaths his grandsire knew to reap

By active toil and military sweat. Prior.

2. Any ancestor, poetically.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,

Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster? Shakspeare's Merch. of Ven.

Above the portal, carv'd in cedar wood,

So mimic ancient wits at belt,

As apes our grandsires in their doublets drest. Pope.

GRANDSON. n. f. [grand and son.] The son of a son or daughter.

Almighty Jove augment your wealthy Rore,

Give much to you, and to your grandsons more. Dryden.

Grandfathers in private families are not much observed to have great influence on their grandsons, and, I believe, they have much less among princes.

GRANGE. n. f. [grange, French.] A farm: generally a farm with a house at a distance from neighbours.

One, when he had got the inheritance of an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it; and, to draw buyers, proclaimed the virtues of it: nothing ever thrived on it, faith he; the trees were all blasted, the swine died of the measles, the cattle of the murrain, and the sheep of the rot; nothing was ever reared there, not a duckling or a goose. Ben. Jonson's Dilect.

At the moated grange resides this dejected Mariana. Shakspeare.

The loose unletter'd hinds,

When for their teeming flocks and granges full

In wanton dance they praise the bounteous Pan. Milton.

GRA

and is also found in the West of England little inferior. The vulgar opinion of their being cast out of various fragments of marble, because they appear composed of particles or granules of different colours, is easily confuted by an accurate inspection of the structure and formation of those granules, the least and meanest of which no human art could ever compose, nor fire leave in the state in which we see them. A third sort of granite has a beautiful variegation of colours, red, white, black and yellow, and capable of an elegant polish: it is little inferior in beauty to the oriental granite, and there are immense strata of it in Minorca. Detached nodules of it, two or three foot in circumference, are also frequent on the shores of Guernsey, from whence it is brought as ballast, and used in paving our streets. Hill on Effigil.

Alabaster, marble of divers colours, both simple and mixed, the opulites, porphyry, and the granite. Woodward.

There are still great pillars of granite, and other fragments of this ancient temple. Addison on Italy.

GRANIVOROUS. adj. [granum and voro, Lat.] Eating grain; living upon grain.

Granivorous birds, as a crane, upon the first peck of their bills, can distinguish the qualities of hard bodies, which the sense of men discerns not without magnification. Brown.

Panick affords a soft demulcent nourishment, both for granivorous birds and mankind. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GRANNAM. n. f. [for grandam.] Grandmother. Only used in burlesque works.

Oft my kind granmam told me, Tim, take warning. Cay.

TO GRANT. v. a. [from granti, French, Junius and Skinner; perhaps, as Althoff thinks, from gratula, or rather from gratia or gratificari.]

1. To admit that which is not yet proved; to allow; to yield; to concede.

They gather out of Scripture general rules to be followed in making laws; and so, in effect, they plainly grant, that we ourselves may lawfully make laws for the church. Hooker.

Grant that the fates have firm'd, by their decree,

The Trojan race to reign in Italy. Dryden's Æn. b. vii.

Suppose, which yet I grant not, thy desire

A moment elder than my rival fire,

Can chance of seeing first thy title prove? Dryden.

If he be one indifferent as to the present rebellion, they may take it for granted his complaint is the rage of a disappointed man. Addison's Freeholder.

2. To bestow something which cannot be claimed of right.

The God of Israel grant thee thy petition that thou hast asked of him. 1 Sa. xvii.

Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life. Acts xiii. 18.

Didst thou not kill this king?

—I grant ye.

—Do'st grant me, hedgehog? Then God grant me too,

Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deed. Shakspeare's R. III.

He heard, and granted half his prayer;

The rest the winds dispers'd. Pope.

GRANT. n. f. [from the verb.] 1. The act of granting or bestowing.

2. The thing granted; a gift; a boon.

Courtiers juggle for a grant,

And when they break their friendship plead their want. Dry.

3. [In law.] A gift in writing of such a thing as cannot aptly be passed or conveyed by word only; as rents, reversions, services, advowsons in gross, common in gross, tithes, &c. or and all bodies politic; which differences be often in speech neglected, and then is taken generally for every gift whatsoever, made of anything by any person; and he that granteth it is named the grantor, and he to whom it is made the grantee. A thing is said to be in grant which cannot be assigned without deed. Cruil.

All the whole land is the queen's, unless there be some grant of any part thereof, to be shewed from her majesty. Spenser's State of Ireland.

4. Concession; admission of something in dispute.

But of this so large a grant, we are content not to take advantage. Hooker, b. iii. f. 11.

This grant destroys all you have urg'd before. Dryden.

GRANTABLE. adj. [from grant.] That which may be granted.

The office of the bishop's chancellor was grantable for life. Ayliffe's Parergon.

GRANTEE. n. f. [from grant.] He to whom any grant is made.

To smooth the way for popery in Mary's time, the grantees were confirmed by the pope in the possession of the abbey-lands. Swift.

GRA

Small-coal, with sulphur and nitre, proportionably mixed, tempered, and formed into granary bodies, do make up that powder which is in use for guns. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO GRANULATE. v. n. [granular, Fr. from granum, Latin.] To be formed into small grains.

The juice of grapes, inspissated by heat, granulates into sugar. Spratt.

TO GRANULATE. v. a. 1. To break into small masses or granules.

2. To raise into small asperities.

I have observed, in many birds, the gullet, before its entrance into the gizzard, to be much dilated, and thick set, or as it were granulated with a multitude of glandules, each whereof was provided with its excretory vessel. Roy.

GRANULAT'ION. n. f. [granulation, French, from granulate.] 1. The act of pouring melted metal into cold water, so as it may granulate or congeal into small grains: it is generally done through a colander, or a birchen broom. Gunpowder and some salts are likewise said to be granulated, from their resemblance to grain or seed. Quincy.

2. The act of shooting or breaking in small masses.

Tents in wounds, by resisting the growth of the little granulation of the flesh, in process of time harden them, and in that manner produce a fistula. Shary's Surgery.

GRANULE. n. f. [from granum, Latin.] A small compact particle.

With an excellent microscope, where the naked eye did see but a green powder, the assisted eye could discern particular granules, some blue, and some yellow. Boyle on Colours.

GRANULOUS. adj. [from granule.] Full of little grains.

GRAPE. n. f. [rappe, French; krappe, Dutch.] The fruit of the vine, growing in clusters; the fruit from which wine is expressed.

And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger. Lev. xix. 10.

Turn back thine hand, as the grape gatherers into the baskets. Jer. vi. 9.

Anacreon, for thy sake

I of the grape no mention make;

Ere my Anacreon by thee fell,

Curst plant I lov'd thee well. Cowley.

Here are the vines in early flow'r dity'd,

Here grapes discolour'd on the sunny side. Pope's Odyssey.

GRAPE HYACINTH, or GRAPE FLOWER. See MUSK.

GRAPESTONE. n. f. [grape and stone.] The stone or seed contained in the grape.

When obedient nature knows his will,

A fly, a grapestone, or a hair can kill. Prior.

GRAPHICAL. adj. [γραφικα.] Well delineated.

Write with a needle, or bodkin, or knife, or the like, when the fruit or trees are young; for as they grow, so the letters will grow more large and graphical. Bacon's Natural History.

GRAPHICALLY. adv. [from graphical.] In a picturesque manner; with good description or delineation.

The hyena odorata, or civet cat, is delivered and graphically described by Castellus. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

GRAPNEL. n. f. [grapin, French.] 1. A small anchor belonging to a little vessel.

2. A grappling iron with which in fight one ship fastens on another.

TO GRAPPLE. v. n. [grapellen, Dutch; krappeln, German.] 1. To contend by seizing each other, as wrestlers.

They must be also practised in all the locks and grips of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tugs or grapple, and to close. Milton.

Living virtue, all achievements pass,

Meets envy, still to grapple with at last. Waller.

Does he think that he can grapple with divine vengeance,

And endure the everlasting burnings? South's Sermons.

Anteus here and stern Alcides strive,

And both the grappling statues seem to live. Addison.

2. To contend in close fight.

Ill in my standard bear the arms of York,

To grapple with the house of Lancaster. Shakspeare's Hen. VI.

Sometimes, from fighting squadrons of each fleet,

Two grappling Euræas on the ocean meet,

And English fires with Belgian flames contend. Dryden.

TO GRAPPLE. v. a. 1. To fasten; to fix; to join indissolubly. Now obsolete.

Grapple your minds to sternage of the navy,

And leave your England as dead midnight still. Shakspeare's H. V.

I will put that business in your bosoms,

Whole execution takes your enemy off,

Grapples you to the heart and love of us. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

2. To seize; to lay fast hold of.

GRAPPLE. n. f. [from the verb.] 1. Contest hand to hand, in which the combatants seize each other; the wrestlers hold.

As when earth's son, Anteus, strove

With Jove's Alcides, and, oft foil'd, still rose. Fresh.

GRA

- Fresh from his fall, and fiercer grapple join'd, Throttled at length in th' air, expir'd and fell. Milton.
Or did his genius
Know mine the stronger demon, fear'd the grapple,
And, looking round him, found this nook of fate,
To skulk behind my sword. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
2. Close fight.
In the grapple I boarded them; on the infant they got clear of our ship, to alone became their prisoner. Shakef. Hamlet.
3. Iron instrument by which one ship fastens on another.
But Cymon soon his crooked grapples cast,
Which with tenacious hold his foes embrac'd. Dryden.
GRAPPLEMENT. n. f. [from grapple.] Close fight; hostile embrace.
They catching hold of him, as down he lent,
Him backward overthrew, and down him stay'd
With their rude hands and grievous grapplement. Fairy Queen.
GRASSHOPPER. n. f. [grass and hop.] A small insect that hops in the summer grass. The cicada of the Latins, or cicala of the Italians, is often by the poets translated grasshopper, but improperly.
Her waggon spokes made of long spinners legs,
The cover of the wings of grasshoppers. Shakef. R. and Jul.
Grasshoppers eat up the green of whole countries. Bacon.
Where silver lakes, with verdant shadows crown'd,
Disperse a grateful chime all around;
The grasshopper avoids the untainted air,
Nor in the midst of summer ventures there. Addison.
The women were of such an enormous stature, that we appeared as grasshoppers before them. Addison's Spectator.
GRASSHOPPER. See GRAZIER.
To GRASP. v. a. [graspere, Italian.]
1. To hold in the hand; to gripe.
O fool that I am, that thought I could grasp water and bind the wind. Sidney, b. ii.
In his right hand
Grasping ten thousand thunders, which he sent Before him, such as in their souls infix'd Plagues. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
Kings, by grasping more than they could hold,
First made their subjects, by oppression, bold. Denham.
Doom, as they please, my empire not to stand,
I'll grasp my sceptre with my dying hand. Dryd. Ind. Emp.
2. To seize; to catch at.
This grasping of the militia of the kingdom into their own hands, was desired the summer before. Clarendon.
To GRASP. v. n.
1. To catch; to endeavour to seize; to try at.
So endless and exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less. Swift.
2. To struggle; to strive; to grapple. Not now in use.
See, his face is black and full of blood;
His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasps
And tugs'd for life. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.
3. To gripe; to encroach.
Like a miser 'midst his store,
Who grasps and grasps till he can hold no more. Dryden.
GRASP. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The gripe or seizure of the hand.
Nor wanted in his grasp. Milton's Paradise Lost.
What seem'd both spear and shield. Milton's Paradise Lost.
This hand and sword have been acquainted well;
It should have come before into my grasps,
To kill the ravisher. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
The left arm is a little defaced, though one may see it held something in its grasp formerly. Addison on Italy.
2. Possession; hold.
I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole face that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich East to boot. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
3. Power of seizing.
Within the direful grasp
Of savage hunger, or of savage heat. Milton.
They looked upon it as their own, and had it even within their grasp. Clarendon, b. viii.
GRASP. n. f. [from grasp.] One that grasps; seizes, or catches at.
GRASS. n. f. [græx, Saxon.] The common herbage of the field on which cattle feed; an herb with long narrow leaves.
Ye are grown fat as the heifer at grass, and bellow as bells. Jer. l. ii.
The trade of beef for foreign exportation was prejudiced, and almost sunk; for the flesh being young, and only grass fed, was thin, light and moist, and not of a substance to endure the salt, or be preferred by it, for long voyages, or a slow consumption. Temple.
You'll be no more your former you;
But for a blooming nymph will pass,
Just fifteen, coming summer's grass. Swift.
GRASS OF PARNASSUS. n. f. [parnassia, Latin.]

GRA

- It hath a rose-shaped flower of five large leaves, and five small at the bottom fringed, of a greenish colour, and planted orbicularly: out of the flower-cup arises the point, which turns to an oval membranaceous fruit, having but one cell filled with seeds. This plant grows wild in most meadows, particularly in the North. It is called parnassia from mount Parnassus, where it was supposed to grow; and because the cattle feed on it, it obtained the name of grass, though the plant has no resemblance to the grass kind. A. Miller.
To GRASS. v. n. [from the noun.] To breed grass; to become pasture.
Land arable, driven, or worn to the proof,
With oats ye may sow it, the sooner to grass,
More soon to be pasture, to bring it to pals. Tull. Husband.
GRASS-PLAT. n. f. [grass and plat.] A small level covered with short grass.
Here on this grass-plat, in this very place,
Come and sport. Shakespeare's Tempest.
The part of your garden next your house should be a parterre for flowers, or grass-plats bordered with flowers. Temple.
They are much valued by our modern planters, to adorn their walks and grass-plats. Mortimer's Husbandry.
GRASS-POLY. A species of WILLOW-WORT, which see.
GRASSINESS. n. f. [from grass.] The state of abounding in grass.
GRASSY. adj. [from grass.] Covered with grass; abounding with grass.
Ne did he leave the mountains bare uncens,
Nor the rank grass fens delights untry'd. Spenser.
Rais'd of grass turf
Their table was, and mossy seats had round. Milt. P. Lost.
The most in fields, like herded beasts, lie down,
To dews obnoxious, on the grass floor. Dryd. An. Mir.
GRATE. n. f. [grates, Latin.]
1. A partition made with bars placed near to one another, or crossing each other: such as are in cloysters or prisons.
I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, and your couch-fellow, Nim; or else you had look'd through the grates, like a gemmy of baboons. Shakespeare.
Out at a little grate his eyes he cast
Upon those bordering hills, and open plain. Daniel's C. W.
A fan has on it a nursery of lively black-eyed vespas, who are endeavouring to creep out at the grates. Addison.
2. The range of bars within which fires are made.
My dear is of opinion that an old fashioned grate consumes coals, but gives no heat. Spectator, No. 30.
To GRATE. v. a. [gratter, French.]
1. To rub or wear any thing by the attrition of a rough body.
Thereat the fiend his gnashing teeth did grate. Fa. 2.
Blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated.
Shakefpeare's Truiss and Cressid.
Grinding his teeth and grating his great heart. Habb. Tel.
They have been partial in the gospel, culled and chosen out those softer and more gentle dictates which should less grate and disturb them. Decey of Pity.
Just resentment and hard usage coin'd
Th' unwilling word; and, grating as it is,
Take it, for it is thy due. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
This habit of writing and discouraging, wherein I unfortunately differ from almost the whole kingdom, and am apt to grate the ears of more than I could wish, was acquired during my apprenticeship in London. Swift.
3. To form a sound by collision of asperities or hard bodies.
The grating flock of wrathful iron arms. Shakef. R. II.
On a sudden open fly,
With impetuous recoil and jarring sounds,
Th' infernal doors, and on their hinges grate
Harsh thunder, that the lowest bottom shook Of Erebus. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
To GRATE. v. n.
1. To rub hard so as to injure or offend; to offend, as by oppression or importunity.
Wherein have you been galled by the king?
What peer hath been suborn'd to grate on you,
That you should feel this lawless bloody book
Of forg'd rebellion with a seal divine? Shakef. Henry IV.
I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, or else you had looked through the grates. Shakespeare.
Paradoxing is of great use; but the faculty must be to temderly managed as not to grate upon the truth and reason of things. L'Estrange's Fables.
This grated harder upon, and raised greater tumults and boilings in the hearts of men, than the seeming unreasonableness of former articles. South's Sermons.
I never

GRA

- I never heard him make the least complaint, in a case that would have grated sorely on some men's patience, and have filled their lives with discontent. Locke.
2. To make a harsh noise, as that of a rough body drawn over another.
We are not so nice as to cast away a sharp knife, because the edge of it may sometimes grate. Hesler, b. v. f. 36.
GRATEFUL. adj. [gratus, Latin.]
1. Having a due sense of benefits; willing to acknowledge and to repay benefits.
A grateful mind
By owing owes not, but still pays. Milton.
Years of service past,
From grateful souls exact reward at last. Dryden's Fables.
2. Pleading; acceptable; delightful; delicious.
Whatever is ingrate at first, is made grateful by custom;
but whatsoever is too pleasing at first, groweth quickly to satiate. Bacon's Natural History.
Now golden fruits on loaded branches shine,
And grateful clusters swell with floods of wine. Pope.
GRATEFULLY. adv. [from grateful.]
1. With willingness to acknowledge and repay benefits; with due sense of obligation.
He, as new wak'd, thus gratefully reply'd. Milton.
Enough remains for household charge beside,
His wife and tender children to sustain,
And gratefully to feed his dumb deaving train. Dryd. Virg.
In Cyprus long by men and gods obey'd,
The lovers toll the gratefully repaid. Graville.
2. In a pleasing manner.
Study detains the mind by the perpetual occurrence of something new, which may gratefully strike the imagination. Watts.
GRATEFULNESS. n. f. [from grateful.]
1. Gratitude; duty to benefactors. Now obsolete.
A Lacedaemon knight, having sometime served him with more gratefulness than good courage defended him. Sidney.
Blessings beforehand, ties of gratefulness,
The found of glory ringing in our ears. Herbert.
2. Quality of being acceptable; pleasantness.
GRATER. n. f. [grator, Fr. from grate.] A kind of coarse file with which soft bodies are rubbed to powder.
GRATIFICATION. n. f. [gratificatio, Latin.]
1. The act of pleasing.
They are incapable of any design above the present grati- fication of their palates. South's Sermons.
2. Pleasure; delight.
How hardly is his will brought to change all its desires and aversions, and to renounce those gratifications in which he has been long us'd to place his happiness! Rogers's Sermons.
3. Reward; recompence. A low word.
To GRATIFY. v. a. [gratifico, Latin.]
1. To indulge; to please by compliance.
You steer between the country and the court,
Nor gratify, what'er the great desire,
Nor grudging give what publick needs require. Dryden.
2. To delight; to please.
But pride flood ready to prevent the blow;
For who would die to gratify a foe? Dryden's Fables.
The captive generals to his car are ty'd;
The joyful citizens tumultuous tide
Echoing his glory, gratify his pride. Prior.
A palled appetite is humorous, and must be gratified with saucers rather than food. Talbot, No. 54.
At once they gratify their scent and taste,
While frequent cups prolong the rich repast. Pope.
A thousand little impertinencies are very gratifying to curiosity, though not improving to the understanding. Addison.
3. To requite with a gratification: as, I'll gratify you for this trouble.
GRATINGLY. adv. [from grate.] Harshly; offensively.
GRATIS. adv. [Latin.] For nothing; without a recompence.
The people cry you mock'd them; and, of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd. Shakespeare.
They told themselves; but thou, like a kind fellow, gav'st thyself away gratis, and I thank thee for thee. Shakespeare.
Kindred are no welcome clients, where relation gives them a title to have advice gratis. L'Estrange.
I scorn'd to take my degree at Utrecht or Leyden, though offer'd it gratis by those universities. Arbuthnot's John Bull.
GRATITUDE. n. f. [gratitudo, low Latin.]
1. Duty to benefactors.
Forbid
That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude
Tow'rd her deserving children is enroll'd,
Should now eat up her own! Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
2. Desire to return benefits.
The debt immensities of endless gratitude. Milton.
Gratitude is properly a virtue, disposing the mind to an inward sense and an outward acknowledgment of a benefit received, together with a readiness to return the same, or the like. South's Sermons.

GRA

- GRATUITOUS. adj. [gratuitus, Latin; gratuit, Fr.]
1. Voluntary; granted without claim or merit.
We mistake the gratuitous blessings of heaven for the fruits of our own industry. L'Estrange.
2. Asserted without proof.
The second motive they had to introduce this gratuitous
declination of atoms, the same poet gives us. Rey.
GRATUITOUSLY. adv. [from gratuitous.]
1. Without claim or merit.
2. Without proof.
I would know whence came this obliquity of direction, which they gratuitously tack to matter: this is to ascribe will and choice to these particles. Chene's Phil. Prin.
GRATUITY. n. f. [gratuité, Fr. from gratuitous.] A present or acknowledgment; a free gift.
They might have pretended to comply with Ulysses, and dismissed him with a small gratuity. Notes on the Odyssey.
He us'd every year to present us with his almanack, upon the score of some little gratuity we gave him. Swift.
To GRATULATE. v. a. [gratulor, Latin.]
1. To congratulate; to salute with declarations of joy.
To gratulate the good Andronicus,
And gratulate his safe return to Rome.
The people will accept whom he admires, Shakef. Tit. Andr.
Whither away to fast?
—No farther than the Tower.
To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
Since nature could behold so dire a crime,
I gratulate at least my native clime,
That such a land, which such a monster bore,
So far is distant from our Thracian shore. Dryden's Fables.
2. To declare joy for.
Yet give thy jealous subjects leave to doubt,
Who this thy 'scape from rumour gratulate,
No less than if from peril; and devout,
Do beg thy care unto thy after state. Ben. Jonson's Epigrams.
GRATULATION. n. f. [from gratula'tis, Latin.] Salutations made by expressing joy; expression of joy.
They are the first gratulations wherewith our Lord and Saviour was joyfully received at his entrance into the world, by such as in their hearts, arms, and bowels embraced him. Hesler.
The earth
Gave signs of gratulation, and each hill. Psalm. Par. Lost.
Your enjoyments, according to the standard of a Christian duty, are so complicated that they require no addition: I shall turn my wishes into gratulations, and, congratulating their ful-ness, only with their continuance. South.
GRATULATORY. adj. [from gratulate.] Congratulatory, expressing congratulation.
GRAVE. a final syllable in the names of places, is from the Saxon græp, a grove or cave. Giles's Camden.
GRAVE. n. f. [græp, Saxon.] The place in the ground in which the dead are repositied.
Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his spright,
In the church-way paths to glide. Shakespeare.
Thou wilt not leave me in the loathsome grave. Milton.
To walk upon the graves of our dead masters,
Is our own security. Denham's Sophy.
A flood of waters would overwhelm all those fragments which the earth broke into, and bury in one common grave
all mankind, and all the inhabitants of the earth. Burnet.
GRAVE-CLOATHS. n. f. [grave and cloaths.] The drefs of the dead.
But of such subtle substance and unbound,
That like a ghost he seem'd, whose grave-cloaths were unbound. Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. xi.
And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave-cloaths. Jo. xi. 44.
GRAVE-STONE. n. f. [grave and stone.] The stone that is laid over the grave; the monumental stone.
I'mon, presently prepare thy grave;
Lye where the light foam of the sea may beat Thy grave-stone daily. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
To GRAVE. v. a. preter. graved; part. pass. graven. [graver,
French; græp.]
1. To inculp; to carve a figure or inscription in any hard substance.
Cornice with bossy sculptures graven. Milton.
Such later vows, oaths, or leagues can never blot out those former gravings or characters, which by just and lawful oaths were made upon their souls. King Charles.
Thy sum of duty let two words contain;
O! may thy graves in thy heart remain,
Be humble and be just. Prior.
2. To carve or form.
What profiteth the graven image, that the maker thereof hath graven it? Heb. ii. 18.
3. To copy paintings upon wood or metal, in order to be impressed on paper. 10 P.

GRA

The graves can and ought to imitate the bodies of the colours by the degrees of the lights and shadows: 'tis impossible to give much strength to what they grave, after the works of the schools, without imitating in some sort the colour of the objects.

4. [From grave.] To entomb. Not in use.

Do you damn others, and let this damn you?

5. To clean, caulk, and sheath a ship.

To GRAVE, v. n. To write or delineate on hard substances.

Thou shalt make a plate of pure gold, and grave upon it.

GRAVE, adj. [grave, French; gravis, Latin.]

1. Solemn; serious; sober; not gay; not light or trifling.

To th' more mature,

A glass that fear'd them; and to the grave,

A child that guided dotards.

We should have else desir'd

Your good advice, which still hath been both grave

And prosperous, in this day's council.

That grave awfulness, as in your best breed of maffive, or elegancy and prettiness, as in your lesser dogs, are modes of beauty.

Even the grave and serious characters are distinguished by their several sorts of gravity.

Youth on silent wings is flown;

Graver years come rolling on.

To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;

And to be grave, exceeds all pow'r of face.

Folly-painting humours, grave himself,

Of weight; not futile; credible. Little used.

The Roman state was of all others the most celebrated for their virtue, as the graves of their own writers, and of strangers, do bear them witness.

Not flowy; not tawdry; as, a grave suit of cloaths.

Not sharp of sound; not acute.

Accent, in the Greek names and usage, seems to have regarded the tone of the voice; the acute accent raising the voice, in some certain syllables, to a higher, i. e. more acute pitch or tone, and the grave depressing it lower, and both having some emphasis, i. e. more vigorous pronunciation.

vy of hearing is an essential part of justice.

Great Cato there, for gravity renown'd.

The emperors often jested on their rivals or predecessors, but their mints still maintained their gravity.

GRA'VY, n. f. The ferous juice that runs from flesh not much dried by the fire.

They usually boil and roast their meat until it falls almost off from the bones; but we love it half raw, with the blood trickling down from it, delicately terming it the gravity, which in truth looks more like an ichorous or raw bloody matter.

There may be a stronger broth made of vegetables than of any gravity.

GRAY, adj. [grey, Saxon; gray, Danish; grau, Dutch.]

1. White with a mixture of black.

They left me then, when the gray headed even,

Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed,

Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phebus' wain.

These gray and dun colours may be also produced by mixing whites and blacks, and by consequence differ from perfect whites, not in species of colours, but only in degree of lumi-nousness.

2. White or hoary with old age.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray; as is seen in men, though some earlier and some later; in horses, that are dappled and turn white; in old squirrels that turn grilly, and many others.

Thou hast neither forsaken me now I am become gray headed, nor suffered me to forsake thee in the late days of temptation.

Gray headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd.

Assemble.

The restoration of gray hairs to juvenility, and renewing the exhausted marrow, may be effected.

Gray headed infant! and in vain grown old!

Art thou to learn that in another's gold

Lie charms resistless?

We most of us are grown gray headed in our dear master's service.

Her gray hair'd synods damning books unread,

And Bacon trembling for his brazen head.

3. Dark like the opening or close of day; of the colour of albes.

Our women's names are more gracious than their Castilia, that is, gray eyed.

The gray ey'd morn smiles on the frowning night,

Chequ'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light.

I'll fay you gray is not the morning's eye;

'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow.

GRENAD. n. f. [from ponum granatum, Latin.] A little hollow globe or ball of iron, or other metal, about two inches and a half in diameter, which, being filled with fine powder, is set on fire by means of a small fuse fastened to the touch-hole as soon as it is kindled, the case flies into many shatters, much to the damage of all that stand near. These grenades serve to fire close and narrow passages, and are often thrown with the hand among the soldiers to disorder their ranks, more especially in those posts where they stand thickest; as in trenches, redoubts, and lodgments. Harr.

GRENADIER. n. f. [grenadier, Fr. from grenade.] A tall foot-soldier, of whom there is one company in every regiment:
such men being employed to throw grenades.
Peace allays the shepherd's fear
Of wearing cap of grenadier. Gay's Pastoral.
GRENADO. n. f. See GRENAD.

Yet to express a Scot, to play that prize,
Not all those mouth grenades can suffice. Cleaveland.

GRIEF. n. f. [from grieve; griff, Welsh, probably from the English.]
1. Sorrow; trouble for something past.
I will instruct my sorrows to be proud;
For grief is proud, and makes his owner stout. Shakespeare.
Wringing of the hands, knocking the breast, or wailing one's self unborn, are but the ceremonies of sorrow, the pomp and ostentation of an effeminate grief, which speak not so much the greatness of the misery as the smallness of the mind. South's Sermon.
The mother was so afflicted at the loss of a fine boy, who was her only son, that she died for grief of it. Addison's Spectator.
2. Grievance; harm. [Grief, French.]
Be factious for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this foot of mine as far
As who goes farthest. Shakespeare.
The king hath sent to know
The nature of your grief, and whereupon
You conjure from the breast of civil peace
Such bold hostility? Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.
3. Pain; disease.
GRIEVANCE. n. f. [from grief.]
1. A state of uneasiness. Out of use.
2. The cause of uneasiness. Used of such causes as are the effects of human conduct.
What remedy can be found against grievances, but to bring religion into countenance, and encourage those who, from the hope of future reward, and dread of future punishment, will be moved to justice and integrity? Swift.
To GRIEVE. v. a. [greuer, French; griever, Flemish; grew, vis, Latin.] To afflict; to hurt.
For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. Le iii. 37.
Forty years long was I grieved with this generation. Ezekiel.
It repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. Gen. vi. 6.
Grieved at the thought, he vow'd his whole endeavour
Should be to close those breaches. Rasselas's Ambitious Step.
To GRIEVE. v. n. To be in pain for something past; to mourn; to sorrow, as for the death of friends.
Do not you grieve at this; I shall be sent for in private to him: look you, he must seem thus to the world. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

With equal mind what happens let us bear;
Nor joy nor grieve too much for things beyond our care. Dryden's Fables.
GRIEVINGLY. adv. [from grieve.] In sorrow; sorrowfully.

Grievously, I think,
The peace between the French and us not values
The cost that did conclude it. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
GRIEVOUS. adj. [gravis, Latin; or from To grieve.]

1. Afflictive; painful; hard to be born.
To the flesh, as the apostle himself granteth, all affliction is naturally grievous. Hooker, b. v. f. 48.
Correction is grievous unto him that forsaketh the way, and he that hateth reproof shall die. Prov. xv. 10.

2. Such as causes sorrow.
To own a great but grievous truth, though they may quicken and sharpen the invention, they corrupt the temper. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

3. Expressing a great degree of uneasiness.
He durst not disobey, but sent grievous complaints to the parliament of the usage he was forced to submit to. Clarendon.

4. Atrocious; heavy.
And grievously hath Caesar answer'd it. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
5. Sometimes used adverbially in low language.
He cannot come, my lord; he's grievous sick. Shakespeare.

GRIEVOUSLY. adv. [from grievous.]
1. Painfully; with pain.
Wide was the wound, and a large lukewarm flood,
Red as the rose, thence gush'd grievously. Fairy Queen.

2. With discontent; with ill will.
Gritus, perceiving how grievously the matter was taken, with the danger he was in, began to doubt. Kneller.

3. Calamitously; miserably.
I see how a number of souls are, for want of right information in this point, oftentimes grievously vexed. Hooker, b. v.
4. Vexatiously; to a great degree of uneasiness.
Houses built in plains are apt to be grievously annoyed with mire and dirt. Ray on the Creation.

GRIEVOUSNESS. n. f. [from grievous.] Sorrow; pain; calamity.
They fled from the sword, from the drawn sword and from the bent bow, and from the grievousness of war. Is. xxi. 15.

GRIFFIN. n. f. [This should rather be written griffin, or gry-ffon.] f. fion, gryps, γρυψ; but it is generally written griffin. A fabled animal, said to be generated between the lion and eagle, and to have the head and paws of the lion, and the wings of the eagle.
Of all bearing among these winged creatures, the griffin is the most ancient. Peacocks on Blazoning.
Aristeus, a poet of Proconesus, affirmed, that near the one-eyed nations griffins defended the mines of gold. Brown.

GRIG. n. f. [gricke, Bavarian, a little duck.]
1. It seems originally to have signified any thing below the natural size.
2. A small eel.
3. A merry creature. [Supposed from Greek; graculus sylvius,
Latin.]

Hard is her heart as flint or stone,
She laughs to see me pale;
And merry as a grig is grown,
And brisk as bottle-ale. Swift.

To GRILL. v. n. [grille, a grate, French.] To broil on a grate or gridiron.
GRILLADE. n. f. [from grill.] Any thing broiled on the gridiron.

To GRILLY. v. a. [from grill.] This word signifies, as it seems, to harrafs; to hurt: as we now say, to rust a man, for to teaze him.

For while we wrangle here and jar,
We're grilled all at I temple-bar. Hudibras, p. iii.
GRIM. adj. [gymma, Saxon.]

1. Having a countenance of terror; horrible; hideous; frightful.
The innocent prey in haste he does forfake,
Which quit from death, yet quakes in every limb,
With change of fear to see the lion look to grim. F. Queen.
Thou halt a grim appearance, and thy face
Bears a command in't. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Their dear causes
Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm Excite the mortified man. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
What if the breath that kindled those grim fires,
Awak'd, should blow them into sevenfold rage? Milton.

Expert to turn the sway
Of battle, open when and where to close
The ridges of grim war. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
He that dares to die

May laugh at the grim face of law and scorn,
The cruel wrinkle of a tyrant brow.
Their thwarting bolts would darken all our plains,
Doubling the native horror of the war,
And making death more grim. Addison's Cato.

2. Ugly; ill-looking.
Grim visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkl'd front. Shakespeare.
Venus was like her mother; for her father is but grim. Shakespeare.

GRIMACE. n. f. [French, from grim.]
1. A distortion of the countenance from habit, affectation, or insolence.
He had not spar'd to shew his piques,
Against th' haranguer of leering faces,
With smart remarks of leering faces; Hudibras, p. iii.
And annotations of grimaces.
The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very easy rate; and by a few demure looks and affected whines, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces, and such other little arts of dissimulation, cunning men will do wonders. South's Sermons.

The buffoon ape, with grimaces and gambols, carried it from the whole field. L'Estrange, Fable 116.
The French nation is addicted to grimace. Spectator.

2. Air of affectation.
Vice in a vizard, to avoid grimace,
Allows all freedom, but to see the face. Granville.

GRIMALKIN. n. f. [grit, French, grey, and malin, or little Moll.]
1. Grey little woman; the name of an old cat.
So, poets sing,
Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn
An everlasting foe, with watchful eye
Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice
Sure ruin. Phillips.

GRIME. n. f. [from grim.] Dirt deeply insinuated; fullying blackness not easily cleansed.
Swart, like my those, but her face nothing so clean kept;
for why? she sweats: a man may go over faces in the grime of it. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.
Collow is the word by which they denote black grime of burnt coals or wood. Woodward on Taffels.

To GRIME. v. a. [from the noun.] To dirt; to fully deeply.
My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shakespeare.

GRIMLY. adv. [from grim.]
1. Horribly; hideously; terribly.
We've landed in ill time: the skies look grimly,
And threaten present blusters. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid;
There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beauteous prize,
Nor envy'd Jove his sunshine and his skies. Addison's Cato.

2. Sourly; fullenly.
The augurs
Say they know not; they cannot tell; look grimly,
And dare not speak their knowledge. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.

GRIMNESS. n. f. [from grim.] Horror; frightfulness of natural face.
To GRIN. v. n. [grinnan, Saxon; grimen, grinden, Dutch, undoubtedly of the same origin with To grind, as we now say to grind the teeth; grimer, French.]

1. To set the teeth together and withdraw the lips.
Small curs are not regarded when they grin;
But great men tremble when the lion roars. Shakespeare's H. VI.
Death, death! oh, amiable, lovely death!
Come grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st. Shakespeare.
What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,
For one to trust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot away? Shakespeare.
It was no unpleasant entertainment to me to see the various methods with which they have attacked me; some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning, and only shewing their teeth. Stirlingfleet.

A lion's hide he wears;
About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin;
The teeth and gaping jaws feverly grin. Dryden's Æn.
They neither could defend, nor can pursue;
But grin d their teeth, and cast a helpless view. Dryden.
Madness, we fancy, gave an ill-tim'd birth
To grinning laughter and to frantic mirth. Prior.

2. To fix the teeth as in anguish.
I like not such grinning honours as Sir Walter hath: give me life, which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlook'd for, and there's an end. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

GRIN. n. f. [from the verb.] The act of closing the teeth and shewing them.
He laughs at him: in's face too.
—O you mistake him; 'twas an humble grin,
The lawning joy of courtiers and of dogs. Dryden.
The muscles were so drawn together on each side of his face, that he shewed twenty teeth at a grin. Addison's Spectator.
Deists are effectually beaten in all their combats at the weapons of men, that is, reason and argument; and they would now attack our religion with the talents of a vile animal, that is, grin and grinace. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

GRIN. n. f. [gryn, grine, Saxon.] A snare; a trap.
Like

GRI

Like a bird that hastes to his grin,
Not knowing the peril. Clauca.
The grin shall take him by the heel, and the robber shall prevail against him. Job xviii. 9.
To GRIND. v. a. preter. I ground; part. pass. ground. [gun- ban, ȝeȝunben, ground, Saxon.]
1. To reduce any thing to powder by friction; to comminute by attrition.
And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. Mat.
He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must needs tarry the grinding. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
What relation or affinity is there between a minute body and cogitation, any more than the greatest? Is a small drop of rain any wiser than the ocean? Or do we grind inanimate corn into living and rational meal? Bentley's Sermons.
2. To sharpen or smooth by rubbing on something hard.
Meeting with time, slack thing, said I,
Thy fith is dull; whet it, for shame:
No marvel, fir, he did reply,
If it at length deserve some blame;
But where one man would have me grind it,
Twenty for one too sharp do find it. Herbert.
Against a stump his tusk the monster grinds,
And in the sharpen'd edge new vigour finds. Dryd. Fables.
That the stomach in animals grinds the substances which it receives, is evident from the dissection of animals, which have swallowed metals, which have been found polished on the side next the stomach. Arbutnot on Aliments.
3. To rub one against another.
So up he let him rise; who with grim lock,
And countenance stern, upstanding, gan to grind
His grated teeth for great disdain. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Harsh founts, as of a faw when it is sharpened, and grinding of one stone against another, make a shivering or horror in the body, and let the teeth on edge. Bacon's Nat. History.
4. To harass; to oppress.
Some merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessities, may not grind them so as shall always keep them in poverty. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Another way the Spaniards have taken to grind the Neapolitans, and yet to take off the odium from themselves. Addis.
To GRIND. v. n. To perform the act of grinding; to move a mill.
Fetter'd they fend thee
Into the common prison, there to grind
Among the slaves and allies. Milton's Agonistes.
2. To be moved as in the act of grinding.
Shrinking finews start,
And smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws. Rowe.
GRINDER. n. f. [from grind.]
1. One that grinds; one that works in a mill.
2. The instrument of grinding.
His heart a solid rock, to fear unknown,
And harder than the grinder's nether stone. Sandys.
Now exhort
Thy hands to exercise the pointed steel
On the hard rock, and give a wheely form
To the expected grinder. Phillips.
3. [Grind-tooth.] The back teeth; the double teeth.
The teeth are in men of three kinds: sharp, as the foreteeth; broad, as the back-teeth, which we call the molar-teeth, or grinders; and pointed teeth, or canine, which are between both. Bacon's Natural History.
He the raging lioness confounds,
The roaring lion with his javelin wounds;
Scatters their whelps, their grinders breaks; so they
With the old hunter starve for want of prey. Sandys.
The jaw-teeth or grinders, in Latin molares, are made flat and broad a-top, and withal somewhat uneven and rugged, that, by their knobs and little cavities, they may the better retain, grind and commix the aliments. Ray on the Creation.
Nature is at a great deal of labour to transmute vegetable into animal substances; therefore herb-eating animals, which don't ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbut.
4. The teeth, in irony or contempt.
One, who at sight of supper, open'd wide
His jaws before, and whetted grinders try'd. Dryd. Juven.
Both he brought;
He mouth'd them, and betwixt his grinders caught. Dryden.
GRINDLESTONE. n. f. [from grind and stone.] The stone
GRINDSTONE. } on which edged instruments are sharpened.
Such a light and metall'd dance
Saw you never yet in France;
And by the lead-men, for the nonce,
That turn round like grindstones,
Which they dig out fro' the dells,
For their bairns bread, wives and fells. Ben. Johnson.
Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coulters, and to whet their natural faculties. Hammond on Fundamentals.
Smiths that make hinges brighten them, yet seldom file

GRINNER. n. f. [from grin.] He that grins.
The frightful grimmer
Be the winner. Addison's Spectator, No. 170.
GRINNINGLY. adv. [from grin.] With a grinning laugh.
GRIP. n. f. A small ditch.
To GRIFE. v. a. [grifpan, Gothick; ȝripan, Saxon; gripen,
Dutch; gripp, Scottish.]
1. To hold with the fingers closed; to grasp; to press with the fingers.
He that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist,
Whilst he that hears makes fearful action
With wrinkl'd brows. Shakespeare's King John.
He seiz'd the shining bough with gripping hold,
And rent away with ease the ling'ring gold. Dryden's En.
2. [Gripper, French.] To catch eagerly; to seize.
A wondrous way it for this lady wrought,
From lion's claws to pluck the griped prey. Fairy Queen.
You took occasion to be quickly woo'd
To gripe the gen'rall sway into your hands. Shakes. Hen. IV.
3. To close; to clutch.
Unlucky Welfild! thy unfeeling master,
The more thou ticklest, gripes his hand the faster. Pope.
4. To pinch; to press; to squeeze.
And first the dame came rushing through the wood;
And next the famish'd hounds that fought their food,
And grip'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws in blood. Dryden's Fables.
To GRIFE. v. n. To pinch the belly; to give the colic.
Thus full of counsel to the den he went,
Grip'd all the way, and longing for a vent. Dryden.
And form, say I, as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no gripe. Swift.
3. GRIST to Mill, is profit; gain.
The computation of degrees, in all matrimonial causes, is wont to be made according to the rules of that law, because it brings gripe to the mill. Asylle's Parergon.
GRISTLE. n. f. [ȝurde, Saxon.] A cartilage; a part of the body next in hardness to a bone.
No living creatures, that have shells very hard, as cyffers, crabs, lobsters, and especially the tortoise, have no bones within them, but only little gristles. Bacon's Nat. History.
Left the asperity or hardness of these cartilages should hurt the oesophagus or gullet, which is tender and of a skinny substance, or hinder the swallowing of our meat, therefore these annular gristles are not made round, or intire circles; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way to the dilatation of the gullet. Ray on the Creation.
GRISTLY. adj. [from gristle.] Cartilaginous; made of gristle.
At last they spit out pieces of their lungs; it may be small gristly bits, that are eaten off from the lung-pipes. Harvey.
She has made the back-bone of several vertebrae, as being more fit to bend, more tough, and less in danger of breaking, than if they were all one intire bone without these gristly junctures. Mor's Mediate against Absolm.
Fins are made of gristly spokes, or rays connected by membranes; so that they may be contracted or extended like womens fans. Ray on the Creation.
They have a louder and stronger note than other birds of the same bigness, which have only a gristly windpipe. Grew.
Each pipe, distinguish'd by its gristly rings,
To cherish life aerial pasture brings. Blackmore's Creation.
GRIT. n. f. [ȝrytca, grecor, Saxon.]
1. The coarse part of meal.
2. Oats hulked, or coarsely ground.
3. Sand; rough hard particles.
Silexian bole, crackling a little betwixt the teeth, yet without the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as Castile soap. Grew's Musaeum.
The sturdy pear-tree here
Will rise luxuriant, and with toughest root
Pierce the obstructing griet and relive marie. Phillips.
4. Grits are fossils found in minute masses, forming together a kind of powder; the several particles of which are of no de-terminate shape, but seem the rudely broken fragments of larger masses; not to be dissolved or diffused by water, but retaining their figure, and not cohering into a mass. They are opaque, and in many species fermenting with acids, and often fouled with heterogeneous matters. One sort is a fine, dull looking, grey grit, which, if wetted with salt-water into mortar or paste, dries almost immediately, and coalesces into a hard stony mass, such as is not easily afterwards diffused by

The king of terrors, raging in thy race. Dryd. Innocence.
Thus the griffy spectre spoke again.
Close by each other laid, they press'd the ground,
Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a griffy wound. Dryden's Fables.
So rushes on his foe the griffy bear. Addison.
GRIST. n. f. [ȝurde, Saxon.]
1. Corn to be ground.
Get griffy to the mill to have plenty in store,
Left miller lack water. Tusser's Husbandry.
A mighty trade this lusty miller drove;
Much griffy from Cambridge by his lot did fall,
And all the corn they us'd at Scholars-hall. Miller of Tramp.

Those grizzled locks, which nature did provide
In plenteous growth, their asies cars to hide. Dryd. Juven.
GRIZZLY. adj. [from gris, gray, French.] Somewhat gray.
Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray and white; as is seen in men, though some earlier, some later; in horses that are dappled, and turn white;
and in old squirrels, that turn grizzly. Bacon's Nat. History.
To GROAN. v. n. [ȝnanan, Saxon; groenen, Dutch.] To breathe with a hoarse noise, as in pain or agony.
Many an heir
Of these fair edifices, for my wars,
Have I heard groan and drop. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Men groan from out of the city, and the soul of the wounded crieth out. Job xxiv. 12.
Repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit. Wisd. v. 3.
So shall the world go on,

On the blazing pile his parent lays
Or a lov'd brother groan'd his life away. Pope's Odyssey.
GROAN. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Breath expired with noise and difficulty.
Alas poor country,
Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd! Shakespeare's Macbeth.
I led to slaughter, and to slaughter leave;
And ev'n from hence their dying groans receive. Dryden.
2. Any hoarse dead sound.
Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,
Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. Shakespeare's King Lear.
GROANFUL. adj. [from groan and full.] Sad; agonizing.
Adown he fell it with so puissant wreat,
That back again it did aloft rebound,
And gave against his mother earth a groanful found. F. Rus.
GROAT. n. f. [ȝroat, Dutch; groſſo, Italian.]
1. A piece valued at four pence.
2. A proverbial name for a small sum.
My mother was wont
To call them woollen vassals, things created
To buy and sell with groats. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
I dare lay a groat,
A tertian ague is at least your lot. Dryden's Fables.
Imagine a person of quality prevailed on to marry a woman much his inferior, and without a groat to her for-

3. GROATS. Oats that have the hulls taken off. Answorib.
GROCER. n. f. [This should be written groſſer, from groſſi, a large quantity; a grocer originally being one who dealt by wholesale; or from groſſus, a fig, which their present state seems to favour.]
A grocer is a man who buys and sells tea, sugar and plumbs and spices for gain. Wat's Logic.
But still the offspring of your brain shall prove
The grocer's care, and brave the rage of Jove. Garth.
GROCERY. n. f. [from grocer.] Grocers ware, such as tea;
sugar; raisins; spice.
His troops, being now in a country where they were not expected, met with many cart-loads of wine, grocery, and tobacco. Clarendon, b. viii.

Certes they're neatly cloth'd: I of this mind am,
Your only wearing is your gregeram. Donne.
Natolia affords great store of chamelots and gramms. Sandys.
Some men will say this habit of John's was neither of camel's skin nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, gramm, or the like. Brown's Vul. Err.
The natural sweetness and innocence of her behaviour shot me through and through, and did more execution upon me in gramm than the greatest beauty in town had ever done in brocade. Addison's Spectator.

Plain goody would no longer down;
I was madam in her gramm gown. Swift.
GROIN. n. f. [Of uncertain derivation.] The part next the thigh.

The fatal dart arrives,
And through the border of his buckler drives;
Pierc'd through and pierc'd his groin; the deadly wound
Cast from his chariot, roll'd him on the ground. Dryden.
GRO'WELL. n. f. [litiospermum, Latin.] Gromill or gray-mill. A plant.
The cup of the flower consists of one leaf, cut into five long narrow segments: the flower, which is, for the most part, small, consists of one leaf, is funnel-shaped, and open at the top: the point is incompass'd by four embryo's, which become to many roundish hard polished seeds. Miller.

Which brings a taper to the outward room. Donne.
In the time of Edward VI. lived Sternhold, whom king Henry his father, a little before, had made groom of his chamber, for turning of certain of David's psalms into verse.
Peachment on Poetry.

Would'st thou be touch'd
By the presuming hands of faucy grooms? Dryd. Den Schaff.
Amid' the fold he rages, nor the sheep
Their shepherds, nor the grooms their bulls can keep. Dryd.
2. A young man.
I presume for to intreat this groom,
And sily maid, from danger to redeem. Fairfax, b. ii.

3. A man newly married.
By this the brides are wak'd, their grooms are dress'd;
All Rhodes is humm'd to the nuptial feast. Dryden.
GROOVE. n. f. [from grave.]
1. A deep cavern, or hollow in mines.
He might, to avoid idleness, work in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which at that time was little esteemed. Boyle.

2. A channel or hollow cut with a tool.
The screw-plate is a kind of steel well tempered, with several holes in it, each less than other; and in those holes are threads grooved inwards, into which grooves fit the respective taps that belong to them. Morand's Mach. Exer.

To GROOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut hollow.
The plates of iron fastened at the bottom of the box preserved the balance while it fell, and every joint of it was well grooved. Galliver's Travels.

To GROPE. v. n. [gropen, Saxon.] To feel where one cannot see.

My sea-gown scarf about me, in the dark Grop'd I, to find out them. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
We grope for the wall like the blind, and we grope as if we had no eyes. Jf. lix. 10.

They meet with darkness in the clearest light;
And grope at noon, as if involv'd with night. Sandys.
A boy was groping for eels, and laid his hand upon a snake. L'Estrange, Fable 131.

This, no doubt, is better for men than that they should in the dark grope after knowledge; as St. Paul tells us all nations did after God. Locke.

He heard us in our course,
And with his out-stretch'd arms around him grop'd. Addison.
O truth divine! enlighten'd by thy ray,
I grop, and guess no more, but see my way. Arbutnot.

To GROPE. v. a. To search by feeling in the dark; to feel without being able to see.

How vigilant to grope mens thoughts, and to pick out somewhat whereof they might complain. Hayward.
They have left our endeavours to grope them out by twilight, and by darkness almost to discover that, whose existence is evidenced by light. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

But Strephon, cautious, never meant
The bottom of the pan to grope. Swift.
GRO'PER. n. f. [from grope.] One that searches in the dark.

in sacraments, the church of Rome hath very foul and gross corruptions. Hobbes, b. iv.

3. Intellectually coarse; palpable; impure; unrefined.
To all sense 'tis gross
You love my son: invention is athwart,
Against the proclamation of thy passion;
To say thou do'st not. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.
Examples gross as earth exhort me. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Like gross terms,
The prince will in the perfectness of time
Cast off his followers. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.
Belial came last, than whom a spirit more lewd
Fell not from heaven, or more gross to love
Vice for itself. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
Is not religion too perfectly good in itself, above all, in its Author, that, without the *gross*est sensuality, we cannot but admire it. Spratt's Sermon.

It is a gross mistake of some men, to think that our wants only and imperfections do naturally induce us to be beneficient. Smalridge's Sermon.

4. Inelegant; disproportionate in bulk.
The sun's oppressive ray the roscat bloom
Of beauty blasting, gives the gloomy hue, Thomson's Summer.
And feature gross.
5. Thick; not refined; not pure.
It is manifest, that when the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object is in the *gross*er, things shew great; but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the *gross*er medium, and the object in the finer. Bacon's Natural History.

Of elements,
The *gross*er feeds the purer; earth the sea,
Earth and the sea feed air. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
Light fumes are merry, *gross*er fumes are sad;
Both are the reasonable soul run mad. Dryden's Fables.
Or suck the milks in *gross*er air below,
Or dip their pinions in the painted bow. Pope.

of the question with perspicuity and justice, than others by talking of it in gross confusion for whole hours together. Watts.

7. Coarse; rough; opposite to delicate.
Fine and delicate sculptures are helped with nearness, and gross with distance. Watson's Architecture.

8. Thick; fat; bulky.
GROSS. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The main body; the main force.
The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste
The deep-cut keels upon the sands might run;
Or, if with caution leisurely were past,
Their numerous gross might charge us one by one. Dryden.
Several casuists are of opinion, that, in a battle, you should discharge upon the gross of the enemy, without levelling your piece at any particular person. Addison's Freethinker.

The gross of the people can have no other prospect in changes and revolutions than of publick blessings. Addison.
2. The bulk; the whole not divided into its several parts.
Certain general inducements are used to make saleable your cause in gross. Hobbes, Preface.

There was an opinion in gross that the soul was immortal. Abbot's Description of the World.

Remember, son,
You are a general: other wars require you;
For see the Saxon gross begins to move. Dryden's K. Arthur.
Notwithstanding the decay and loss of sundry trades and manufactures, yet, in the gross, we ship off now one third part more of the manufactures, as also lead and tin, than we did twenty years past. Child's Discourse on Trade.

3. Not individual, but a body together.
He hath ribbons of all the colours i' th' rainbow; they come to him by the gross. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

I cannot instantly raise up the gross
Of full three thousand ducats. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

of the found be greater. Bacon's Natural History.

5. The number of twelve dozen. [Gross, French.]
It is made up only of that simple idea of an unite repeated; and repetitions of this kind, joined together, make those distinct simple modes of a dozen, a gross, and a million. Locke.

GROSSLY. adv. [from gross.]
1. Bulkily; in bulky parts; coarsely: as, this matter is grossly pulverized. Hobbes, b. iv. f. 12.

2. Without subtilty; without art; without delicacy; without refinement; coarsely; palpably.
Such kind of ceremonies as have been to grossly and shamefully abused in the church of Rome, where they remain, are scandalous. Hobbes, b. iv. f. 12.

Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke devils sworn to others purpose;
Working to grossly in a natural cause,
That admiration did not whoop at them. Shakespeare's Hen. V.

And thine eyes
See it to grossly shown in thy behaviour,
That in their kind they speak it. Shakespeare.
What! are we cuckolds ere we have deserv'd it?
—Speak not to grossly. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

What I have said has been forced from me, by seeing a noble sort of poetry so happily restored by one man, and so grossly copied by almost all the rest. Dryden.

If at any time I speak of light and rays as coloured, or endued with colours, I would be understood to speak not philosophically and properly, but grossly, and according to such conceptions as vulgar people, in seeing all these experiments, would be apt to frame. Newton's Opt.

While it is so difficult to learn the springs and motives of some facts, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by curious inquisitive heads. Swift.

GROSSNESS. n. f. [from gross.]
1. Coarseness; not subtilty; thickness; greatness of parts.
The purpose is peripetuous even as substance,
Whole grossness little characters sum up. Shakespeare.
And I will purge that mortal grossness so,
That thou shalt like an airy spirit go. Shakespeare.

The cause of the epilepsy from the stomach is the grossness of the vapours which rise and enter into the cells of the brain.
Bacon's Natural History, No. 966.

Then all this earthy grossness quit;
Attir'd with stars we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over death. Milton.
So this being the first colour which vapours begin to reflect, it ought to be the colour of the finest and most transparent bodies, in which vapours are not arrived to that grossness requisite to reflect other colours. Newton's Opt.

For envy'd wit, like Sol eclips'd, was known
Th' opposing body's grossness, not its own. Pope.
2. Inelegant fatness; unwieldy corpulence.
Wife men, that be over-fat and fleshy, go to sojourn abroad at the temperate diet of some sober man; and so, by little and little, eat away the grossness that is in them. Ajcham.

3. Want of refinement; want of delicacy; intellectual coarseness.
I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief that they were fairies. Shak.
Whatever beauties it may want, 'tis free at least from the grossness of those faults I mentioned. Dryden.

What a grossness is there in the mind of that man, who thinks to reach a lady's heart by wounding her ears! Clarissa.
GROT. n. f. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cave; a cavern for coolness and pleasure.

In the remotest wood and lonely grot,
Certain to meet that worst of evils, thought.
Awful see the Egerian grot. Prior.

GROTESQUE. adj. [grottesque, French; grottesco, Italian.]
Disorted of figure; unnatural; wildly formed.
The champagne head
Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides
With thicket overgrown, grotesque and wild,
Accels deny'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false, that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

An hideous figure of their foes they drew,
Nor lines, nor looks, nor shades, nor colours true,
And this grotesque design expos'd to publick view. Dryden.

Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
Grotto roofs, and fluco floors. Pope's Sat. of Horace.
GROTTO. n. f. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolness. It is not used properly of a dark horrid cavern.

GRO

Their careless chiefs to the cool grotto's run,
The bow'rs of kings, to shade them from the sun. Dryden.
This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak.
Woodward on Poffils.

GROVE. n. f. [from grave.] A walk covered by trees meeting above.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought
The wood began to move:
Within this three mile may you see it coming;
Ifay, a moving grove. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Fortunate fields, and groves, and flow'ry vales;
Thrice happy fields! Milton.
She left the flow'ry field, and waving grove. Blackmore.

Banish'd from courts and love,
Abandon'd truth seeks shelter in the grove. Granville.
Can fierce passions vex his breast,
While every gale is peace, and every grove
Is melody? Thomson's Spring.

To GRO'VE. v. n. [gruiste, Islandick, flat on the face. It may perhaps come by gradual corruption from ground feel.]
1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground.

The steel-head passage wrought,
And through his shoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground
He groveling fell, all gored in his gushing wound. Fa. 24.
What see'st thou there? king Henry's diadem,
Inch'd with all the honours of the world!

If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
Until thy head be circled with the fame. Shakespeare's Hen. IV.
Now they lie

Graveling and prostrate on yon lake of fire. Milt. Par. Lost.
Upon thy belly groveling thou shalt go. Milt. Par. Lost.
Let us then conclude that all painters ought to require this part of excellence: not to do it, is to want courage, and not dare to shew themselves: 'tis to creep and grovel on the ground. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation.
I must disclaim what'er he can express;
His groveling sense will show my passion less. Dryden.
Several thoughts may be natural which are low and groveling. Addison's Spectator.

GROUND. n. f. [grundo, Saxon; grundi, Danish.]
1. The earth, considered as solid, or as low.

Israel shall go on dry ground through the sea. Ex. xiv. 16.
From the other hill
To their fix'd station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gliding meteorous. Milt. Par. Lost.

2. The earth as distinguished from air or water.
I have made man and beast upon the ground. Jer. xxvii. 5.
There was dew upon all the ground. Jude. vi. 40.
It light on him as dew falleth on the ground. 2 Sa. xvii. 12.
Too late young Turnus the delusion found;
Far on the sea, still making from the ground. Dryden's Æn.

3. Land; country.
The water breaks its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds. Hudibras.

4. Region; territory.
With these came they, who from the bord'ring flood
Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts
Egypt from Syrian ground, had general names
Of Baalim and Ashtaroth. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

5. Farm; estate; possession.
Uneasy still within these narrow bounds,
Thy next design is on thy neighbours grounds;
His crop invites, to full perfection grown;
Thy own seems thin, because it is thy own. Dryd. Juven.

6. The floor or level of the place.
Wherefore should I smite thee to the ground? 2 Sa. ii. 22.
Dagon was fallen on his face to the ground. 1 Sa. v. 4.
A multitude fit on the ground. Mat. xv. 35.

7. Dregs; lees; faeces; that which settles at the bottom of liquors.
Set by them cyder, verjuice, four drink, or grounds. Mort.
Some insist upon having had particular success in stopping gagrenes, from the use of the grounds of strong beer, mixed up with bread or oatmeal. Sharp's Surgery.

8. The first stratum of paint upon which the figures are afterwards painted.
We see the limner to begin with a rude draught, and the painter to lay his grounds with shadows and darksome colours.
Hatfield on Providence.

When solid bodies, sensible to the feeling and dark, are placed on light and transparent grounds, as, for example, the heavens, the clouds and waters, and every other thing which is in motion, and void of different objects; they ought to be more rough, and more distinguishable, than that with which they are encompassed. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

9. The fundamental substance; that by which the additional or accidental parts are supported.

- Indeed it was but just that the finest lines in nature should be drawn upon the most durable ground. Pope.
10. The plain song; the tune on which descants are raised. Get a prayer-book in your hand, And stand between two churchmen, good my lord; For on that ground I'll build a holy descent. Shakesp. R. III.
11. First hint; first traces of an invention; that which gives occasion to the rest. Though jealousy of state th' invention found, Yet love refin'd upon the former ground; That way the tyrant had reserv'd to fly, Pursuing hate, now serv'd to bring two lovers nigh. Dryden.
12. The first principles of knowledge. The first principles of knowledge. The concords will easily be known, if the fore grounds be thoroughly beaten in. Preface to Accidence.
- Here statesmen, or of them they which can read, May of their occupation find the grounds. Donne.
- After evening repalls, till bed-time, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion, and the story of scripture. Milton on Education.
13. The fundamental cause; the true reason; original principle. He desired the steward to tell him particularly the ground and event of this accident. Sidney.
- Making happiness the ground of his unhappiness, and good news the argument of his sorrow. Sidney, b. ii.
- The use and benefit of good laws all that live under them may enjoy with delight and comfort, albeit the grounds and first original causes from whence they have sprung be unknown. Hooker, b. i. f. i.
- Thou could'st not have discern'd Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake, No ground of enmity between us known. Mit. Par. Left.
- Nor did either of them ever think fit to make any particular relation of the grounds of their proceedings, or the causes of their misadventures. Clarendon, b. viii.
- Sound judgment is the ground of writing well. Roscam.
- Love once given from her, and plac'd in you, Would leave no ground I ever would be true. Dryden.
- If it be natural, ought we not to conclude that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose. Tillem.
- Upon that prince's death, although the grounds of our quarrel with France had received no manner of addition, yet this lord thought fit to alter his sentiments. Swift.
- The miraculous increase of the professors of Christianity was without any visible grounds and causes, and contrary to all human probability and appearance. Atterbury's Sermons.
14. The field or place of action. Here was thy end decreed, when these men rose; And ev'n with theirs this act thy death did bring, Or hasten'd at the least upon this ground. Daniel's C. War.
15. The space occupied by an army as they fight, advance, or retire. At length the left wing of the Arcadians began to lose ground. Sidney.
- Heartless they fought, and quitted soon their grounds, While our's with easy victory were crown'd. Dryd. Aureng.
- He has lost ground at the latter end of the day, by pursuing his point too far, like the prince of Conde at the battle of Senepa. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
16. The intervening space between the flyer and pursuer. Ev'ning mist, Ris'n from a river, o'er the marsh glides, And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heels, Homeward returning. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
- Superiors think it a detraction from their merit to see another get ground upon them, and overtake them in the pursuits of glory. Addison's Spectator.
- Even whilst we speak our conqueror comes on, And gathers ground upon us every moment. Addison.
17. The state in which one is with respect to opponents or competitors. Had'st thou sway'd as kings should do, Giving no ground unto the house of York, They never then had sprung. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
- If they get ground and 'vantage of the king, Then join you with them like a rib of steel, To make them stronger. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
- He will stand his ground against all the attacks that can be made upon his probity. Atterbury's Sermons.
- Whatever ground we may have gotten upon our enemies, we have gotten none upon our vices, the worst enemies of the two; but are even subdued and led captive by the one, while we triumph so gloriously over the others. Atterbury's Sermons.
18. State of progress or recession. I have known so many great examples of this cure, and heard of its being so familiar in Austria, that I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places. Temple.
- The squirrel is perpetually turning the wheel in her cage: she runs apace, and wears herself with her continual motion, and gets no ground. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
19. The soil to set a thing off.

- Like bright metal on a fallen ground, My reformation glittering o'er my fault, Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes, Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shakespeare.
- To GROUND. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fix on the ground. Wherever she had grounded her foot, neither gods nor men could force her to retire. Rambler.
2. To found as upon cause or principle. Wisdom groundeth her laws upon an infallible rule of comparison. Hooker, b. i. f. 8.
- It may serve us to ground conjectures more approaching to the truth than we have hitherto met with. Boyle.
- If your own actions on your will you ground, Mine shall hereafter know no other bound. Dryd. Aureng.
- Some eminent spirit, having signalized his valour, becomes to have influence on the people, to grow their leader in warlike expeditions; and this is grounded upon the principles of nature and common reason, which, where prudence and courage are required, rather incite us to fly to a single person than a multitude. Swift.
3. To settle in first principles or rudiments of knowledge. Being rooted and grounded in love. Eph. iii. 17.
- GROUND. The preterite and part. pass. of grind. He took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder. Exo. xxxii. 20.
- How dull and rugged, ere 'tis ground And polish'd, looks a diamond? Hudibras, p. iii.
- GROUND is much used in composition for that which is near the ground, or near the ground.
- GROUND-ASH. n. f. A lapin of ash taken from the ground; not a branch cut from a tree. A lance of tough groundels the Trojan threw, Rough in the rind, and knotted as it grew. Dryden's Hen.
- Some cut the young ashes off about an inch above the ground, which causes them to make very large straight shoots, which they call groundels. Mortimer's History.
- GROUND-BAIT. n. f. [from ground and bait.] A bait made of barley or malt boiled; which, being thrown into the place where you design to angle, sinks to the bottom, and draws the fish to it. Take the depth of the place where you mean after to cast your groundbait, and to fish. Walton's Angler.
- GROUND-FLOOR. n. f. [ground and floor.] The lower story of a house.
- GROUND-IVY. n. f. [hedera terrestris, Latin.] Alehoof, or tunhoof. The shoots trail upon the ground, and emit roots from almost every joint, which fasten themselves into the earth: the leaves are roundish, thick, rough, and crenated on the edges: the helmet of the flower is roundish, bifid, and reflexed: the beard or lower lip is trifid, or cut into three segments; the middle segment is broad and bifid, and the flowers are produced at the joints of the shoots. The species are first, common groundivy, or gill-go-by-ground; and second, lesser groundivy. Miller.
- Alehoof or groundivy is, in my opinion, of the most excellent use and virtue of any plants among us. Temple.
- GROUND-OAK. n. f. [ground and oak.] If the planting of oaks were more in use for underwoods, it would spoil the coopers trade for the making of hoops, either of hael or ash; because one hoop made of the young shoots of a groundoak, would outlast six of the best ash. Mort.
- GROUND-PINE. n. f. [chamaepitys, Latin.] The leaves are narrow and trifid; the flower labiated: the place of the crest of the flower is supplied with little teeth: the lower lip is divided into three parts, the middle segment being split again into two parts. The flowers rarely grow in whorles, but one or two are produced at the wings of the leaves. Miller.
- The whole plant has a very singular smell, resembling that of resin; whence its name groundpine. It grows on dry and barren hills, and in some places on the ditch-banks by roadsides. It is highly extolled, by the generality of medical writers, as an aperient, cephalick, and nervous medicine; but it is however little used at present. Hill's Mat. Med.
- GROUND-PLATE. n. f. [In architecture.] The outermost pieces of timber lying on or near the ground, and framed into one another with mortises and tenons. In these also are mortises made to receive the tenons of the joists, the summer and girders; and sometimes the trimmers for the stair-case and chimney way, and the binding joist. Harris.
- In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation, if it be a timber-building, of the several sizes of the groundplates, breast-summers, and beams. Mortimer's Hist.
- GROUND-PLAT. n. f. 1. The ground on which any building is placed. Wretched Gynecea, where can'st thou find any small ground-plot for hope to dwell upon? Sidney.
2. The ichnography of a building.
- GROUND-RENT. n. f. Rent paid for the privilege of building on another man's ground. A foot

- A foot in front, and thirty-three five sevenths deep, would bring in a ground-rent of five pounds. Arbutnot on Coins.
- GROUND-ROOM. n. f. A room on the level with the ground. I beseeched him hereafter to meditate in a ground-room; for that otherwise it would be impossible for an artist of any other kind to live near him. Tatler, No. 88.
- GROUNDLEDY. adv. [from grounded.] Upon firm principles. He hath given the first hint of speaking groundedly, and to the purpose, upon this subject. Glanville.
- GROUNDLESS. n. f. [from ground.] Void of reason; without ground. But when vain doubt and groundless fear Do that dear foolish bosom tear. Prior.
- We have great reason to look upon the high pretensions which the Roman church makes to miracles as groundless, and to reject her vain and fabulous accounts of them. Atterbury.
- The party who distinguish themselves by their zeal for the present establishment, should be careful to discover such a reverence for religion, as may shew how groundless that reproach is which is cast upon them, of being averse to our national worship. Frederick, No. 129.
- GROUNDLESSLY. adv. [from groundless.] Without reason; without cause; without just reason. Divers persons have produced the like by spirit of vitriol, or juice of lemons; but have groundlessly ascribed the effect to some peculiar quality of those two liquors. Boyle on Colours.
- GROUNDLESSNESS. n. f. [from groundless.] Want of just reason. He durst not cite the words either of my book or sermons, lest the reader should have discovered the notorious falsehood and groundlessness of his calumny. Tillem, Sermon 1.
- GROUNDLING. n. f. [from ground.] A fish which keeps at the bottom of the water; hence one of the low vulgar. Hamlet.

- GROUNDLY. adv. [from ground.] Upon principles; solidly; not superficially. A man, groundly learned already, may take much profit himself, in using by epitome to draw other mens works, for his own memory sake, into shorter room. Alcan's Schoolm.
- GROUNDSEL. n. f. [ground and pile, the basis, Sax. perhaps from sella, Latin.] The timber or raised pavement next the ground. The window-frame hath every one of its lights rabbetted on its outside about half an inch into the frame; and all these rabbets, but that on the groundsel, are grooved square; but the rabbets on the groundsel is levelled downwards, that rain or snow may the freer fall off. Maxon's Mech. Exer.
- GROUNDSEL. n. f. [fenecis, Latin.] It hath a flosculous flower, consisting of many florets, divided into several segments fitting on the embryo, contained in an emplement consisting of one leaf, and divided into many parts, afterwards becoming of a conical figure: the embryo afterward becomes a feed, furnished with down; at which time the emplement is reflexed, to make way for the seeds to escape. Miller.
- GROUNDWORK. n. f. [ground and work.] 1. The ground; the first stratum; the first part of the whole; that to which the rest is additional. A way there is in heav'n's expanded plain, Which, when the skies are clear, is seen below, And mortals by the name of milky know; The groundwork is of stars. Dryden's Fables.
2. The first part of an undertaking; the fundamentals. The main skill and groundwork will be to temper them such lectures and explanations, upon every opportunity, as may lead and draw them in willing obedience. Milton.
3. First principle; original reason. The groundwork thereof is nevertheless true and certain, however they through ignorance disguise the same, or through vanity. Spenser's State of Ireland.
- The morals is the first business of the poet, as being the groundwork of his instruction. Dryden.
- GROUP. n. f. [groupe, French; gruppo, Italian.] A crowd; a cluster; a huddle; a number thronged together. In a picture, besides the principal figures which compose it, and are placed in the midst of it, there are less groups or knots of figures disposed at proper distances, which are parts of the piece, and seem to carry on the same design in a more inferior manner. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
- I cannot doubt but the poet had here in view the picture of Zeus, in the famous group of figures which represents the two brothers binding Dirce to the horns of a mad bull. Addison.
- You should try your graving tools On this odious group of fools. Swift.
- To GROUP. v. a. [grouper, French.] To put into a crowd; To huddle together. The difficulty lies in drawing and disposing, or, as the painters term it, in grouping such a multitude of different objects, preserving still the justice and conformity of style and colouring. Prior.

- GROUSE. n. f. A kind of fowl; a heathcock. The 'quires in scorn will fly the house For better game, and look for grouse. Swift.
- GROUT. n. f. [grut, Saxon. In Scotland they call it grouts.] 1. Coarse meal; pollard. King Hardicanute, 'midst Danes and Saxons flout, Carous'd in nut-brown ale, and din'd on grout: Which dish its pristine honour still retains, And when each prince is crown'd in splendour reigns. King.
2. That which purges off. Sweet honey some condense, some purge the grout; The rest, in cells apart, the liquid nectar shout. Dryden.
3. A kind of wild apple. [Agrimelum, Latin.] To GROW. v. n. preter. grew; part. pass. grown. [τροφαν, Saxon; groeyen, Dutch.] 1. Who mourn'd in earnest, when the captive ark
Maim'd his brute image, head and hands lopp'd off
In his own temple, on the grunsel edge. Milton.
Where he fell flat, and tham'd his worshippers.
TO GRUNT. v. n. [from grunnen, Latin.] To murmur like a hog.
And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar and burn,
Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn. Shaksp.
Lament, ye swine! in gruntings spend your grief;
For you, like me, have lost your sole relief. Gay's Post.
Thy brind'd boars may slumber undisturb'd,
Or grunt secure beneath the chestnut shade. Tickel.
The scolding quean to louder notes doth rise,
To her full pipes the grunting hog replies;
The grunting hogs alarm the neighbours round. Swift.
GRUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] The noise of a hog.
Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,
In panick horror of pursuing dogs;
With many a deadly grunt and doleful squeak,
Poor swine, as if their pretty hearts would break. Dryden.
From hence were heard
The grunts of bristled boars, and groans of bears,
And herds of howling wolves. Dryden's En.
GRUNTER. n. f. [from grunt.]

TO GRUTCH. v. n. [corrupted for the sake of rhyme from grudge.] To envy; to repine; to be discontented.
The poor at the end of the doth grutch,
Because of abuses that fall,
Left some men should have but too much,
And some again nothing at all.
But what we're born for we must bear,
Our frail condition it is such,
That what to all may happen here,
If't chance to me, I must not grutch. Ben. Johnson.
GRUTCH. n. f. [from the verb.] Malice; ill-will.
In it he melted leaden bullets,
To shoot at foes, and sometimes pullets;
To whom he bore so fell a grutch,
He ne'er gave quarter 't any such. Hudibras, p. i.

He suffered lust his safety to betray;
So goodly did beguile the guile of the prey. Fairy Queen.
GUILT. n. f. [guilt, Saxon, originally signified the fine or mulct paid for an offence, and afterward the offence itself.]
1. The state of a man justly charged with a crime; the contrary to innocence.
It was neither guilt of crime, nor reason of state, that could quench the envy that was upon the king for this execution. Bacon's Henry VII.
When these two are taken away, the possibility of guilt, and the possibility of innocence, what restraint can the belief of the creed lay upon any man? Hammond on Fundamentals.
2. A crime; an offence.
Close pent up guilt
Rive your concealing continents, and ask
These dreadful summoners grace. Shaksp. King Lear.
GUILTILY. adv. [from guilty.] Without innocence; without clearness of conscience.
Bloody and guilty, guiltily awake,
And in a bloody battle end thy days:
Think on lord Hastings, and despair and die. Shak. R. III.
GUILTINESS. n. f. [from guilty.] The state of being guilty; wickedness; consciousness of crime.
He thought his flight rather to proceed of a fearful guiltiness than of a humble faithfulness. Sidney, b. ii.
The last was I that felt thy tyranny:
O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness. Shaksp. Richard III.
I should be guiltier than my guiltiness. Shaksp.peare.
GUILTLESS. adj. [from guilt.] Innocent; free from crime.
I am in this commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning. Shaksp. R. III.
Many worthy and chaste dames thus,
All guiltless, meet reproach. Shaksp.peare's Othello.
Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity. Num. v. 31.

GULCHIN. n. f. Skinner.
GULES. adj. [perhaps from gule, the throat.] Red: a barbarous term of heraldry.
Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground: gules, gules;
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
Then what should war be? Shaksp. Timon of Athens.
He whose fable arms,
Black as his purpose, did the knight resemble,
When he laid couched in the ominous horse,
Hath now his dread and black complexion smear'd
With heraldry more difmal; head to foot,
Now he is total gules. Shaksp.peare's Hamlet.
GULF. n. f. [from gulf, Italian.]
1. A bay; an opening into land.
Pisaurius, the Venetian admiral, knowing himself unable to encounter with the Turks great fleet at sea, withdrew himself farther off from the island Corfu, into the gulf of the Adriatick. Kneller's History of the Turks.
2. An abyss; an unmeasurable depth.
Thence turning back, in silence soft they stole,
And brought the heavy curse with easy pace
To yawning gulf of deep Avernus' hole;
By that same hole, an entrance dark and base,
With smoke and sulphur hiding all the place,
Defends to hell. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 5. I know

GUL

I know thou'd'st rather
Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf,
Than flatter him in a bower. Shaksp.peare's Coriolanus.
This is the gulf through which Virgil's Alecto shoots herself into hell: the fall of waters, the woods that encompass it, are all in the description. Addison on Italy.
The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation, for fear our heads should turn giddy at the imagination of gaping abyfles and unfathomable gulfs? Bentley.
3. A whirlpool; a sucking eddy.
England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf. Shaksp. Henry V.
4. Any thing insatiable.
Sculd of dragon, tooth of wolf,
Witches mummy; maw and gulf
Of the ravening salt sea shark;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i' th' dark. Shaksp. Macbeth.
GU'LF. adj. [from gulf.] Full of gulfs or whirlpools; voracious.
Rivers arise; whether thou be the son
Of utmost Tweed, or Ouse, or gulfy Dun. Milton.
At their native realms the Greeks arriv'd,
All who the war of ten long years surviv'd,
And escap'd the perils of the gulfy main. Pope's Odyssey.
High o'er a gulfy sea the Pharian ile Fronts the deep roar of dissembling Nile. Pope's Odyssey.
TO GULL. v. a. [from gull, old French.] To trick; to cheat; to defraud; to deceive.
If I do not gull him into a nay word, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. Shaksp.peare's Twelfth Night.
Yet love these fore-tries did remove, and move Thee to gull thine own mother for my love. Donne.
He would have gull'd him with a trick,
But Mart was too too politic. Hudibras, p. ii.
They are not to be gull'd twice with the same trick. L'Estr.
The Roman people were grossly gull'd twice or thrice over, and as often enslaved in one century, and under the same pretence of reformation. Dryden's Æn. Dedication.
By their designing leaders taught,
The vulgar, gull'd into rebellion, arm'd;
For this advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be out-riden, though out-run;
By fortune he was now to Venus trind,
And with them Mars in Capricorn was join'd:
Of him disposing in his own abode,
He footh'd the goddess, while he gull'd the god. Dryden.
GULL. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A sea-bird.
2. A cheat; a fraud; a trick.
I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it.
Either they have these excellencies they are praised for, or they have not; if they have not, 'tis an apparent cheat and gull. Government of the Tongue.
3. A stupid animal; one easily cheated.
Being fed by us you us'd us so,
As that ungentle gull, the cuckoo bird,
Useth the sparrow. Shaksp. Henry IV. p. i.
Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,
And made the most notorious geck and gull,
That e'er invention plac'd on. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
That paltry story is untrue,
And forg'd to cheat such gulls as you. Hudibras, p. ii.
GULLCATCHER. n. f. [from gull and catch.] A cheat; a man of trick; one who catches silly people.
Here comes my noble gullcatcher. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.

TO GULP. v. a. [from gopen, Dutch.] To swallow eagerly; to suck down without intermission.
He loosens the fish, gulps it down, and so soon as ever the morsel was gone wipes his mouth. L'Estrange.
I thirsty stand,
And see the double flaggon charge their hand;
See them puff off the froth, and gulp amain,
While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain. Gay.
GULP. n. f. [from the verb.] As much as can be swallowed at once.
In deep suspirations we take more large gulps of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love and sorrow. More.
As oft as he can catch a gulp of air,
And peep above the seas, he names the fair. Dryden's Fables.
GUM. n. f. [from gummis, Latin.]
1. A vegetable substance differing from a resin, in being more viscid and less friable, and generally dissolving in aqueous menstrua; whereas resins, being more sulphurous, require a spirituous solvent. Quincy.
One whole eyes,
Albeit unuse to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shaksp.peare's Othello.
He ripens spices, fruit, and precious gums,
Which from remotest regions hither come. Waller.
Her maiden train,
Who bore the vests that holy rites require,
Incense, and od'rous gums, and cover'd fire. Dryden's Fables.

- GYRATION. n. f. [gyro, Latin.] The act of turning any thing about.
 This effluvium attenuateth and impelleth the neighbour air, which, returning home, in a gyration carrieth with it the obvious bodies into the electric. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 If a burning coal be nimbly moved round in a circle with gyrations, continually repeated, the whole circle will appear like fire; the reason of which is, that the sensation of the coal in the several places of that circle remains impressed on the sensorium, until the coal return again to the same place. Newt.
- GYRE. n. f. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing going in an orbit.
 Ne thenceforth his approved skill to ward,
 Or strike, or hurlen round in warlike gyre,
 Remember'd he; ne car'd for his safe guard,
 But rudely rag'd. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 5.
 Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky,
 And to the South by thy direction fly?
 Or eagle in her gyres the clouds embrace?
 He fashion'd those harmonious orbs, that roll
 In restless gyres about the Arctick pole. Sandys.
 Quick and more quick he spins in giddy gyres,
 Then falls, and in much foam his soul expires. Dryden.
- GYVES. n. f. [geyyu, Welsh.] Fetters; chains for the legs.
 The villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.
 And knowing this, should I yet flay,
 Like such as blow away their lives,
 And never will redeem a day,
 Enamour'd of their golden gyves? Ben. Johnson's Forest.
 The poor prisoners, ready to take the occasion offered,
 Boldly starting up, break off their chains and gyves. Knolles.
 Do'st thou already fingle me? I thought Gyves and the mill had tam'd thee. Milton's Agonistes.
 But Telamon rush'd in, and hap'd to meet
 A rising root, that held his fasten'd feet;
 So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground,
 His brother from the wooden gyves unbound. Dryd. Fables.
- TO GYVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fetter; to shackle; to enchain; to enslave.
 With as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do. I will gyve thee in thine own courtship. Shakespeare's Othello.

HAB

H is in English, as in other languages, a note of aspiration, founded only by a strong emission of the breath, without any conformation of the organs of speech, and is therefore by many grammarians accounted no letter. The h in English is scarcely ever mute at the beginning of a word, or where it immediately precedes a vowel; as haufe, behaviour: where it is followed by a consonant it has no sound, according to the present pronunciation: but anciently, as now in Scotland, it made the syllable guttural; as right, laught.

Which the cold North congeals to hairy flowers. Pope.
HAIR. n. f. [hæp, Saxon.]
1. One of the common teguments of the body. It is to be found upon all the parts of the body, except the soles of the feet and palms of the hands. When we examine the hairs with a microscope, we find that they have each a round ballous root, which lies pretty deep in the skin, and which draws their nourishment from the surrounding humours: that each hair consists of five or six others, wrapt up in a common tegu-ment or tube. They grow as the nails do, each part near the root thrusting forward that which is immediately above it, and not by any liquor running along the hair in tubes, as plants grow. Quincy.
2. A single hair.
My fleece of woolly hair uncurls. Shakespeare, Tit. And.
Shall the difference of hair only, on the skin, be a mark of a different internal constitution between a changeling and a drill? Locke.
Naughty lady,
These hairs which thou do'st ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee. Shakespeare, King Lear.
Much is breeding;
Which, like the courier's hair, hath yet but life,
And not a serpent's poison. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
3. Any thing proverbially small.
Or less than just a pound; if the scale turn
But in the estimation of a hair.
Thou diest. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
He judges to a hair of little indecencies, and knows better than any man what is not to be written. Dryden.
4. Courtes; order; grain; the hair falling in a certain direction.
Mr. doctor, he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies: if you should fight, you go against the hair of your profession. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
HAIRBRAINED. adj. [This should rather be written hore- brained, unconscious, unsettled, wild as a hare.] Wild; irregular; unsteady.
Let's leave this town; for they are hairbrained slaves,
And hale him up and down. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
HAIRBREADTH. n. f. [hair and breadth.] A very small distance; the diameter of a hair.
Seven hundred chosen men left-handed could sling stones at an hairbreadth, and not miss. Judge, xx. 16.

Courtesy is sooner found in lowly sheds

With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls

And courts of princes.

HALLELUJAH. n. f. [הללו יה] Praise ye the Lord. A song of thanksgiving.

Then shall thy faints

Unfain'd hallooings to thee sing,

Hymns of high praise.

HAL

HALLOO. interj. [The original of this word is controverted; some imagine it corrupted from a hal, to him! others from allou, let us go! and Skinner from haler, to draw.] A word of encouragement when dogs are let loose on their game.

Some popular chiefs.

More noisy than the rest, but cries halloo.

And, in a trice, the bellowing herd come out.

To HALLOO. v. n. [haler, Fr.] To cry as after the dogs.

A number of country folks halloed and houted after me, as at the arrantest coward that ever shewed his shoulders to his enemy.

A cry more tuneable

Was never halloed to, nor cheer'd with horn.

To HALLOO. v. a.

1. To encourage with shouts.

Is whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,

Fond of his hunting-horn and pole,

Though gout and age his speed detain,

Old John halloo his hounds again.

2. To chafe with shouts.

When we have found the king, he that first lights on him,

Halloo the other.

To HALLOW. v. a. [halgian, palg, Saxon, holy.]

1. To consecrate; to make holy.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, it is only to testify that we make them places of publick resort; that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses.

With us it cannot be endured to hear a man openly profess that he putteth fire to his neighbour's house, but yet to hallooth the same with prayer, that he hopeth it shall not burn.

It's Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor!

Sword, I will halloo thee for this thy deed,

And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead.

Are not words duly hallo'd, nor my wishes

More worth than vanities; yet pray'st and wishes

Are all I can return.

Now resting, blest'd and hallo'd the seventh day,

As resting on that day from all his works,

But not in silence holy kept.

Then banish'd faith shall once again return,

And vestal fires in hallo'd temples burn.

No satyr lurks within this hallo'd ground;

But nymphs and heroines, kings and gods abound.

HALLOWING. n. f. [hallooinat, Latin.] Error; blunder; mistake; folly.

A wasting of flesh, without cause, is frequently termed a bewitched disease; but questionable a meer hallucination of the vulgar.

This must have been the hallucination of the transferer, who probably mistook the dash of the I for a T.

HALM. n. f. [pealm, Saxon.] Straw. Pronounced hawm.

HALLO. n. f. A red circle round the sun or moon.

And, if the hail be a little flatted, the light transmitted may grow so strong, at a little less distance than that of twenty-six degrees, as to form a halo about the sun or moon; which halo, as often as the hailstones are duly figured, may be coloured.

I saw by reflexion, in a vessel of stagnating water, three halo's, crowns or rings of colours about the sun, like three little rainbows, concentric to his body.

HALSENING. adj. [hals, German; hals, Scottish, the neck.] Sounding harshly; inharmonious in the throat or tongue.

This ill halsewing horny name hath, as cornuto in Italy, opened a gap to the scoffs of many.

HALSER. n. f. [from palr, neck, and reel, a rope. It is now in marine pronunciation corrupted to halyser.] A rope less than a cable.

A beechen mast then in the hollow bace

They hoisted, and with well-wreath'd halyser hoise

Their white sails.

No halyser need to bind these vessels here,

Nor bearded anchors; for no storms they fear.

To HALT. v. n. [pealte, Saxon, lame; pealtan, to limp.]

1. To limp; to be lame.

On me, that halt and am mis-shapen thus?

Thus inborn broils the factions would engage,

Or wars of civil heirs, or foreign rage,

'Till halting vengeance overtook our age.

How

HAM

How long halt ye between two opinions?

To fail; to falter.

Here's a paper written in his hand;

A halting sonnet of his own pure brain,

Fashion'd to Beatrice.

All my familiars watched for my halting, saying, peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him.

HALT. adj. [from the verb.] Lame; crippled.

Bring in hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind.

HALT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of limping; the manner of limping.

2. [from French.] A stop in a march.

Down from a sky of Jasper lighted now

In Paradise, and on a hill made halt.

Each quarter to defy the distant foe,

Where lodg'd, or whether fled, or if for fight

In motion, or in halt.

Without any halt they marched between the two armies.

He might have made a halt 'till his foot and artillery came up to him.

HALTER. n. f. [from halt.] He who limps.

HALTER. n. f. [from halt, Saxon, from haly, the neck.]

1. A rope to hang malefactors.

He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'r do yield;

And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,

Expect your highness' doom of life or death.

Answer was made, it was by the sword if they stood upon defence, and by the halter if they yielded; wherefore they made choice to die rather as soldiers than as dogs.

Where I a drowly judge, whose dismal note

Disgorgeth halters, as a juggler's throat

Doth ribbands.

When the times begin to alter,

None rise so high as from the halter.

But narrowly escapes, and buys it dear.

2. A cord; a strong string.

Whom neither halter binds nor burthens charge.

To HALTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a cord; to catch in a snare.

He might have employed his time in the frivolous delights of catching moles and haltering frogs.

To HALVE. v. a. [from half, halve.] To divide into two parts.

HALVES. interj. [from half, halve, being the plural.] An expression by which any one lays claim to an equal share.

Have you not seen how the divided dam

Runs to the hummings of her hungry lamb?

But when the twin cries halve, the quits the first.

HAM, whether initial or final, is no other than the Saxon ham, a house, farm, or village.

1. The ham; the hinder part of the articulation of the thigh with the knee.

The ham was much relaxed; but there was some contraction remaining.

2. The thigh of a hog salted.

Who has not learn'd, fresh sturgeon and ham pye

Are no rewards for want and infancy.

HAMATED. adj. [hamatus, Latin.] Hooked; fet with hooks.

To HAMBLE. v. a. [from ham.] To cut the sinews of the thigh; to hamstring.

HAME. n. f. [from ham, Saxon.] The collar by which a horse draws in a waggon.

Within the self-same lordship, parish, or hamlet, lands have divers degrees of value.

His mighty camp, and, when the day return'd,

The country waited and the hamlets burn'd.

HAMMER. n. f. [from ham, Saxon; hamme, Dutch.]

1. The instrument consisting of a long handle and heavy head, with which any thing is forged or driven.

The armours,

With busy hammers closing rivets up,

Give dreadful note of preparation.

2. Any thing destructive.

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke.

HAN

His bones the hammer'd steel in strength surpasses.

2. To forge or form with a hammer.

Some hammer helmets for the fighting field.

Drugg'd like a smith, and on the anvil beat,

'Till he had hammer'd out a vast estate.

3. To work in the mind; to contrive by intellectual labour.

Wilt thou still be hammering treachery,

To humble down thy husband and thyself?

He was nobody that could not hammer out of his name an invention by this witercraft, and picture it accordingly.

Some spirits, by whom they were stirred and guided in the name of the people, hammer'd up the articles.

To HAMMER. v. n.

1. To work; to be busy.

Nor need'st thou much importune me to that;

Whereon this month I have been hammering.

I have been studying how to compare

This prison where I live unto the world;

And, for because the world is populous,

And here is not a creature but myself,

I cannot do it; yet I'll hammer on't.

2. To be in agitation.

Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand;

Blood and revenge are hammering in my head.

HAMMER. n. f. [from hammer.] He who works with a hammer.

HAMMERHARD. n. f. [hammer and hard.]

Hammerhard is when you harden iron or steel with much hammering on it.

HAMMOCK. n. f. [from amock, Saxon.] A swinging bed.

Prince Maurice of Nassau, who had been accustomed to hammocks, used them all his life.

HAMPER. n. f. [from Minnew to be contracted from hand and panter; but hanaperum appears to have been a word long in use, whence hanaper, hamper.] A large basket for carriage.

What powder'd wigs! what flames and darts!

What banpers full of bleeding hearts.

To HAMPER. v. a. [from the original of this word, in its present meaning, is uncertain: Junius observes that dompnus in Teutonick is a quarrel: others imagine that hamper or banaper, being the treasury to which fines are paid, to hamper, which is commonly applied to the law, means originally to fine.]

1. To thackle; to entangle in chains.

O loose this frame, this knot of man untie!

That my free soul may use her wing,

Which now is pinion'd with mortality,

As an entangl'd, hamper'd thing.

We shall find such engines to assail,

And hamper thee, as thou shalt come of force.

What was it but a lion hamper'd in a net!

They hamper and entangle our souls, and hinder their flight upwards.

2. To enmesh; to inveigle; to catch with allurements.

She'll hamper thee, and handle thee like a baby.

Wear under vizards-masks their talents,

And mother wits before their gallants;

Until they're hamper'd in the noose,

Too fast to dream of breaking loose.

3. To complicate; to tangle.

Engend'ring heats, these one by one unwind,

Stretch their small tubes, and hamper'd nerves unwind.

4. To perplex; to embarrass by many lets and troubles.

HAN

HA'NGMAN. n. f. [from hang and man.] The public executioner.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows; in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, and in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney, b. ii.

One cried, God bless us! and amen! the other;
As they had seen me with these hangman's hands:
Listening their fear, I could not say amen,
When they did say God bless us. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

He hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstrings, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him. Shakspeare.

Who makes that noise there? Who are you?
—Your friend, sir, the hangman: you must be so good, sir, to rise, and be put to death. Shakspeare, Measure for Measure.

Men do not stand
In so ill case, that God hath with his hand
Sign'd kings blank charters to kill whom they hate;
Nor are they vicars, but hangmen to fate. Donne.

I never knew a critic, who made it his business to lash the faults of other writers, that was not guilty of greater himself; as the hangman is generally a worse malefactor than the criminal that suffers by his hand. Addison's Whig Examiner.

HANK. n. f. [from hank, a chain or coil of rope.]
1. A skein of thread.
2. A tie; a check; an influence. A low word.

HAP

To HA'NKER. v. n. [from hanken, Dutch.] To long importunately; to have an incessant will.

And now the fairs began their reign,
For which th' had yearn'd so long in vain,
And felt such bow'd hankings,
To see an empire all of kings. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 2.

Among women and children, care is to be taken that they get not a hankering after these juggling astrologers and fortune-tellers. L'Estrange's Fables.

The shepherd would be a merchant, and the merchant hankers after something else. L'Estrange's Fables.

Do't thou not hanker after a greater liberty in some things? If not, there's no better sign of a good resolution. Galamy.

The wife is an old coquette, that is always hankering after the diversions of the town.

The republick that fell under the subjection of the duke of Florence, still retains many hankerings after its ancient liberty. Addison on Italy.

HAN'T, for has not, or have not.
That roguish leer of your's makes a pretty woman's heart ache: you han't that simper about the mouth for nothing. Addison.

HAP. n. f. [from happen, in Welsh, is misfortune.]
1. Chance; fortune.

Things casual do vary, and that which a man doth but chance to think well of cannot fill have the like hap. Hobbes.

Whether art it were, or heedless hap,
As through the flowing forest rath the fled,
In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did enwrap. F. S.
A fox had the hap to fall into the walk of a lion. L'Estrange.

2. That which happens by chance or fortune.
Curst be good haps, and curst be they that build
Their hopes on haps, and do not make despair
For all these certain blows the furest shield. Sidney.

To have ejected whatsoever that church doth make account of, without any other crime than that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, might haply have pleased some few men, who, having begun such a course themselves, must be glad to see their example followed. Hobbes, b. iv.

3. Accident; casual event; misfortune.
Soliman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, more than the victory of others got by good fortune. Knoles.

Nor feared he among the bands to stray
Of armed men; for often had the seen
The tragick end of many a bloody fray:
Her life had full of hops and hazards been. Fairfax, b. vi.

HA'HAZARD. n. f. Chance; accident.

The former of these is the most sure and infallible way; but so hard that all thum it, and had rather walk as men do in the dark by hap-hazard, than tread so long and intricate mazes for knowledge sake. Hobbes, b. i. f. 7.

We live at hap-hazard, and without any insight into causes and effects. L'Estrange.

We take our principles at hap-hazard upon trust, and without ever having examined them; and then believe a whole system, upon a presumption that they are true. Locke.

To HAP. v. n. [from the noun.] To come by accident; to fall out; to happen.

It will be too late to gather provision from abroad, for the furnishing of ships or soldiers, which peradventure may need to be presently employed, and whose want may hap to hazard a kingdom. Spenser on Ireland.

Run you to the citadel,
And tell my lord and lady what hath hap'd. Shak. Othello.
In destructions by deluge, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant people. Bacon.

HA'PLY. adv. [from hap.]
1. Perhaps; peradventure; it may be.

This love of theirs myself have often seen,
Haply when they have judg'd me fast asleep. Shakspeare.

To warn
Us, haply too secure, of our discharge
From penalty, because from death releas'd
Some days. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Then haply yet your breast remains untouched,
Though that seems strange. Rowe's Royal Convert.

Let us now see what conclusions may be found for instruction of any other state, that may haply labour under the like circumstances. Swift on the Dissent in Athens and Rome.

2. By chance; by accident.
Leviathan, which God of all his works
Created hugest, that swim the ocean stream,
Him haply lumb'ring on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff
Deeming some island off, as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

HA'PLESS. adj. [from hap.] Unhappy; unfortunate; luckless; unlucky.

HAR

Hapless Ægeon, whom the fates have mark'd
To bear th' extremity of dire mishap!
Here hapless Icarus had found his part,
Had not the father's grief restrain'd his art. Dryden's Æn.
Did his hapless passion equal mine,
I would refuse the bliss. Smith's Phædra and Hippolitus.

To HA'PPEN. v. n. [from hap.]
1. To fall out; to chance; to come to pass.

Bring forth your strong reasons, and shew us what shall
If, xl. 22.
Say not I have finned, and what harm hath happened unto me. Ecclus. v. 4.

If it so fall out that thou art miserable for ever, thou hast no reason to be surpris'd, as if some unexpected thing had happened to thee. Tillotson's Sermons.

2. To light; to fall by chance.
I have happened on some other accounts relating to mortalities. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

HA'PPILY. adv. [from happy.]
1. Fortunately; luckily; successfully.

Were she as rough
As are the swelling Adriatick seas,
I come to wive it wealthy in Padua:
If wealthyly, then happily in Padua. Shakspeare.

Prefer'd by conquest, happily o'thrown,
Falling they rise to be with us made one. Waller.

Neither is it so trivial an undertaking to make a tragedy end happily; for 'tis more difficult to save than kill. Dryden.

2. Addressfully; gracefully; without labour.
Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

3. In a state of felicity; as, he lives happily.

4. By chance; peradventure. In this sense happily is written erroneously for haply.
One thing more I shall wish you to desire of them, who happily may peruse these two treatises. Digby.

HA'PPINESS. n. f. [from happy.]
1. Felicity; state in which the desires are satisfied.

Happiness is that estate whereby we attain, so far as possibly may be attained, the full possession of that which simply for itself is to be desired, and containeth in it after an eminent sort the contentation of our desires, the highest degree of all our perfection. Hobbes, b. i.

Oh! happiness of sweet retir'd contents,
To be at once secure and innocent. Denham.

The various and contrary choices that men make in the world, argue that the same thing is not good to every man alike: this variety of pursuits shews, that every one does not place his happiness in the same thing. Locke.

2. Good luck; good fortune.

3. Fortuitous elegance; unstudied grace.
Certain graces and happinesses, peculiar to every language, give life and energy to the words. Denham.

Some beauties yet no precepts can declare;
For there's a happiness as well as care. Pope on Criticism.

HA'PPY. adj. [from hap; as lucky for luck.]
1. In a state of felicity; in a state where the desire is satisfied.

At other end Uran did Strephon lend
Her happy making hand. Sidney.

—If to have done the thing you gave in charge
Begot your happiness, be happy then;
For it is done. Shakspeare's Richard III.

Truth and peace, and love, shall ever shine
About the supreme throne
Of him, whose happy making fight alone,
When once our heav'nly guided soul shall climb. Milton.

Though the presence of imaginary good cannot make us happy, the absence of it may make us miserable. Addison.

2. Lucky; successful; fortunate.

Chymists have been more happy in finding experiments than the causes of them. Boyle.

Yet in this agony his fancy wrought,
And fear supply'd him with this happy thought. Dryden.

3. Addressful; ready.
One gentleman is happy at a reply, and another excels in a rejoinder. Swift.

HA'QUETON. n. f. A piece of armour.

HARA'NGUE. n. f. [from harangue, French.] The original of the French word is much questioned: Mnage thinks it a corruption of harang, English; Junius imagines it to be discours au rang, to a circle, which the Italian arringa seems to favour. Perhaps it may be from orare, or oratione, orationer, oranger, haranguer. A speech; a popular oration.

Gray-headed men, and grave, with warriors mix'd,
Assamble, and harangues are heard; but soon
In factious opposition. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
Nothing can better improve political schoolboys than the art of making plausible or implausible harangues, against the very opinion for which they resolve to determine. Swift.
A multitude of preachers neglect method in their harangues. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

HAR

To HARA'NGUE. v. n. [from harangue, French.] To make a speech; to pronounce an oration.

HARA'NGUER. n. f. [from harangue.] An orator; a public speaker; generally with some mixture of contempt.

To HA'RASS. v. a. [from harasser, French, from harasse, a heavy buckler, according to Du Cange.] To weary; to fatigue; to tire with labour and uneasiness.

These troops came to the army but the day before, harassed with a long and wearisome march. Bacon's War with Spain.
Our walls are thinly mann'd, our best men slain;
The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching,
And harass'd out with duty. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Nature oppress'd, and harass'd out with care,
Sinks down to rest. Addison's Cato.

HA'RASS. n. f. [from the verb.] Waste; disturbance.
The men of Judah, to prevent
The harass of their land, beset me round. Milton's Agonist.

HA'RBINGER. n. f. [from herberger, Dutch, one who goes to provide lodgings or an harbour for those that follow.] A forerunner; a precursor.

Make all our trumpets speak, give them all breath,
Those clamorous harbingers of blood and death. Sh. Macb.
I'll be myself the harbingers, and make joyful
The hearing of my wife with your approach. Shak. Macb.

Sin, and her shadow death, and misery,
Death's harbingers. Milt. Par. Lost, b. ix. l. 13.

And now of love they treat, 'till th' evening star,
Love's harbingers, appear'd. Milt. Par. Lost, b. xi.

Before him a great prophet, to proclaim
His coming, is sent harbingers, who all Invites. Milton's Paradise Regain'd, b. i.

As Ormond's harbingers to you they run;
For Venus is the promise of the Sun. Dryden.

HA'RBOUR. n. f. [from herberge, French; herberg, Dutch; albergo, Italian.]
1. A lodging; a place of entertainment.

For harbour at a thousand doors they knock'd;
Not one of all the thousand but was lock'd. Dryden, Fables.
Doubly curs'd

Be all those easy fools who give it harbour. Rowe's J. Sherris.

2. A port or haven for shipping.

Three of your argosies
Are richly come to harbour suddenly. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

They leave the mouths of Po,
That all the borders of the town o'erflow;
And spreading round in one continu'd lake,
A spacious hospitable harbour make. Addison on Italy.

3. An asylum; a shelter; a place of shelter and security.

To HA'RBOUR. v. n. [from the noun.] To receive entertainment; to sojourn; to take shelter.

This night let's harbour here in York. Shakspeare, Henry VI.

They are sent by me,
That they should harbour where their lord would be. Shakspeare.

Southwards they bent their flight,
And harbour'd in a hollow rock at night:
Next morn they rose, and let up every sail;
The wind was fair, but blew a mackerel gale. Dryden.

Let me be grateful; but let far from me
Be fawning cringe, and false dissembling look,
And servile flattery, that harbours oft
In courts and gilded roofs. Phillips.

To HA'RBOUR. v. a.

1. To entertain; to permit to reside.
My lady bids me tell you, that though the harbours you as her uncle, she's nothing allied to your disorders. Shakspeare.

Than twenty filky ducking observants,
That stretch their duties nicely. Shakspeare, King Lear.

Let not your gentle breast harbour one thought
Of outrage from the king. Rowe's Royal Convert.

We owe this old house the same kind of gratitude that we do to an old friend who harbours us in his declining condition, may even in his last extremities. Pope.

How people, so greatly warmed with a sense of liberty, should be capable of harbouring such weak superstitions; and that so much bravery and so much folly can inhabit the same breasts. Pope.

2. To shelter; to secure.
Harbour yourself this night in this castle, because the time requires it; and, in truth, this country is very dangerous for murdering thieves to trust a sleeping life among them. Sidney.

HA'RBOURAGE. n. f. [from herberge, Fr. from harbour.] Shelter; entertainment.

Let in us, your king, whose labour'd spirits,
Foreworn in this action of swift speed,
Crave harbourage within your city walls. Shakspeare, King John.

HA'RBOURER. n. f. [from harbour.] One that entertains another.

HARBOURLESS. adj. [from harbour.] Without harbour; without lodging; without shelter.

HARBROUGH for harbour.

2. Having sounds concordant to each other; musical.
Harmony in wedded pair,
More grateful than harmonious sounds to th' ear. Milton.
The verse of Chaucer is not harmonious to us: they who lived with him, and some time after him, thought it musical. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
- HARMONIOUSLY. adv. [from harmonious.]
1. With just adaptation and proportion of parts to each other.
Not chaos-like, together crush'd and bruised;
But as the world, harmoniously confus'd:
Where order in variety we see,
And where, though all things differ, they agree. Pope.
That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom. Bentley's Sermons.
2. Musically; with concord of sounds.
If we look upon the world as a musical instrument, well-tuned, and harmoniously struck, we ought not therefore to worship the instrument, but him that makes the music. Stillingfleet's Def. of Dife. on Rom. Idol.

HAR

that throws the harpoon in whalefishing.

HARPO'ON. n. f. [harpon, French.] A harping iron.
HARPSICORD. n. f. A musical instrument.

HARPY. n. f. [harpys, Latin; harpie, harpie, French.]
The harpies were a kind of birds which had the faces of women, and foul long claws, very filthy creatures; which, when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in,
and devouring or carrying away the greater part of the viands, did so defile the rest that they could not be endured. Reliegh.

That an harpy is not a centaur is by this way as much a truth, as that a square is not a circle. Locke.

2. A ravenous wretch.
I will do you any ambassage to the pigmies, rather than hold three words conference with this harpy. Shakespeare.

HA'QUEBUSS. n. f. [See ARQUEBUSE.] A handgun.
HA'QUEBUSSIER. n. f. [from arquebuste.] One armed with aarquebus.

About thirty paces off were placed twenty thousand nimble harquebussiers, ranged in length, and but five in a rank. Kneller.

HARRIDAN. n. f. [corrupted from haridelle, a worn-out worthless horse.] A decayed trumpet.

She just endur'd the Winter she began,
And in four months a batter'd harridan;
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,
To bawd for others, and go shares with punk. Swift.

HA'ROW. n. f. [harrou, French; harcke, German, a rake.]
A frame of timbers crossing each other, and set with teeth, drawn over sowed ground to break the clods and throw the earth over the seed.

The land with daily care
Is exercis'd, and with an iron war
Is rakes and harrows. Dryden's Georgick.

Two small harrows, that clap on each side of the ridge, harrow it right up and down. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To HA'ROW. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To break with the harrow.

Friend, harrow in time, by some manner of means.
Not only thy peafowl, but also thy beans. Tuff. Husbandry.

Can't thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow?
or will he harrow the valleys after thee? Job xxxix. 10.

Let the Volscians
Plow Rome, and harrow Italy, I'll never Be such a golling to obey infinit. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

2. To tear up; to rip up.
I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres. Sh.

Imagine you behold me bound and scourg'd,
My aged muscles harrow'd up with whips;
Or hear me groaning on the rending rack.
To pillage; to strip; to lay waste. See HARRY, which in Scouth is the same thing. Rowe.

As the king did excel in good commonwealth laws, so he had in secret a design to make use of them, as well for collecting of treasure as for correcting of manners; and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather. Bacon's Henry VII.

4. To invade; to harass with incursions. [From pergian, Saxon.]
And he that harrow'd hell with heavy frowne,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly bowre.
Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 10.

Most glorious Lord of life, that on this day
Did't make thy triumph over death and sin;
And having harrow'd hell, did't bring away
Captivity thence captive, us to win. Spenser's Sonnets.

5. To disturb; to put into commotion. [This should rather be written harry, harer, French.]
Most like: it harrowed me with fear and wonder. Shakespeare.

H A R

Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and care. Milish.
Harrow now out and weal away, he cried;
What dismal day hath sent this curld light,
To see my lord so deadly damnify'd? Fairy Queen, b. ii.

HA'ROW. interj. An exclamation of sudden distress. Now out of use.

HA'ROWER. n. f. [from harrow.]
1. He who harrows.
2. A kind of hawk. Ainsworth.

To HA'RRY. v. a. [harer, French.]
1. To tease; to harry; to ruffle.
Thou must not take my former sharpness ill.
—I repeat me much. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

That I to harry'd him.
2. In Scotland it signifies to rob, plunder, or oppress: as, one harried a wife; that is, he took the young away: as also, he harried me out of house and home; that is, he robbed me of my goods, and turned me out of doors. See To HARROW.

HARSH. adj. [harsh, German, Skinner.]
1. Austere; roughly four.

Our nature here is not unlike our wine;
Some sorts, when old, continue brisk and fine:
So age's gravity may seem severe,
But nothing harsh or bitter ought t' appear. Drakam.

Sweet, bitter, four, harsh and salt, are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes. Lake.

The same defect of heat which gives a fierceness to our natures, may contribute to that roughness of our language, which bears some analogy to the harsh fruit of colder countries. Swift to the Lord High Treasurer.

2. Rough to the ear.
A name unmusical to Volscian ears,
And harsh in sound to thine. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Age might, what nature never gives the young;
Have taught the smoothness of thy native tongue;
But satire needs not that, and wit will shine
Through the harsh cadence of a rugged line. Dryden.

The unnecessary consonants made their spelling tedious, and their pronunciation harsh. Dryden.

Thy lord commands thee now
With a harsh voice, and supercilious brow,
To serve duties. Dryden's Pers. Sat. 5.

3. Crabbed; morose; peevish.
He was a wife man and an eloquent; but in his nature harsh and haughty. Bacon's Henry VII.

Bear patiently the harsh words of thy enemies, as knowing that the anger of an enemy admonishes us of our duty. Taylor.

No harsh reflection let remembrance raise;
Forbear to mention what thou can't not praise. Prior.

A certain quickness of apprehension inclined him to kindle into the first motions of anger; but, for a long time before he died, no one heard an intemperate or harsh word proceed from him. Atterbury's Sermons.

4. Rugged to the touch.
Black feels as if we were feeling needles points, or some harsh sand; and red feels very smooth. Boyle on Colours.

5. Unpleasant; rigorous.
With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the preacher charm'd. Dryd.

HA'RSLEY. adj. [from harsh.]
1. Sourly; austere to the palate, as unripe fruit.

2. With violence; in opposition to gentleness, unless in the following passage it rather signifies unripe.

'Till, like ripe fruit, thou drop Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease
Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

3. Severely; morosely; crabbedly.
I would rather he was a man of a rough temper; that would treat me harshly, than of an effeminate nature. Addison.

4. Ruggedly to the ear.
My wife is in a wayward mood to-day:
I tell you, 'twould found harshly in her ears. Shakespeare.

Get from him why he puts on this confusion,
Grating to harshly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dangerous lunacy. Shaksp. Hamlet.

A hollow groan, a mum'ring wind arose;
The rings of iron that on the doors were hung;
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryd. Fables.

HA'RSNESS. n. f. [from harsh.]
1. Sourness; austere taste.

Take an apple and roll it upon a table hard: the rolling doth soften and sweeten the fruit, which is nothing but the smooth distribution of the spirits into the parts; for the unequal distribution of the spirits maketh the harshness. Bacon.

2. Roughness to the ear.
Neither can the natural harshness of the French, or the perpetual ill accent, be ever refined into perfect harmony like the Italian. Dryden.

Cannot I admire the height of Milton's invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harshness of their sound? Dryden.

Tis

H A R

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The found must seem an echo to the sense. Pope.

3. Ruggedness to the touch.
Harshness and ruggedness of bodies is unpleasant to the touch. Bacon's Natural History.

4. Crabbedness; moroseness; peevishness.
No, Regan, you shall never have my curse:
Thy tender-bellied nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness: her eyes are fierce, but thine
Do comfort and not burn. Shaksp. King Lear.

HART. n. f. [hart, Saxon.] A he-deer of the large kind;
the male of the doe.

That infant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like tell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.

The deer
And fearful harts do wander every where Amidst the dogs. Moy's Virgil's Georg.

HA'TSHORN. n. f.
Hartshorn is a drug that comes into use as many ways, and under as many forms, as any one in the whole materia medica.

What is used here are the whole horns of the common male deer, which fall off every year. This species is the fallow deer; but some tell us, that the medicinal hartshorn should be that of the true hart or stag, called the red deer. The salt of hartshorn is a great sudorific, and the spirit has all the virtues of volatile alkalies: it is used to bring people out of faintings by its pungency, holding it under the nose, and pouring down some drops of it in water. Hill's Mat. Med.

Ramose concretions of the volatile salts are observable upon the glass of the receiver, whilst the spirits of vipers and hartshorn are drawn. Woodward on Fossils.

HA'TSHORN. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
HA'TSHORN. n. f. A plant. A species of buckthorn plantain.

HA'TSHORN. n. f. [lingua cervina, Latin.] A plant.
It commonly grows out from the joints of old walls and buildings, where they are moist and shady. There are very few of them in Europe. Miller.

Hart's tongue is propagated by parting the roots, and also by seed. Mortimer's Husbandry.

HA'TSWORT. n. f. [tordylium, Latin.] A plant.
It is an umbelliferous plant, with a rose-shaped flower, consisting of five unequal heart-shaped petals, which are placed circularly and rest on the capsule, of which two flat seeds, which easily cast off their covering with a raised border, which are commonly indented.

It is an annual plant, and perishes soon after it has perfected its seed. It is found wild in several parts of England. Miller.

HA'VEST. n. f. [hæppest, Saxon.]
1. The season of reaping and gathering the corn.

As it ebbs, the seedman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

With harvest work he is worse than he was in the Spring. L'Estrange.

2. The corn ripened, gathered and inned.
From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd. Shak. H. VI.

When the father is too fondly kind,
Such seed he sows, such harvest shall he find. Dryden.

3. The product of labour.
Let these small cotts and hills suffice:
Let us the harvest of our labour eat;
'Tis labour makes the coarsest diet sweet. Dryden's Juven.

HA'VEST-HOME. n. f.
1. The long which the reapers sing at the feast made for having inned the harvest.

Your hay it is mow'd, and your corn is reap'd;
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd;
Come, my boys, come,
Come, my boys, come,
And merrily roar out harvest-home. Dryden's K. Arthur.

2. The time of gathering harvest.
At harvest-home, and on the shearing-day,
When he should thanks to Pan and Pales pay,
And better Ceres, trembling to approach
The little harrel. Dryden's Pers. Sat. 4.

3. The opportunity of gathering treasure.
His wife seems to be well favoured: I will use it as the key of the cuckold's rogues' coffers; and there's my harvest-home.

HA'VEST-LORD. n. f. The head reaper at the harvest.
Grant harvest-lord more by a penny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to do. Tuff. Husbandry.

HA'VESTER. n. f. [from harvest.] One who works at the harvest.

HA'VESTMAN. n. f. [harvest and man.] A labourer in harvest.

Like to a harvestman, that's talk'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

H A S

To HASH. v. n. [hacher, French.] To mince; to chop into small pieces, and mingle.

He rais'd his arm
Above his head, and rain'd a storm
Of blows so terrible and thick,
As if he meant to hash her quick. Hudibras, p. i.

What have they to complain of but too great variety, tho' some of the dishes be not served in the exactest order, and politeneess; but hashed up in haste. Garth.

HASK. n. f. This seems to signify a case or habitation made of rushes or flags.

Phœbus, weary of his yearly task,
Establish'd hath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes' bask. Spenser's Pastoral.

HA'SLET. n. f. [hasla, Ilandick, a bundle; haslet, haf- HA'SLET. } terau, hasiter, French.] The heart, liver, and lights of a hog, with the windpipe and part of the throat to it.

HASP. n. f. [hæp, Saxon, whence in some provinces it is yet called hasp.] A clasp folded over a staple, and fastened on with a padlock.

Have doors to open and shut at pleasure, with hasps to them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To HASP. v. n. [from the noun.] To shut with a hasp.
HA'SOCK. n. f. [hasok, German. Skinner.]

1. A thick mat on which men kneel at church.
He found his parishioners very irregular; and in order to make them kneel, and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a hassock and common prayer book. Addison.

2. In Scotland it is applied to any thing made of rushes or privet, on which a person may sit: it is therefore probable that hassock and hasp are the same.

HAST. The second person singular of haver.
HASTE. n. f. [hasle, French; hasle, Dutch.]
1. Hurry; speed; nimbleness; precipitation.

Spare him, death!
Let not pity with her tears
Keep such distance from thine ears:
But O, thou wilt not, canst not spare!
Haste hath never time to hear. Craiklaw.

Our lines reform'd, and not compos'd in haste,
Polish'd like marble, would like marble last;
But as the present, so the last age writ;
In both we find like negligence and wit.

In as much haste as I am, I cannot forbear giving an example. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The wretched father, running to their aid
With pious haste, but vain, they next invade. Dryden.

2. Passion; vehemence. Pf. cxvi. 11.
I said in my haste, all men are liars.

To HASTE. v. n. [hasle, French; hasle, Dutch.]
To HA'STEN. v. a. To push forward; to urge on; to precipitate; to drive to a swifter pace.

1. To make haste; to be in a hurry; to be busy; to be speedy.
I have not hasten'd from being a pastor to follow thee. Jer.

2. To move with swiftness.
'Tis Cinna, I do know him by his gait;
He is a friend. Cinna, where haste you to? Shakespeare.

They were troubled and hasten'd away. Pf. xlviii. 5.
All those things are pass'd away like a shadow, and as a post that hasten'd by. Wisd. v. 9.

Hasting to pay his tribute to the seas,
Like mortal life to meet eternity. Denham.

These rites perform'd, the prince, without delay,
Hastes to the nether world, his destin'd way. Dryden's Æn.

To distant Sparta, and the spacious waste
Of sandy Pyle, the royal youth shall haste. Pope's Odyssey.

Soon as the sun awakes the sprightly court,
Leave their repose, and hasten to the sport. Prior.

To HASTE. v. a. To push forward; to urge on; to precipitate; to drive to a swifter pace.

Let it be so hasten'd, that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

All hopes of succour from your arms is past;
To save us now, you must our ruin haste. Dryden.

Each sees his lamp with diff'rent lustre crown'd;
Each knows his course with diff'rent periods bound;
And in his passage through the liquid space,
Nor hastens, nor retards his neighbour's race. Prior.

HA'STENER. n. f. [from hasten.]
HA'STILY. adj. [from hasty.] One that hastens or hurries.

1. In a hurry; speedily; nimbly; quickly.
A voice, that called loud and clear,
Come hither, hither, O come hastily!
If your grace incline that we should live,
You must not, sir, too hastily forgive. Fa. Queen.

The next to danger, hot pursu'd by fate,
Half cloth'd, half naked, hastily retire. Waller.

2. Rashly; precipitately.
Without considering consequences, we hastily engaged in a war which hath cost us sixty millions. Swift.

3. Passionately; with vehemence.
HASTINESS. n. f. [from hasty.]

1. Haste;

H A T

1. Haste; speed.
A fellow being out of breath, or seeming to be for haste, with humble hastings told Baſilius. Sidney, b. i.
2. Hurry; precipitation.
There is moſt juſt cauſe to fear, left our hastings to embrace a thing of ſo perilous conſequence, ſhould cauſe poſterity to feel thoſe evils. Hooker, Preface.
The turns of his verſe, his breakings, his propriety, his numbers, and his gravity, I have as far imitated as the poverty of our language, and the hastings of my performance, would allow. Dryden.
3. Angry teſtineſs; paſſionate vehemence.
HA'STINGS. n. f. [from hasty.] Peas that come early.
The large white and green hastings are not to be ſet 'till the cold is over. Martinet's Husbandry.
- HA'STY. adj. [from haste; hastig, Dutch.]
 1. Quick; ſpeedy.
Is all the countſel that we two have ſhar'd,
The ſifters vows, the hours that we have ſpent,
When we have chid the hasty footed time
For parting us. Shakeſp. Midſummer Night's Dream.
 2. Paſſionate; vehement.
He that is flow to wrath is of great underſtanding; but he that is hasty of ſpirit exalteth folly. Prov. xiv. 29.
 3. Raſh; precipitate.
Seeſt thou a man that is hasty in his words? There is more hope of a fool than of him. Prov. xxix. 20.
Be not raſh with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God. Ecc. v. 2.
 4. Early ripe.
Beauty ſhall be a fading flower, and as the hasty fruit before the Summer.
- HA'STY-PUDDING. n. f. A pudding made of milk and flower, boiled quick together; as alſo of oatmeal and water boiled together.
Sure hasty-pudding is thy chiefſt diſh.
With bullock's liver, or ſome ſtinking fiſh. Dorſet.
- HAT. n. f. [Sax. hatt; German. hat.] A cover for the head.
She's as big as he is; and there's her thrum hat, and her muſſer too. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windſor.
Out of meer ambition you have made
Your holy hat be ſtamp on the king's coin. Shak. H. VIII.
His hat was like a helmet, or Spaniſh montera. Bacon.
Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,
And with ſoft words his drooping ſpirits cheer'd;
His hat adorn'd with wings diſclos'd the god,
And in his hand he bore the ſleep compelling rod. Dryden.
- HA'TBAND. n. f. [from hat and band.] A ſtring tied round the hat.
They had hats of blue velvet, with fine plumes of divers colours, ſet round like hatbands. Bacon's New Atlantid.
Room for the noble gladiator I ſee
His coat and hatband threw his quality. Dryden's Juven.
- HA'TCASE. n. f. [from hat and case.] A ſlight box for a hat.
I might mention a hatcase, which I would not exchange for all the beavers in Great Britain. Addiſon's Spectator.
- TO HATCH. v. a. [from hachen, German, as Skinner thinks, from hachens, eghen, egg, eggs, Sax.].
 1. To produce young from eggs by the warmth of incubation.
When they have laid ſuch a number of eggs as they can conveniently cover and hatch, they give over, and begin to ſit. Ray on the Creation.
He kindly ſpreads his ſpacious wings,
And hatches plenty for th' enſuing Spring.
The tepid caves, and fens and ſhores,
Their brood as numerous hatch from th' eggs, that ſoon
Burling with kindly rapture, forth diſclos'd Their callow young. Milton's Paraſiſe Loſt, b. vii.
 2. To quicken the egg by incubation.
Others hatch their eggs and tend the birth, 'till it is able to ſhift for itſelf. Addiſon's Spectator.
 3. To produce by precedent action.
 4. To form by meditation; to contrive.
Which thing they very well know, and I doubt not, will eaſily confeſs, who live to their great both toil and grief, where the blaſphemies of Ariſtians are renewed by them; who, to hatch their heresy, have choſen thoſe churches as fitteſt neſts where Athanaſius's creed is not heard. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.
He was a man harmleſs and faithful, and one who never hatched any hopes prejudicial to the kings, but always intended his ſafety and honour. Hayward.
 5. [From hachen, to cut.] To ſhade by lines in drawing or graving.
Who fiſt ſhall wound, through others arms, his blood appearing freſh, Shall win this ſword, ſilver'd and hatcht. Chapm. Iliads.
Such as Agamemnon and the hand of Greece.
Should hold up high in braſs; and ſuch again
As venerable Neſtor, hatcht in ſilver,
Should with a bond of air, ſtrong as the axle-tree
On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian ears

H A T

- To his experienc'd tongue. Shakeſp. Troil. and Creſſida.
Thoſe tender hairs, and thoſe hatching ſtrokes of the pencil, which make a kind of minced meat in painting, are never able to deceive the fight. Dryden's Duſſefroy.
- TO HATCH. v. n.
1. To be in the ſtate of growing quick.
He obſerved circumſtances in eggs, whiſt they were hatching, which varied. Bzile.
2. To be in a ſtate of advance towards effect.
HATCH. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. A brood excluded from the egg.
 2. The act of excluſion from the egg.
 3. Diſcloſure; diſcovery.
Something's in his foul,
O'er which his melancholy fits on brood;
And, I do doubt, the hatch and the diſcloſe
Will be ſome danger. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
 4. [Hæca, Saxon; hæce, Dutch, a bolt.] The half door; the opening over the door.
Something about, a little from the right,
In at the windows, or eſe o'er the hatch. Shakeſp. K. John.
 5. [In the plural.] The doors or openings by which they deſcend from one deck or floor of a ſhip to another.
To the king's ſhip, inviſible as thou art,
There ſhalt thou find the mariners aſleep
Under the hatches. Shakeſp. Tempeſt.
There ſhe's hid;
The mariners all under hatches ſtow'd. Shakeſp. Tempeſt.
So ſeaſ, impell'd by winds with added pow'r,
Aſſault the ſides, and o'er the hatches tow'r. Dryden.
A ſhip was faſten'd to the ſhore;
The plank was ready laid for ſafe aſcent,
For ſhelter there the trembling ſhadow bent,
And ſkip'd and ſeul'd, and under hatches went. Dryden.
6. To be under HATCHES. To be in a ſtate of ignominy, poverty, or depreſſion.
He affures us how this fatherhood began in Adam, continued its courſe 'till the flood, got out of the ark with Noah, made and ſupported all the kings of the earth, 'till the captivity in Egypt, and then the poor fatherhood was under hatches. Lake.
7. Hatches. Floodgates. Amſworth.
- TO HATCH. v. a. [from hachen, German.] To beat flax ſo as to ſeparate the fibrous from the brittle part.
This albetos ſeems different from that mentioned by Kircher in his deſcription of China; which he ſays, put into water, moulders like clay; and is a fibrous ſmall excreſcence, like hairs growing upon the ſtones; and for the hatching, ſpinning, and weaving it, he refers to his mundus ſubterraneus. Woodward on Felliſh.
- HA'TCHEL. n. f. [from the verb; hachel, German.] The inſtrument with which flax is beaten.
HA'TCHELLER. n. f. [from hatchel.] A beater of flax.

And to the field he ſpeedeth. Spencer's Poſtural.
Ye ſhall have a hempen caudle then, and the help of a hatchet. Shakeſp. Henry VI. p. iii.
Nails, hammers, hatchets ſharp, and halters ſtrong,
Swords, ſpears, twice dipt in the dire ſtains
Of brothers blood. Craſſus.
Tyrreus, the foſter-father of the beaſt,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horry fiſt. Dryden's Ann.
Our countryman preſented him with a curious hatchet; and aſking him whether it had a good edge, tried it upon the donor. Addiſon's Freeholder.
- HA'TCHET-FACE. n. f. An ugly face; ſuch, I ſuppoſe, as might be hewn out of a block by a hatchet.
An ape his own dear image will embrace;
An ugly beau adorns a hatchet-face. Dryden.
- HA'TCHMENT. n. f. [Corrupted from atchement. See ATCHEMENT.] Armorial eſcutcheon placed over a door at a funeral.
His means of death, his obſcure funeral,
No trophy, ſword, nor hatchment o'er his bones,
No noble rites nor formal oblation,
Cry to be heard. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
- HA'TCHWAY. n. f. [hatches and way.] The way over or through the hatches.
TO HATCH. v. a. [Saxon, hatchan.] To deſtroy; to abhor; to abominate; to regard with the paſſion contrary to love.
You are, I think, aſſur'd I love you not.
—I am aſſur'd, if I be meaſur'd rightly,
Your majesty hath no juſt cauſe to hate me. Shak. Hen. IV.
Do all men kill the thing they do not love?
—Hates any man the thing he would not kill?
—Ev'ry offence is not a hate at fiſt. Shakeſp. Lear.
Thoſe old inhabitants of thy holy land thou hatcht for doing moſt odious works. W. J. xii. 4.

Or if the earlier season lead
To the tann'd bay cock in the mead.
Bring them for food sweet boughs and ofians cut,
Nor all the Winter long thy bay rick shut.
Some turners turn long and slender frigs of ivory, as small as an bay stalk,
The best manure for meadows is the bottom of bay mows and bay stacks.
Hay and oats, in the management of a groom, will make ale.
By some bay cock, or some shady thorn,
He bids his beads both even song and morn.
Blouzelinda, in a gamefome mood,
Behind a bay cock loudly laughing stood.
The hum of bees inviting sleep sincere,
Into the guiltless breast, beneath the shade,
Or thrown at large amid' the fragrant bay. Thom's Autumn.
To dance the HAY. To dance in a ring: probably from dancing round a hay cock.
I will play on the tabor to the worthies,
And let them dance the bay. Shakefp. Love's Labour Lost.
This maids think on the hearth they see,
When fires well high consumed be,
There dancing bays by two and three,
Just as your fancy calls them. Drayton's Nymphid.
The gum and glitt'ning, which with art
And study'd method, in each part
Hangs down the heart,
Looks just as if that day,
Snails there had crawl'd the bay. Suckling.
HAY. n. f. [from haie, French, a hedge.] A net which incloses the haunt of an animal.
Cones are destroyed by bays, curs, spaniels, or tumblers bred up for that purpose. Mortimer's Husbandry.
HAYMAKER. n. f. [bay and make.] One employed in drying grafs for hay.
As to the return of his health and vigour, were you here, you might enquire of his haymakers. Pope to Swift.
HAZARD. n. f. [hazard, French; azar, Spanish; bafsi, Ru-nick, danger.]
1. Chance; accident; fortuitous hap.
I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die. Shakefp. Rich. III.
I will upon all hazards well believe
Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well. Shak.
Where the mind does not perceive this connection, there mens opinions are not the product of judgment, but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice and without direction. Locke.
2. Danger; chance of danger.
We are bound to yield unto our Creator, the father of all mercy, eternal thanks, for that he hath delivered his law unto the world; a law wherein so many things are laid open, as a light which otherwise would have been buried in darkness, not without the hazard, or rather not with the hazard, but with the certain loss of thousands of souls, most undoubtedly now saved. Hooker, b. i.
The hazard I have run to see you here, should inform you that I love not at a common rate. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Men are led on from one stage of life to another in a condition of the utmost hazard, and yet without the least apprehension of their danger. Rogers's Sermons.
3. A game at dice.
The duke playing at hazard at the groom-porter's, in much company, held in a great many hands together, and drew a huge heap of gold. Swift.
To HAZARD. v. a. [hazard, French.] To expose to chance;
to put into danger.
They might, by persisting in the extremity of that opinion, hazard greatly their own estates, and so weaken that part which their places now give. Hooker, b. v.
It was not in his power to adventure upon his own fortune, or bearing a public charge to hazard himself against a man of private condition. Hayward.
To HAZARD. v. n.
1. To try the chance.
I pray you tarry; pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong,
I lose your company. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.
2. To adventure.
She from her fellow-provinces would go,
Rather than hazard to have you her foe. Waller.
HAZARDABLE. adj. [from hazard.] Venturefome; liable to chance.
An hazardable determination it is, unto fluctuating and indis-
ferent effects, to affix a positive type or period. Brown.
HAZARDER. n. f. [from hazard.] He who hazards.
HAZARDRY. n. f. [from hazard.] Temerity; precipitation; rash adventurousness. Obsolesc.
Hazy wrath, and heedless hazardry,
Do breed repentance late, and lasting infamy. Fairy Queen.

HEA

HAZARDOUS. adj. [hazardous, Fr. from hazard] Dangerous; exposed to chance.
Grant that our hazardous attempt prove vain,
We feel the worst, secur'd from greater pain. Dryden.
HAZARDOUSLY. adv. [from hazardous.] With danger or chance.
HAZE. n. f. [The etymology unknown.] Fog; mist.
To HAZE. v. n. To be foggy or misty.
To HAZE. v. a. To fright one. Atterbury.
HAZEL. n. f. [Hezel, Saxon; corylus, Latin.]
It hath male flowers growing at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree; the nuts grow in clusters, and are closely joined together at the bottom, each being covered with an outward hulk or cup, which opens at the top, and when the fruit is ripe it falls out: the leaves are roundish and intire.
The species are hazelnut, cobnut, and filbert. The red and white filberts are mostly esteemed for their fruit. Miller.
Kate, like the hazel twig,
Is straight and slender; and as brown in hue
As hazelnuts, and sweeter than the kernels. Shakefp. Lear.
Her chariot is an empty hazel nut. Shak. Rom. and Jul.
Why fit we not beneath the grateful shade,
Which hazels, intermix'd with elms, have made? Dryden.
There are some from the size of a hazel nut to that of a man's fist. Woodward on Fossils.
HAZEL. adj. [from the noun.] Light brown; of the colour of hazle.
Chafe a warm dry soil, that has a good depth of light hazel mould. Mortimer's Husbandry.
HAZELLY. adj. Of the colour of hazel; a light brown.
Uplands consist either of sand, gravel, chalk, rock or stone, hazelly loam, clay, or black mould. Mortimer's Husbandry.
HAZZY. adj. [from haze.] Dark; foggy; misty.
Our clearest day here is misty and hazy; we see not far, and what we do see is in a bad light. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Of engender'd by the hazy North,
Myriads on myriads, infect armies waft. Thomson.
He. pronoun. gen. him; plur. they; gen. them. [by Dutch; he,
Saxon. It seems to have borrowed the plural from they, plural bay, dative byrum.]
1. The man that was named before.
All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Caesar. Shakefp. Lear.
If much you note him,
You shall offend him, and increase his passion;
Feed and regard him not. Shakefp. Lear's Madmen.
I am weary of this moon; would he would change. Shakefp.
Adam spoke;
So cheer'd by his fair spouse, and she was cheer'd. Milton.
When Adam wak'd, he on his side
Leaning half rais'd hung over her.
Thus talking, hand in hand along they pass'd
On to their blissful bowers. Milton.
Him first, him last, him midst.
2. The man; the person. It sometimes stands without reference to any foregoing word.
He is never poor
That little hath, but he that much desires. Daniel.
3. Man or male being.
Such mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law
Is death to any he that utters them. Shakefp. Rom. and Jul.
Ay, crook-back, here I stand to answer thee, or any he the proudest of thy fort. Shakefp. Henry VI. p. iii.
Tros and his race the sculptor shall employ,
And he the god who built the walls of Troy. Dryd. Virg.
4. Male: as, a he bear, a he goat. It is used where the male and female have not different denominations. Bacon's N. Hist.
The he's in birds have the fairest feathers. Bacon's N. Hist.
5. In the two last senses he is rather a noun than pronoun.
HEAD. n. f. [Heagor, Saxon; heaf, Dutch; heved, old English, whence by contraction head.]
1. The part of the animal that contains the brain or the organ of sensation or thought.
Vein healing verven, and head purging dill. Spenser.
Over head up-grew Insufferable height of loftiest shade. Milton's Parad. Lost.
My head geers off, what filthy work you make. Dryden.
The dewy paths of meadows we will tread,
For crowns and chaplets to adorn thy head. Dryden.
I could still have offers, that some, who hold their heads higher, would be glad to accept. Swift.
2. Person as exposed to any danger or penalty.
What he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Who of all ages to succeed, but feeling
The evil on him brought by me, will curse
My head? Ill have our ancestor impute. Milt. Parad. Lost.
3. HEAD and EAR. The whole person.
In jingling rhimes well fortify'd and strong,
He fights intrench'd o'er head and ears in song. Granville.
4. Denomination of any animals. When

HEA

When Innocent XI. desired the marquis of Carpio to furnish thirty thousand head of swine, he could not spare them;
but thirty thousand lawyers he had at his service. Addison.
The tax upon pasturage was raised according to a certain rate per head upon cattle. Atterbury on Coins.
5. Chief; principal person; one to whom the rest are subordinate; leader; commander.
For their commons, there is little danger from them, except it be where they have great and potent heads. Bacon.
Your head I him appoint;
And by myself have sworn, to him shall bow
All knees in heav'n, and shall confess him lord. Milton.
The heads of the chief sects of philosophy, as Thales, Anaxagoras, and Pythagoras, did likewise consent to this tradition. Tillotson's Sermons.
6. Place of honour; the first place.
Notwithstanding all the justices had taken their places upon the bench, they made room for the old knight at the head of them. Addison's Spectator.
7. Place of command.
An army of fourscore thousand troops, with the duke of Mariborough at the head of them, could do nothing against an enemy. Addison on the War.
8. Countenance; presence.
Richard not far from hence hath hid his head. Sh. R. II.
With Cain go wander through the shade of night,
And never show thy head by day or light. Shak. Rich. II.
Ere to-morrow's sun shall show his head. Dryden.
9. Understanding; faculties of the mind.
The wench laid their heads together. L'Estrange.
A fox and a goat went down a well to drink: the goat fell to hunting which way to get back; oh, says Reynard, never trouble your head, but leave that to me. L'Estrange.
Work with all the ease and speed you can, without breaking your head, and being to very industrious in starting scruples. Dryden's Duress.
The lazy and inconsiderate took up their notions by chance, without much beating their heads about them. Locke.
If a man shews that he has no religion, why should we think that he beats his head, and troubles himself to examine the grounds of this or that doctrine. Locke.
When in ordinary discourse we say a man has a fine head, we express ourselves metaphorically, and speak in relation to his understanding; and when we say of a woman she has a fine head, we speak only in relation to her comode. Addison.
We laid our heads together, to consider what grievances
the nation had suffered under king George. Addison's Freeholder.
10. Face; front; fore part.
The gathering crowd pursues;
The ravishers turn head, the fight renews. Dryden.
11. Resistance; hostile opposition.
Then made he head against his enemies,
And hymner flew. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Sometimes hath Henry Bolingbroke made head against my power. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. i.
Two valiant gentlemen first making head against them, seconded by half a dozen more, made forty of them run away.
Raleigh's Apology.
Sin having depraved his judgment, and got possession of his will, there is no other principle left him naturally, by which he can make head against it. South's Sermons.
12. Spontaneous resolution.
The bordering wars in this kingdom were made altogether by volunteers, upon their own head, without any pay or commission from the state. Davies on Ireland.
13. State of a deer's horns, by which his age is known.
It was a buck of the first head. Shakefp. Love's Labour Lost.
The buck is called the fifth year a buck of the first head. Shak.
14. Individual. It is used in numbers or computation.
If there be six millions of people, then there is about four acres for every head. Graunt's Bill of Mortality.
15. The top of any thing bigger than the rest.
His spear's head weighed six hundred shekels of iron. 1 Sa.
As high
As his proud head is rais'd towards the sky,
So low towards hell his roots descend. Denham.
Trees, which have large and spreading heads, would lie with their branches up in the water.
If the buds are made our food, they are called heads or tops; so heads of aparagus and artichokes. Watt's Logick.
It is an equivocal term; for it signifies the head of a nail, or of a pin, as well as of an animal. Watt's Logick.
16. Place of chief resort.
The horse took the alarm, and made their escape to Winchester, the head quarters. Clarendon, b. viii.
17. The fore part of any thing, as of a ship.
By galleys with brazen heads the might transport over In-dis at once three hundred thousand foldiers. Raleigh's History of the World.
On oozy ground his galleys moor;
Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore. Dryden.

18. That which rises on the top.
Let it stand in a tub four or five days before it be put into the cask, stirring it twice a day, and beating down the head on yeast into it. Mortimer's Husbandry.
19. The blade of an axe.
A man fetcheth a stroke with the axe to cut down the tree, and the head lippeth from the helve. Deutr. xix. 5.
20. Upper part of a bed.
Israel bowed upon the bed's head. Gen. xlvii. 31.
21. The brain.
As eastern priests in giddy circles run,
And turn their heads to imitate the sun. Pope's Essay.
22. Dress of the head.
Politick ladies think they gain a great point when they have teazed their husbands to buy them a laced head, or a fine petticoat. Swift.
23. Principal topics of discourse.
These heads are of a mixed order, and we propose only such as belong to the natural world. Burnet's Theol. of the Earth.
These heads are set down more fully in the arguments of each chapter. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Tis our great interest, and our chief duty, to satisfy ourselves on this head, upon which our whole conduct depends.
Atterbury's Sermons, Preface.
24. Source of a stream.
It is the glory of God to give; his very nature delighteth in it: his mercies in the current, through which they would pass, may be dried up, but at the head they never fail. Hooker.
The current by Gaza is but a small stream, rising between it and the Red sea, whose head from Gaza is little more than twenty English miles. Raleigh's History of the World.
Some did the song, and some the choir maintain,
Beneath a laurel shade, where mighty Po
Mounts up to woods above, and hides his head below. Dry.
25. Crisis; pitch.
The indispolution which has long hung upon me, is at last grown to such a head, that it must quickly make an end of me, or of itself. Addison's Spectator.
26. Power; influence; force; strength; dominion.
Within her breast though calm, her breast though pure,
Motherly cares and fears got head, and rais'd
Some troubled thoughts. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
God will not admit of the passionate man's apology, that he has so long given his unruly passions their head, that he cannot now govern nor controul them. South's Sermons.
27. Body; confus.
People under command chafe to consult, and after to march in order; and rebels, contrariwise, run upon an head together in confusion. Bacon's Henry VII.
Let all this wicked crew gather
Their forces to one head. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
28. Power; armed force.
My lord, my lord, the French have gather'd head. Shakefp.
At sixteen years,
When Tarquin made a head for Rome, he sought
Beyond the mark of others. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
A mighty and a fearful head they are,
As ever offer'd foul play in a state. Shakefp. Henry IV.
Far in the marches here we heard you were,
Making another head to fight again. Shakefp. Henry VI.
29. Liberty in running a horse.
He gave his able horse the head,
And bounding forward struck his agile heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade
Up to the rowel-head. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. ii.
30. It is very improperly applied to roots.
How turneps hide their swelling heads below,
And how the cloving coleworts upwards grow. Gay.
31. HEAD and SHOULDERS. By force; violently.
People that hit upon a thought that tickles them, will be still bringing it in by head and shoulders, over and over, in several companies. L'Estrange.
They can bring in every odd exception in grammar, every figure of speech, head and shoulders by main force, in spite of nature and their subject. Felton on the Cliffs.
To HEAD. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To lead; to influence; to direct; to govern.
Nor is what has been said of princes less true of all other governours, from him that heads an army to him that is master of a family, or of one single servant. South.
Abas, who seem'd our friend, is either fled,
Or, what we fear, our enemies does head. Dryd. Aurengz.
This lord had headed his appointed bands,
In firm allegiance to his king's commands. Prior.
2. To behead; to kill by taking away the head.
If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten years together, you'll be glad to give out a commission for more heads. Shakefp. Measure for Measure.
3. To fit any thing with a head, or principal part.
Headed with flints and feathers bloody dy'd,
Such as the Indians in their quivers hide. Fairy Queen.
Of

HEA

Of cornel-wood a spear upright,
Headed with piercing steel, and polish'd bright. Dryden.
4. To lop trees.
You must disbranch them, leaving only the summit entire:
unless the foil be very good, it may be necessary to head them too. Mortimer's Husbandry.
HE'ADACH. n. f. [head and ach.] Pain in the head.
From the cruel headach's,
Riches do not preserve. Sidney, b. i.
Nothing more exposes to headach, colds, catarrhs, and coughs, than keeping the head warm. Locke.
In the headach he orders the opening of the vein of the forehead. Arbutnot.
At some dear idle time,
Not play'd with headach, or the want of rhyme. Pope.
HE'ADBRAND. n. f. [head and brand.]
1. A fillet for the head; a topknot.
The Lord will take away the bonnets, and the headbands. If. iii. 20.
2. The band at each end of a book.
HE'ADBOROUGH. n. f. [head and borough.] A constable; a subordinate constable.
Here lies John Dod, a servant of God, to whom he is gone,
Father or mother, sister or brother, he never knew none;
A headborough and a constable, a man of fame,
The first of his house, and last of his name. Camden.
This none are able to break through,
Until they're freed by head of borough. Hudibras, p. i.
HE'ADDRESS. n. f. [head and dress.]
1. The covering of a woman's head.
There is not so variable a thing in nature as a lady's headdress: I have known it rise and fall. Addison's Spectator.
If ere with airy horns I planted heads,
Or discompos'd the head-dress of a prude. Pope.
2. Any thing resembling a head-dress, and prominent on the head.
Among birds the males very often appear in a most beautiful head-dress, whether it be a crest, a comb, a tuft of feathers, or a natural little plume, erected like a kind of pinnacle on the very top of the head. Addison's Spectator.
HE'ADER. n. f. [from head.]
1. One that heads nails or pins, or the like.
2. The first brick in the angle.
If the header of one side of the wall is toothed as much as the stretcher on the outside, it would be a stronger toothing, and the joints of the headers of one side would be in the middle of the stretchers of the course they lie upon of the other side. Mason's Mech. Exerc.
HE'ADGARGLE. n. f. [head and gargle.] A disease, I suppose, in cattle. Mortimer.
For the headgargle give powder of fenugreek. Mortimer.
HE'ADINESS. n. f. [from heady.] Hurry; rashness; stubbornness; precipitation; obstinacy.
If any will rashly blame such his choice of old and un-wonted words, him may I more justly blame and condemn, either of witless headiness in judging, or of headless hardiness in condemning. Spenser.
HE'ADLAND. n. f. [head and land.]
1. Promontory; cape.
An heroic play ought to be an imitation of an heroic poem, and consequently love and valour ought to be the subject of it: both these Sir William Davenant began to shadow; but it was so as discoverers draw their maps, with headlands and promontories. Dryden.
2. Ground under hedges.
Now down with the grafts upon headlands about,
That groweth in shadow so rank and so stout. Tupper.
HE'ADLESS. adj. [from head.]
1. Without an head; beheaded.
His shining helmet he 'gan soon unlace,
And left his headless body bleeding at the place. Fairy Queen.
Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood,
I would remove these tedious stumbling blocks,
And smooth my way upon their headless necks. Shak. H. VI.
On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king,
A headless carcass, and a nameless thing. Denham.
Prickly stubs, instead of trees, are found;
Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.
2. Without a chief.
They rested not until they had made the empire stand headless about seventeen years. Raleigh's Essays.
3. Obstinate; inconsiderate; ignorant; wanting intellects:
perhaps for headless.
If any will rashly blame such his choice of old unwonted words, him may I more justly blame and condemn, either of witless headiness in judging, or of headless hardiness in condemning. Spenser.
HE'ADLONG. adv.
1. Rashly; thoughtless.
2. Suddenly; precipitate.
It suddenly fell from an excess of favour, which, many examples having taught them, never slopt his race 'till it came to a headlong overthrow. Sidney, b. ii.

HEA

HE'ADLONG. adv. [head and long.]
1. With the head foremost. It is often doubtful whether this word be adjective or adverb.
I'll look no more,
Left my brain turn, and the deficient fight Topple down headlong. Shak. King Lear.
Who, while he steering view'd the stars, and bore
His course from Africk to the Latian shore, Fell headlong down. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.
Headlong from thence the glowing fury springs,
And o'er the Theban palace spreads her wings. Pope.
2. Rashly; without thought; precipitately.
To give Ahab such warning, as might infallibly have prevented his destruction, was effected by him evil; and to push him on headlong into it, because he was fond of it, was accounted good. South's Sermons.
Some ask for envy'd pow'r, which publick hate
Pursues and hurries headlong to their fate;
Down go the titles. Dryden's Juv. Sat. x.
3. Hastily; without delay or repitance.
Unhappy offspring of my teeming womb!
Dragg'd headlong from thy cradle to thy tomb. Dryden.
4. It is very negligently used by Shakespeare.
Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave. Shak. H. VI.
HE'ADMOULD-SHOT. n. f. [head, mould, and shot.] This is when the futures of the skull, generally the coronal, ride; that is, have their edges shot over one another; which is frequent in infants, and occasions convulsions and death. Quincy.
HE'ADPIECE. n. f. [head and piece.]
1. Armour for the head; helmet; morion.
I pulled off my headpiece, and humbly intreated her pardon, or knowledge why she was cruel. Sidney, b. ii.
The word is giv'n; with eager speed they lace
The shining headpiece, and the shield embrace. Dryden.
Another reason for this fiction was their wearing a headpiece, or martial vizor, that had but one light through it.
This champion will not be in such haste to come into the field, before his great blunderbuss can be got ready, his old rusty breastplate scoured, and his cracked headpiece mended. Swift.
2. Understanding; force of mind.
'Tis done by some fevers
Of headpiece extraordinary, lower menses
Perchance are to this business purblind. Shak. Winter's Tale.
Eumenes had the best headpiece of all Alexander's captains. Pridmore.
HE'ADQUARTERS. n. f. [head and quarters.] The place of general rendezvous, or lodgment for soldiers.
Those spirits, posted upon the out-guards, immediately scour off to the brain, which is the head-quarters, or office of intelligence, and there they make their report. Collier.
HE'ADSHIP. n. f. [from head.] Dignity; authority; chief place.
HE'ADSMAN. n. f. [head and man.] Executioner; one that cuts off heads.
Rods broke on our associates bleeding backs,
And headsmen lab'ring 'till they blurt their ax. Dryden.
HE'ADSTALL. n. f. [head and stall.] Part of the bridle that covers the head.
His horse near legg'd before, and with a half-cheek'd bit, and a headstall of sheep's leather, which being restrained to keep him from stumbling, hath been often burnt, and now repaired with knots. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.
HE'ADSTONE. n. f. [head and stone.] The first or capital stone.
The stone, which the builders refused, is become the headstone. Pf. cxviii. 24.
HE'ADSTRONG. adj. [head and strong.] Unrestrained; violent; ungovernable; resolute to run his own way: as a horse whose head cannot be held in.
An example, for headstrong and inconsiderate zeal, no less fearful than Achitophel for proud and irreligious wisdom.
How now, my headstrong! where have you been gadding?
—Where I have learnt me to repent the sin
Of disobedient opposition. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.
But such a headstrong potent fault it is,
That it but mocks reproof. Shak. Twelfth Night.
He ill aspires to rule
Cities of men or headstrong multitudes,
Subject himself to anarchy within. Milton's Paradise Lost.
There's no opposing the torrent of a headstrong multitude. L'Estrange.
Now let the headstrong boy my will controul!
Virtue's no slave of man; no sex confines the soul:
I, for myself, th' imperial seat will gain,
And he shall wait my leisure for his reign. Dryd. Aureng-zeib.

HEA

Your father's folly took a headstrong course;
But I'll rule yours, and teach you love by force. Dryden.
I'll try if yet I can reduce to reason
This headstrong youth, and make him spurn at Cato. Addison.
Why there it is, you will be both judge and party: I am sorry thou discoverest so much of thy headstrong humour. Arb.
Can we forget how the mad headstrong rout
Defy'd their prince to arms, nor made account
Of faith or duty, or allegiance sworn? Phillips.
HE'ADWORKMAN. n. f. [head work and man.] The foreman, or chief servant over the rest.
Can Wood be otherwise regarded than as the mechanick,
the headworkman, to prepare his furnace, metal, and stamps?
Swift's Address to Parliament.
HE'ADY. adj. [from head.]
1. Rash; precipitate; hasty; violent; ungovernable; hurried on with passion.
Take pity of your town and of your people,
While yet the cool and temperate wind of grace
O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds
Of heady murder, spoil and villany. Shak. Henry V.
I am advised what I say:
Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine,
Nor, heady rash, provok'd with raging ire;
Albeit my wrongs might make one wiler mad. Shakespeare.
I'll forbear,
And am fall'n out with my more heady will,
To take the indispo'd and sickly fit
For the found man. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current scowling faults;
Nor ever hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his feat, and all at once,
As in this king. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Wives, the readiest helps
To betray head husbands, rob the easy. Ben. John's Catil.
Men, naturally warm and heady, are transported with the greatest flush of good nature. Addison's Freeholder.
2. Apt to affect the head.
I was entertained with a sort of wine which was very heady, but otherwise seem'd to be fact. Boyle.
Since hearty beef and mutton will not do,
Here's julep-dance, pilsen of song and show:
Give you strong sense, the liquor is too heady;
You're come to farce, that's affix milk, already. Dryden.
Flow, Wellfed! flow, like thine inspirer, beer;
Heady, not strong; and foaming, though not full. Pope.
To HEAL. v. a. [balgan, Gothick; heilan, Saxon; heelen,

 Lies slumb'ring fulgent in the white abyss. Thomf. Winter.
 To HEAR. v. n. [pyran, Saxon; hoeren, Dutch.]

1. To enjoy the sense by which sounds are distinguished.
 Sound is nothing but a certain modulation of the external air, which, being gathered by the external ear, beats, as is supposed, upon the membrana tympani, which moves the four little bones in the tympanum: in like manner as it is beat by the external air, these little bones move the internal air which is in the tympanum and vestibulum; which internal air makes an impression upon the auditory nerve in the labyrinth and cochlea, according as it is moved by the little bones in the tympanum: so that, according to the various reflexions of the external air, the internal air makes various impressions upon the auditory nerve, the immediate organ of hearing; and these different impressions represent different sounds. Quincy.
 The object of hearing is sound, whose variety is so great, that it brings in admirable store of intelligence. Hulder.

2. To listen; to hearken.
 Since 'tis your command, what you so well
 Are pleas'd to hear, I cannot grieve to tell. Denham.
 3. To be told; to have an account.

 as to hear her speeches, and yet she not perceive the hearers of her lamentation. Sidney, b. ii.

St. John and St. Mathew, which have recorded these fer-mons, heard them; and being hearers, did think themselves as well respected as the parishites. Hooker, b. v. f. 19.

Words, be they never so few, are too many, when they benefit not the hearers. Hooker, b. v.

The hearers will shed tears,
 And say, alas, it was a piteous deed! Shakespeare's Henry VI.
 Tell thou the lamentable fall of me,
 And send the hearers weeping to their beds. Shakespeare's Richard II.

Plays in themselves have neither hopes nor fears;
 Their fate is only in their hearers ears. Ben. Johnson.
 Her hearers had no share
 In all the spoke, except to stare. Swift.

 of the cause, or to bring it to another hearing before some other court. Dryden's Fables, Pref.
 Those of different principles may be betrayed to give you a fair hearing, and to know what you have to say for yourself.
Addison's Freeholder.

4. Reach of the ear.
 If we profess, as Peter did, that we love the Lord, and profess it in the hearing of men; charity is prone to hear all things, and therefore charitable men are likely to think we do so. Flouks, b. iii.

In our hearing the king charged thee, beware that none touch Abalam. 2 Sa. xviii. 12.

You have been talk'd of since your travels much,
 And that in Hamlet's hearing, for a quality
 Wherein they say you shine. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 The fox had the good luck to be within hearing. L'Estrange.

HEAT. n. f. [heat, heat, Saxon; heat, Danish.]

1. The sensation caused by the approach or touch of fire. Heat is a very brisk agitation of the insensible parts of the object, which produces in us that sensation from whence we denominate the object hot, to what in our sensation is heat, in the object is nothing but motion. Locke.

The word heat is used to signify the sensation we have when we are near the fire, as well as the cause of that sensation, which is in the fire itself; and thence we conclude, that there is a sort of heat in the fire resembling our own sensation: whereas in the fire there is nothing but little particles of matter, of such particular shapes as are fitted to impress such motions on our flesh as excite the sense of heat. Watts.

2. The cause of the sensation of burning. The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burn by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hobbes, b. v.

After they came down into the valley, and found the intolerable heats which are there, and knew no means of lighter apparel, they were forced to begin the custom of going naked. Bacon's New Atlantis.

3. Hot weather. Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood; The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign; Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

The pope would not comply with the proposal, as fearing the heats might advance too far before they had finished their work, and produce a pestilence among the people. Addison.

4. State of any body under the action of the fire. The heats smiths take of their iron are a blood-red heat, a white flame heat, and a sparkling or welding heat. Maxon.

5. One violent action unintermitted. The continual agitations of the spirits must needs be a weakening of any constitution, especially in age; and many causes are required for refreshment betwixt the heats. Dryden.

6. The state of being once hot. I'll strike my fortune with him at a heat, And give him not the leisure to forget. Dryden's Aurengz.

7. A course at a race, between each of which courses there is an intermission. Feign'd zeal, you saw, set out the speedier pace; But the last heat, plain dealing won the race. Dryden.

8. Pimples in the face; flux. It has rais'd animosities in their hearts, and heats in their faces, and broke out in their ribbons. Addison's Freeholder.

9. Agitation of sudden or violent passion; vehemence of action. They seeing what forces were in the city with them, illud against the tyrant while they were in this heat, before practices might be used to differ them. Sidney, b. ii.

The friend hath left his friend; And the best quarrels, in the heat, are cur'd By those that feel their sharpness. Shakespeare's King Lear.

It might have pleas'd in the heat and hurry of his rage, but must have displeas'd in the cool sedate reflections of his mind. South's Sermons.

We have spilt no blood but in the heat of the battle, or the chase. Atterbury's Sermons.

One playing at hazard, held in many hands together, and drew a huge heap of gold; but, in the heat of play, never observed a sharper, who swept it into his hat. Swift.

Our state thinks not so: they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried. King Charles.

What can more gratify the Phrygian foe Than those dissembler's heats? Dryden's Homer.

10. Ardour of thought or elocution. Plead it to her With all the strength and heat of eloquence, Fraternal love and friendship can inspire. Addison's Cato.

11. To make hot; to endue with the power of burning.

Who taught that heav'n-directed spire to rise? Pope.
2. Taught by the powers of heaven.
O sacred weapon! left for truth's defence;
To all but heaven-directed hands deny'd;
The muse may give it, but the gods must guide. Pope.
- HEAVENLY. adj. [from heaven.]
1. Resembling heaven; supremely excellent.
As the love of heaven makes one heavenly, the love of virtue virtuous, so doth the love of the world make one become worldly. Sidney.
Not Maro's muse, who sung the mighty man;
Nor Pindar's heav'nly lyre, nor Horace when a swan. Dryden.
2. Celestial; inhabiting heaven.
Adoring first the genius of the place,
Then earth, the mother of the heav'nly race. Dryden's Æn.
- HEAVENLY. adv.
1. In a manner resembling that of heaven.
In these deep solitudes and awful cells,
Where heav'nly penitive contemplation dwells,
And ever-musing melancholy reigns,
What means this tumult in a vestal's veins? Pope.
2. By the agency or influence of heaven.
Truth and peace and love shall ever shine
About the supreme throne
Of him, whose happy-making light alone,
Our heav'nly guided soul shall climb. Milton.
- HEAVENWARD. adv. [from heaven and peap, Saxon.] Towards heaven.
I prostrate lay,
By various doubts impell'd, or to obey,
Or to object; at length, my mournful look Heav'nward erect, determin'd, thus I spoke. Prior.

will hebetate and clog his intellects. Arb. and Pope's M. Scrib.
- HEBETATION. n. f. [from hebetate.]
1. The act of dulling.
2. The state of being dulled.
- HEBETUDE. n. f. [hebetudo, Latin.] Dulness; obtuseness;
bluntness.
The pestilent seminaries, according to their grossness or subtlety, activity or hebetude, cause more or less truculent plagues. Harvey on the Plague.
- HEBRAISM. n. f. [hebraisme, French; hebraismus, Latin.] A Hebrew idiom.
Milton has infused a great many Latinisms, as well as Grecisms, and sometimes Hebraisms, into his poem. Spectator.
- HEBRAIST. n. f. [hebraeus, Latin.] A man skilled in Hebrew.
- HEBRICIAN. n. f. [from Hebrew.] One skilful in Hebrew.
The words are more properly taken for the air or ether than the heavens, as the best Hebricians understand them. Raleigh.
The nature of the Hebrew verse, as the meanest Hebrician knoweth, consists of uneven feet. Peacock.
- HECATOMB. n. f. [hecatombe, French; ἑκατόμβη, Greek.] A sacrifice of an hundred cattle.
In rich mens homes
I bid kill some beasts, but no hecatombs;
None starve, none surfeit so. Donne.
One of these three is a whole hecatomb,
And therefore only one of them shall die. Dryden.
Her triumphant sons in war succeed,
And slaughter'd hecatombs around 'em bleed. Addison.
- HECTICAL. adj. [hectique, French, from ἔξω.]
HECTICK. } adj. [hectique, French, from ἔξω.]
1. Habitual; constitutional.
This word is joined only to that kind of fever which is slow and continual, and ending in a consumption, is the contrary to those fevers which arise from a plethora, or too great fulness from obstruction, because it is attended with too lax a state of the excretory passages, and generally those of the skin; whereby so much runs off as leaves not resistance enough in the contractile vessels to keep them sufficiently distended, so that they vibrate oftener, agitate the fluids the more, and keep them thin and hot. Quincy.
A hectick fever hath got hold
Of the whole substance, not to be controul'd. Donne.
2. Troubled with a morbid heat.
No hectick student fears the gentle maid. Taylor.
- HECTICK. n. f. An hectick fever.
Like the hectick in my blood he rages,
And thou must cure me. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
- HECTOR. n. f. [from the name of Hector, the great Homeric warrior.]
1. A bully; a blustering, turbulent, perversive, noisy fellow.
Those usurping hecticks, who pretend to honour without religion, think the charge of a lye a blot not to be washed out but by blood. South's Sermons.
We'll take one cooling cup of nectar,
And drink to this celestial hector. Prior.
- TO HECTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To threaten; to treat with insolent authoritative terms.
They reckon they must part with honour together with their opinion, if they suffer themselves to be hectored out of
it. Government of the Tongue.
The weak low spirit, fortune makes her slave;
But she's a drudge, when hector'd by the brave. Dryden.
An honest man, when he came home at night, found another fellow domineering in his family, hectoring his servants, and calling for supper. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

HED

- TO HEDGATOR. v. n. To play the bully; to bluster.
They have attacked me, some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting and hedging, others folding and reviling. Stillingsfleet.
One would think the hedging, the forming, the fullen, and all the different species of the angry, should be cured. Speet.
Don Carlos made her chief director,
That the might o'er the servants hedger. Swift.
HEDERACEOUS. adj. [hederaceus, Lat.] Producing ivy. Dict.
HEDGE. n. f. [pege, Saxon.] A fence made round grounds with prickly bushes.
It is a good wood for fire, if kept dry; and is very useful for stakes in hedges. Mortimer's Husbandry.
The gardens unfold variety of colours to the eye every morning, and the hedges breath is beyond all perfume. Pope.
Through the verdant maze.
Of sweet-briar hedges I pursue my walk. Thomson.
HEDGES, prefixed to any word, notes something mean, vile, of the lowest class: perhaps from a hedge, or hedge-born man, a man without any known place of birth.
There are five in the first flew: the pedant, the braggart, the hedge-priest, the fool, and the boy. Shakespeare.
The clergy do much better than a little hedge, contemptible, illiterate vicar can be presumed to do. Swift.
A person, who, by his stile and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge-priest in Little Britain, proceeded gradually to an author. Swift.
TO HEDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To inclose with a hedge, or fence of wood dry or growing. Hedge thy possession about with thorns. Ecclus. xxviii. 24.
Those alleys must be hedged at both ends, to keep out the wind. Bacon, Essay 47.
2. To obstruct.
I will hedge up thy way with thorns. Hof. ii. 6.
3. To incircle for defence.
England, hedge'd in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes. Shakespeare, King John.
There's such divinity doth hedge a king,
That reason can but peep to what it would. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
4. To shut up within an inclosure.
It must not be paid and exported in ready money; so says our law; but that is a law to hedge in the cuckoo, and serves for no purpose: for if we export not goods, for which our merchants have money due to them, how can it be paid by bills of exchange?
5. To force into a place already full. This seems to be mistaken for edge. To edge in, is to put in by the way that requires least room; but hedge may signify to thrust in with difficulty, as into a hedge.
Bay not me,
I'll not endure it: you forget yourself
To hedge me in: I am a soldier. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.
When I was hasty, thou delay'dst me longer:
I prythee, let me hedge one moment more
Into thy promise; for thy life prelied. Dryden.
When you are sent on an errand, be sure to hedge in some business of your own. Swift, Directions to the Postman.
TO HEDGE. v. n. To shift; to hide the head.
I myself sometimes, hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch; and yet you rogue will enconce your rage, your catamountain looks, your red-lettice phrases. Shakespeare.
HEDGE-BORN. adj. [hedge and born.] Of no known birth; meanly born.
He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
And should, if I were worthy to be judge,
Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain,
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
HEDGE-FUMITORY. n. f. A plant. Ansforth.
HEDGE-HOG. n. f. [hedge and hog.]
1. An animal set with prickles, like thorns in an hedge.
Like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount
Their pricks at my foot-fall. Shakespeare, Tempest.
Few have belief to swallow, or hope enough to experience,
The collyrium of Albertus; that is, to make one see in the dark: yet thus much, according unto his receipt, will the right eye of an hedge-hog, boiled in oil, and preserved in a brazen vessel, effect. Erasmus, Vulgar Errors, b. i.
The hedge-hog hath his backside and flanks thick set with strong and sharp prickles; and besides, by the help of a muscle, can contract himself into a globular figure, and so withdraw his whole under part, head, belly and legs, within his thicket of prickles. Ray on the Creation.
2. A term of reproach.
Didst thou not kill this king?
—I grant ye.
—Doft grant me, hedge-hog?
3. A plant. Shakespeare, Richard III.
4. The globe-fish. Ansforth.

HEE

- HEDGE-HYSSOP. n. f. [hedge and hyssop.] A species of willow-wort.
Hedge-hyssop is a purging medicine, and a very rough one: externally it is said to be a vulnerary. Hill's Mat. Medica.
HEDGE-MUSTARD. n. f. A plant.
The flower has four leaves, expanded in a crucial form: the point becomes a long, slender, bivalve pod, divided by a partition into two cells, which contain many round seeds.
The species are five. Miller.
HEDGE-NETTLE. n. f. A plant. Ansforth.
HEDGE-NOTE. n. f. [hedge and note.] A word of contempt for low writing.
When they began to be somewhat better bred, they left these hedge-notes for another sort of poem, which was also full of pleasant railery. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.
HEDGE-PIG. n. f. [hedge and pig.] A young hedge-hog.
Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.
Thrice and once the hedge-pig whin'd. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
HEDGE-ROW. n. f. [hedge and row.] The series of trees or bushes planted for inclosures.
Sometime walking not unseen
By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green. Milton.
The fields in the northern side are divided by hedge-rows of myrtle. Berkeley to Pope.
HEDGE-SPARROW. n. f. [hedge and sparrow.] A sparrow that lives in bushes.
The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had its head bit off by its young. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
HEEDING-BILL. n. f. [hedge and bill.] A cutting hook used in making hedges.
Comes master Dametas with a hedging-bill in his hand, chaffing and swearing. Sidney.
HEEDER. n. f. [from hedge.] One who makes hedges.
The labour'd ox
In his loose traces from the furrow came,
And the swink'd hedger at his fupper fat. Milton.
He would be laughed at, that should go about to make a fine dancer out of a country hedger at past fifty. Lake.
TO HEED. v. a. [peban, Saxon.] To mind; to regard; to take notice of; to attend.
With pleasure Argus the musician heeds;
But wonders much at those new vocal reeds. Dryden.
He will no more have clear ideas of all the operations of his mind, than he will have all the particular ideas of any landscape or clock, who will not turn his eyes to it, and with attention heed all the parts of it. Lake.
HEED. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Care; attention.
With wanton heed and giddy cunning,
The melting voice through mazes running.
Take heed that, in their tender years, ideas, that have no natural cohesion, come not to be united in their heads. Lake.
Thou must take heed, my Portius;
The world has all its eyes on Cato's son. Addison's Cato.
2. Caution; fearful attention; suspicious watch.
Either wife bearing or ignorant carriage is caught as men catch diseases, one of another; therefore, let men take heed of their company. Shakespeare, Henry IV. p. ii.
Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:
Take heed ere summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.
3. Care to avoid.
We should take heed of the neglect or contempt of his worship. Tillotson's Sermons.
4. Notice; observation.
Speech must come by hearing and learning; and birds give more heed, and mark words more than beasts. Bacon.
5. Seriousness; staidness.
He did unseat them; and the first he view'd,
He did it with a serious mind; a heed
Was in his countenance. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
6. Regard; respectful notice.
It is a way of calling a man a fool, when no heed is given to what he says.
HEEDFUL. adj. [from heed.]
1. Watchful; cautious; suspicious.
Give him heedful note;
For I mine eyes will rivet to his face;
And, after, we will both our judgments join,
In censure of his seeming. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
2. Attentive; careful; observing.
I am commanded
To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart;
Where fame, late entering at his heedful ears,
Hath plac'd thy beauty's image and thy virtue. Shakespeare, H. VI.
To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had been like heedful of the other. Shakespeare.
Thou, heedful of advice, secure proceed;
My praise the precept is, be thine the deed. Pope's Odyssey.
HEEDFULLY. adv. [from heedful.] Attentively; carefully; cautiously.
Let the learner maintain an honourable opinion of his instructor, and heedfully listen to his instructions, as one willing to be led. Watts.
HEEDFULNESS. n. f. [from heedful.] Caution; vigilance; attention.
HEEDILY. adv. Cautiously; vigilantly. Dict.
HEEDINESS. n. f. Caution; vigilance. Dict.
HEEDLESS. adj. [from heed.] Negligent; inattentive; careless; thoughtless; regardless; unoblivious.
The heedless lover does not know
Whose eyes they are that wound him so. Waller.
Heedless of verse, and hopes of the crown,
Scarce half a wit, and more than half a clown,
Some ideas, which have more than once offered themselves to the senses, have yet been little taken notice of; the mind being either heedless, as in children, or otherwise employed, as in men. Dryden.
HEEDLESSLY. adv. [from heedless.] Carelessly; negligently; inattentively.
Whilst ye discharge the duty of matrimony, ye heedlessly slide into sin. Abraham and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.
HEEDLESSNESS. n. f. [from heedless.] Carelessness; thoughtlessness; negligence; inattention.
In the little harms they suffer from knocks and falls, they should not be pitted, but bid do so again; which is a better way to cure their heedlessness. Lake.
HEEL. n. f. [pele, Saxon.]
1. The part of the foot that protuberates behind.
He calls to mind his strength, and then his speed,
His winged heels, and then his armed head;
With these t' avoid, with that his fate to meet;
But fear prevails, and bids him trust his feet.
If the luxated bone be distorted backward, it lieth over the heel bone. Domban.
2. The whole foot of animals.
Pegasus appeared hanging off the side of a rock, with a fountain running from his heel. Addison's Guardian.
3. The feet, as employed in flight.
Nothing is commoner, in times of danger, than for men to leave their masters to bears and tygers, and shew them a fair pair of heels for't. L'Estrange's Fables.
4. To be at the heels. To pursue closely; to follow hard.
Sir, when comes your book forth?
—Upon the heels of my presentment. Shakespeare, Timon.
But is there no sequel at the heels of this Mother's admiration? Shakespeare, Hamlet.
Could we break our way
By force, and at our heels all hell should rise
With blackest infurrection, to confound Heaven's purest light. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
5. To pursue as an enemy.
The Spaniards fled on towards the North to seek their fortunes, being still chased by the English navy at their heels, until they were fain to give them over for want of powder. Bacon.
Want! hungry want! that hungry meagre fiend,
Is at my heels, and chases me in view. Oruay.
6. To follow close as a dependent.
Through proud London he came fighting on,
After th' admired heels of Bolingbroke. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
7. To lay by the heels. To fetter; to shackle; to put in gyves.
If the king blame me for't, I'll lay ye all
By th' heels, and suddenly; and on your heads Clap round fines for neglect. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
One half of man, his mind,
Is, sui juris, unconfin'd,
And cannot be laid by the heels. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 3.
I began to smoke that they were a parcel of mummies; and wondered that none of the Middlesex justices took care to lay some of them by the heels. Addison's Freeholder.
8. Any thing shaped like a heel.
At the other side is a kind of heel or knob, to break clots with. Mortimer's Husbandry.
9. The back part of a stocken: whence the phrase to be out at heels, to be worn out.
I've watch'd and travell'd hard;
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle:
A good man's fortune may grow out at heels. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
TO HEEL. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To dance.
I cannot sing,
Nor heel the high lavalot, nor sweeten talk. Shakespeare.
2. To lean on one side: as, the ship heels.
HEELER. n. f. [from heel.] A cock that strikes well with his heels.
HEEL-PIECE. n. f. [heel and piece.] A piece fixed on the hinder part of the shoe, to supply what is worn away.
TO HEEL-PIECE. v. a. [heel and piece.] To put a piece of leather on a shoe-heel.
Some blamed Mrs. Bull for new heel-piecing her shoes. Arb.
HEFT. n. f. [from heave.]
1. Heaving; effort.
May be in the cup
A spider steep'd, and one may drink; depart,

HEF

- And yet partake no venom; for his knowledge
Is not infected: but if one present
Th' abhor'd ingredient to his eye, make known
How he hath drunk, he cracks his gorge, his sides
With violent heft. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.
2. [For heft.] Handle.
His oily side devours both blade and heft. Waller.
HEGIRA. n. f. [Arabick.] A term in chronology, signifying the epocha, or account of time, used by the Arabians and Turks, who begin their computation from the day that Mahomet was forced to make his escape from the city of Mecca, which happened on Friday July 16, A. D. 622, under the reign of the emperor Heraclius. Harris.
HEIFER. n. f. [peah-pone, Saxon.] A young cow.
Who finds the heifer dead and bleeding fresh,
And fees fast by a butcher with an ax,
But will suspect 'twas he that made the slaughter? Shakespeare.
A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air, against rain. Bacon's Natural History.
For her the flocks refuse their verdant food,
Nor thrifty heifers seek the gliding flood. Pope's Winter.
HEIGH-HO. interj.
1. An expression of slight languour and uneasiness.
Heigh-ho! an't be not four by the day, I'll be hang'd. Shakespeare.
2. It is used by Dryden, contrarily to custom, as a voice of exultation.
We'll toss off our ale 'till we cannot stand,
And heigh-ho for the honour of old England. Dryden.
HEIGHT. n. f. [from high.]
1. Elevation above the ground; any place assigned.
Into what pit thou see'st,
From what height fall'n. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
2. Altitude; space measured upwards.
Abroad I'll study thee,
As he removes far off, that great heights takes. Dante.
There is in Ticinium, in Italy, a church that is in length one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty. Bacon's Natural History.
An amphitheatre appear'd,
Rais'd in degrees, to sixty paces rear'd;
That when a man was plac'd in one degree,
Height was allow'd for him above to see. Dryden.
Here fills the eye with terror and delight. Addison.
3. Degree of latitude.
Guinea lieth to the North sea, in the same height as Peru to the South. Abbot's Description of the World.
4. Summit; ascent; towering eminence.
From Alpine heights the father first descends;
His daughter's husband in the plain attends. Dryden's Aeneas.
Every man of learning need not enter into their difficulties, nor climb the heights to which some others have arrived. Watts.
5. Elevation of rank; station of dignity.
By him that rais'd me to this careful height,
From that contented hap which I enjoy'd,
I never did incense his majesty Against Clarence. Shakespeare's Richard III.
Ten kings had from the Norman conqueror reign'd,
When England to her greatest height attain'd,
Of pow'r, dominion, glory, wealth and state. Daniel.
6. The utmost degree; full completion.
Putrefaction doth not rise to its height at once. Bacon.
Did not she
Of Timna first betray me, and reveal
The secret, wrestled from me in the height
Of nuptial love profess'd? Milton's Agonistes.
Of God, whom to behold was then my height
Of happiness! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
7. Utmost exertion.
Come on, sir; I shall now put you to the height of your breeding. Shakespeare, All's well that ends well.
8. State of excellence; advance towards perfection.
Social duties are carried to greater heights, and enforced with stronger motives, by the principles of our religion. Addison.
TO HEIGHTEN. v. a. [from height.]
1. To raise higher.
2. To improve; to meliorate.
3. To aggravate.
Foreign states gave us their assistance in reducing our country to a state of peace; and which of them used their endeavours to lighten our confusions, and plunge us into all the evils of a civil war? Addison's Freeholder.
4. To improve by decorations.
As in a room, contrived for state, the height of the roof should bear a proportion to the area; so in the heightenings of poetry, the strength and vehemence of figures should be suited to the occasion. Dryden's Span. Fryar, Dedication.
HEINOUS. adj. [haineux, French, from hain, hate; or from the Teutonic heon, thame.] Atrocious; wicked in a high degree.

angels should attempt, it were most heinous and accursed sacrilege. Hooker, b. iii. f. 10.

This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye. Shakespeare's King John.

As it is a most heinous, so it is a most dangerous impiety to despise him that can destroy us. Tillotson's Sermons.

Heinously. adv. [from heinous.] Atrociously; wickedly.
Heinousness. n.f. [from heinous.] Atrociousness; wickedness.

He who can treat offences provoking to God as jests and trifles, must have very little sense of the heinousness of them. Rogers's Sermons.

Heir. n.f. [heire, old Fr. hæire, Latin.] One that is inheritor of any thing after the present possessor.

An heir signifies the eldest, who is, by the laws of England, to have all his father's land. Locke.

What lady is that?
—The heir of Alanfon, Rosaline her name. Shakespeare.

That I'll give my voice on Richard's side,
To bar my master's heirs in true descent, Shakespeare's Richard III.

Being heirs together of the grace of life. Pet. iii. 7.
The young extravagant heir had got a new steward, and was resolved to look into his estate before things grew desperate. Swift.

Sunk is the hero, and his glory lost,
And I his heir in misery alone. Pope's Odyssey.

The heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and a tenderness in their constitutions. Swift.

To heir. v.a. [from the noun.] To inherit.

His sons in blooming youth were snatch'd by fate;
One only daughter heir'd the royal state. Dryden's Æn.

Heiress. n.f. [from heir.] An inheritrix; a woman that inherits.

An heirless she, while yet alive;
All that was hers to him did give. Waller.

Heirless, though he married the heir of the crown, yet claimed no title to it during the life of his father-in-law. Dryden.

Heirless. adj. [from heir.] Without an heir; wanting one to inherit after him.

I still think of
The wrong I did myself; which was so much,
That heirless it hath made me. Shakespeare's Wint. Tale.

Heirship. n.f. [from heir.] The state, character, or privileges of an heir.

A layman appoints an heir or an executor in his will, to build an hospital within a year, under pain of being deprived of his heirship. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Heirloom. n.f. [heir and seloma, goods, Sax.] Any furniture or moveable decreed to descend by inheritance, and therefore inseparable from the freehold.

Achilles' sceptre was of wood,
Transmitted to the hero's line;
Thence through a long descent of kings
Came an heirloom, as Homer sings. Swift.

Hold. The preterite and part pass. of hold. Ecclus.

A rich man beginning to fall, is held up of friends.
If Minerva had not appeared and held his hand, he had executed his design. Dryden.

Helicacal. adj. [heliacque, Fr. from ἥλιος.] Emerging from the lustre of the sun, or falling into it.

Had they ascribed the heat of the season to this star, they would not have computed from its heliacal ascent. Brown.

Helicacally. adv. [from heliacal.]

From the rising of this star, not cosmically, that is, with the sun, but heliacally, that is, its emergence from the rays of the sun, the ancients computed their canicular days. Brown.

He is tempestuous in the Summer, when he rises heliacally; and rainy in the Winter, when he rises achronically. Dryden.

Helical. adv. [helice, Fr. from ἥλιος.] Spiral; with many circulations.

The screw is a kind of wedge, multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a velocity at one end of it. Wilkins.

Helicoid Parabola, in mathematics, or the parabolic spiral, is a curve which arises from the supposition of the axis of the common Apollonian parabola's being bent round into the periphery of a circle, and is a line then passing through the extremities of the ordinates, which do now converge towards the centre of the said circle. Harris.

Helicocentric. adj. [heliocentrique, Fr. ἥλιος, and κέντρον.] The heliocentric place of a planet is said to be such as it would appear to us from the sun, if our eye were fixed in its centre. Harris.

Helioscope. n.f. [helioscope, Fr. ἥλιος, and σκοπεῖν.] A sort of telescope fitted so as to look on the body of the sun, without offence to the eyes. Harris.

Heliotrope. n.f. [ἥλιος, and τροπέω; heliotrope, French; heliotropium, Latin.] A plant that turns towards the sun; but more particularly the turnsol, or sun-flower.

HEL

'Tis a common observation of flatterers, that they are like the heliotrope; they open only towards the sun, but shut and contract themselves at night, and in cloudy weather.

Helispherical. adj. [helix and sphere.] Government of the Tongue.

The helispherical line is the rhomb line in navigation, and is so called because on the globe it winds round the pole spirally, and fill comes nearer and nearer to it, but cannot terminate in it. Harris.

Helix. n.f. [helice, Fr. ἥλιος.] A spiral line; a circumsolution.

Find the true inclination of the screw, together with the certain quantity of water which every helix does contain. Wilkins's Dædalus.

Hell. n.f. [helle, Saxon.]

The pains of hell came about me; the snares of death overtook me. Palm xviii. 4.

The place at a running play to which those who are caught are carried.

Then couples three be straight allotted there;
They of both ends the middle two do fly;
The two that in mid-place, hell called were,
Must strive with waiting foot, and watching eye,
To catch of them, and them to hell to bear,
That they, as well as they, hell may supply. Sidney.

5. The place into which the taylor throws his shreds.
This trusty quire, he had, as well
As the bold Trojan knight, seen hell;
Not with a counterfeited pass
Of golden bough, but true gold lace. Hudibras, p. i.

In Covent-garden did a taylor dwell,
Who might deserve a place in his own hell. King's Coliery.

The infernal powers.
Much danger first, much did he sustain,
While Saul and hell crost his strong fate in vain. Cowley.

7. It is used in composition by the old writers more than by the modern.

Hell-black. adj. Black as hell.
The sea, with such a storm as his bare head
In hell-black might endure'd, would have boil'd up,
And quench'd the felled fires. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Hell-bred. adj. [hell and bred.] Produced in hell.
Heart cannot think what courage and what cries,
With soul enfolded smother and flashing fire,
The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the skies. Fairy Queen.

Hell-broth. n.f. [hell and broth.] A composition boiled up for infernal purposes.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting;

For a charm of pow'rful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Hell-doomed. adj. [hell and doom.] Consigned to hell.
And reckon't thou thyself with spirits of heav'n,
Fell-doom'd! and breath't defiance here and scorn,
Where I reign king? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Hell-governed. adj. Directed by hell.
Earth gape open wide and eat him quick,
As thou do't swallow up this good king's blood,
Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butcher'd. Shakespeare's R. III.

Hell-hated. adj. Abhorred like hell.
Back do I toss these treasons to thy head,
With the hell-bated lie o'erwhelm thy heart. Shakespeare's Lear.

Hell-haunted. adj. [hell and haunt.] Haunted by the devil.

Fierce Osmond clos'd me in the bleeding bark,
And bid me stand expos'd to the bleak winds,
And Winter's storms, and heav'n's inclemency,
Bound to the fate of this hell-haunted grove. Dryden.

Hell-bound. n.f. [helle punb, Saxon.]

1. Dogs of hell.
Thou had'st a Clarence too, and Richard kill'd him:
From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept
A hell-bound, that doth hunt us all to death. Shakespeare's R. III.

Now the hell-bound with superior speed
Had reach'd the dame, and, fast'ning on her side,
The ground with issuing streams of purple dy'd. Dryden.

2. Agent of hell.

HEL

I call'd
My hell-bound to lick up the draft, and filth,
Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed
On what was pure. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

Hell-kite. n.f. [hell and kite.] Kite of infernal breed. The term hell prefixed to any word notes detestation.

All my pretty ones?
Did you say all? What, all? Oh, hell-kite! all?
What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Hellebore. n.f. [helleborus, Latin.] Christmas flower.

It hath a digitated leaf: the flower consists of several leaves placed orbicularly, and expanding in form of a rose: in the centre of the flower rises the pointal, encompassed about the base with several little horns between the chives and petals, which turn to a fruit, in which the membranaceous husks are gathered into a little head, ending in an horn, opening long-wise, and full of roundish or oval seeds. Miller.

Hellebore White. n.f. [sevartrum, Latin.] A plant.

The flower is naked, consisting of six leaves, expanding in form of a rose: in the middle arises the pointal, surrounded by six threads, which turn to a fruit; in which three membranaceous sheaths are gathered into a little head, and are full of oblong seeds resembling a grain of wheat, and compassed by a leafy wing. Miller.

There are great doubts whether any of its species be the true hellebore of the ancients. Miller.

HENS-FEET. n. f. A kind of plant. Anyworth.
HENRANE. n. f. [hensyanus, Latin.] A plant.
The leaves are soft and hairy, growing alternately upon the branches: the cup of the flower is short, bell-shaped, and divided into five segments: the flower consists of one leaf, the bottom part of which is tubelose, but is expanded at the top, and divided into five segments, having five obtuse stamina: the fruit, which is inclosed within the calyx, resembles a pot with a cover to it, and is divided by a partition into two cells, which contain many small seeds. It is very often found growing upon the sides of banks and old dunghills. This is a very poisonous plant. Miller.
That to which old Socrates was cur'd,
Or henbane juice, to swell 'em 'till they burst. Dryden.
HENBIT. n. f. A plant.
In a scarcity in Silesia a rumour was spread of its raining millet-seed; but it was found to be only the seeds of the ivy-leaved speedwell, or small henbit. Derham's Phys. Theology.

7. From this source; from this original; from this store.
My Flora was my fun; for as
One fun, so but one Flora was:
All other faces borrowed hence.
Their light and grace, as stars do thence. Suckling.
8. From hence is a vicious expression, which crept into use even among good authors, as the original force of the word hence was gradually forgotten.
An ancient author prophesied from hence,
Behold on Latian shores a foreign prince!
From the same parts of heav'n his navy stands,
To the same parts on earth. Dryden's Zen. b. vii.
TO HENCE. v. a. [from the adverb.] To send off; to dispatch to a distance. Obsolete.
Go, bawling cur! thy hungry maw go fill into a monarchy; for the materials thereof were extant before, namely, under the heptarchy. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

HER

The next returning planetary hour

Of Mars, who shar'd the heptarchy of pow'r,

His steps bold Arcite to the temple bent. Dryden.

HER, pron. [hepa, hep, in Saxon, stood for their, or of them, which at length became the female possessive.]

1. Belonging to a female; of a she; of a woman:

About his neck

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,

Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd

The opening of his mouth. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Still new favourites she chose,

'Till up in arms my passion rose,

And cast away her yoke. Cowley.

One month, three days, and half an hour,

Judith held the fov'reign pow'r;

Wond'rous beautiful her face;

But so weak and small her wit,

That she to govern were unfit,

And so Sufanna took her place. Cowley.

2. The oblique case of she.

England is so idly king'd,

Her sceptre so fantastically borne,

That fear attends her not. Shakspeare's Henry V.

She cannot seem deform'd to me,

And I would have her seem to others so. Cowley.

The moon arose clad o'er in light,

With thousand flares attending on her train;

With her they rise, with her they set again.

Should I be left, and thou be lost, the sea,

That bury'd her I lov'd, should bury me. Dryden.

HERS, pronoun. This is used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, such are her charms, such charms are hers.

This pride of hers,

Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her. Shakspeare.

Thine own unworthiness,

Will fill that thou art mine not hers confels. Cowley.

Some secret charm did all her acts attend,

And what his fortune wanted, hers could mend. Dryden.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,

Indeed to save a crown, not hers, but yours. Dryden.

HERALD, n. f. [herault, French; herald, German.]

1. An officer whose business it is to register genealogies, adjust engravings armorial, regulate funerals, and anciently to carry messages between princes, and proclaim war and peace.

May none, whose scatter'd names honour my book,

For first degrees of rank or title look;

'Tis 'gainst the manners of an epigram

And I a poet here, no herald am. Ben. Jonson's Epigrams.

When time shall serve, let but the herald cry,

And I'll appear again. Shakspeare, King Lear.

After my death I with no other herald,

No other speaker of my living actions,

But such an honest chronicler as Griffith. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Embassador of peace, if peace you chuse,

Or herald of a war, if you refuse. Dryden's Ind. Emperor.

Please thy pride, and search the herald's roll,

Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree. Dryden.

2. A precursor; a forerunner; a harbinger.

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,

When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send

Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. Shakspeare, Julius Caesar.

It was the lark, the herald of the morn. Shakspeare.

TO HERALD, v. a. [from the noun.] To introduce as an herald. A word not used.

We are sent

To give thee from our royal master thanks;

Only to herald thee into his fight, Shakspeare's Macbeth.

HERALD, n. f. [herauldrie, French, from herald.]

1. The art or office of a herald.

I am writing of heraldry. Peacham.

Grant her, besides, of noble blood that ran

In ancient veins, ere heraldry began. Dryden's Juvenal.

'Twas no false heraldry, when madnes drew

Her pedigree from those who too much knew. Denham.

2. Blazonry.

Metals may blazon common beauties; she Makes pearls and planets humble heraldry. Cleaveland.

HERB, n. f. [herbe, French; herba, Latin.]

Herbs are those plants whose stalks are soft, and have nothing woody in them; as grass and hemlock.

In such a night

Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs

That did renew old Aion. Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

With sweet-smelling herbs

Espos'd Eve deck'd her nuptial bed. Milton.

Unhappy, from whom still conceal'd does lie

Of herbs and roots the harmless luxury. Cowley.

If the leaves are of chief use to us, then we call them herbs; as sage and mint. Watts's Legick.

HER

Herb eating animals, which don't ruminates, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbutnot on Aliments.

HERB, Christoph. or Bane-herries. n. f. A plant.

The flower consists of five leaves, placed orbicularly in form of a rose: in its centre arises the ovary, which becomes a soft fruit or berry of an oval shape, and filled with seeds in a double row, which for the most part adhere together. Miller.

HERBACEOUS, adj. [from herba, Latin.]

1. Belonging to herbs.

Ginger is the root of neither tree nor trunk; but an herbaceous plant, resembling the water flower-de-luce. Brown.

2. Feeding on vegetables.

Their teeth are fitted to their food; the rapacious to catching, holding, and tearing their prey; the herbaceous to gathering and comminution of vegetables. Derham's Phys. Theology.

HERBAGE, n. f. [herbage, French.]

1. Herbs collectively; grass; pasture.

Rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow;

Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields. Dryden.
